CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—14. Farther threatenings for impiety.—This chapter begins with threatening an invasion from the Assyrians, who should pounce on Israel like an eagle; so did Shalmaneser, 2 Kings xvii. 3—6. And wherefore this?—For their hypocrisy, iniquity, and idolatry; particularly the worshipping the golden calves of Dan and Bethel. The folly and unprofitableness of pursuing evil courses is then set forth in brief, but very emphatic terms. The labour of the wicked is vain, like sowing of the wind; and the fruit of it destructive as the whirlwind; like corn blighted in the bud, their toil produces no increase, or if it should have a little, their enemies should devour it. Themselves also shall suffer the same fate; and be treated by the nations (Assyria and Egypt) as the vile shreds of a useless broken vessel. Nor have they the plea of ignorance—God had written to them the great things of his law, but they counted them strange. All their taste was for foreign gods and foreign altars; they shall go therefore where they shall see no others, and sigh in vain for those of Zion. (See 2 Kings xvi. 10.) The last words predict the burning of Jerusalem, after reproving the house of Judah for their confidence in their own strength.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—17. Israel's guilty conduct, and the miseries it produced.—"In this chapter, the captivity and dispersion of Israel is again threatened, the prospect of which fills CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. To thy mouth.—See margin. "Publish as by the sound of trumpet, that which God will bring upon apostate Israel. Awaken them by the alarm of war." Pool.——He shall come as an eagle—That is, the Assyrian shall come.

Ver. 4. I knew it not.—Boothroyd, "Of whom I approved not."

Ver. 5. Thy calf, O Samaria, &c.—Jeroboam first set up two calves at Dan and Bethel. It is probable they were afterwards set up in other places. By the calf there is meant the chief idol in Samaria. Newcome, "Remove far from thee (or cast off) thy calf, O Samaria!"——Ere they attain to innocency?—Newcome, "Will they not endure innocency?"

Ver. 7. It hath no stalk, &c.—Newcome, "The stalk hath no bud; it shall not yield flour," &c. So Horsley.

Ver. 9. Wild asses.—"Some refer this to the king of Assyria, who is fierce, swift, and haughty as the wild ass, and all for himself. Others refer it to Israel thus: Thou wilt be disappointed in thy expectation from Ashur, a wild ass who seeks himself only. Others again refer this direct to Israel, who, wild, untamed, and burning in lust, (as is reported of the wild ass,) rageth far and wide for lovers, seeks every where for aid and succours."——Alone.—"Solitary or in a wilderness, this will well suit them in their captivity. Or it may mean in a posture fit to become a prey to the lion of Assyria; so it is reported that the lions make a prey of the wild asses in the wilderness, so will Assyria make Israel a prey."—Pool. Wild asses generally go in herds, but sometimes one strays from the rest.—Pococke.

Ver. 11. Altars to sin.—Boothroyd, "For sin;" i. e. for idolatry.——Unto him for sin—That is, he shall be surfeited with the multitude of foreign altars.

Ver. 13. They sacrifice flesh.—Newcome, "They sacrifice gifts appointed unto me, and eat flesh;" i. e. we conceive, they take the prime of all the sacrifices for themselves.

Ver. 14. Buildeth temples—Namely, to idols.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 4. The bread of mourners.—Coarse and scanty; "the bread of affliction." Ps. lxxx. 5. All food became polluted in the house where death entered. Num. xix. 14.——The bread for their soul—That is, their meat-offering.

Ver. 6. The pleasant places for their silver.—See margin. Newcome, "(Purchased) with their silver."

Ver. 7. The prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad.—There being no verb in the original, Newcome and others render this verse, which doubtless refers to the false prophets, in the past tense, "Was foolish, was mad."—The great hatred which they had to the house of God, ver. 8.

Ver. 8. The watchman of Ephraim.—The true prophet, Eze. iii. 17.——The prophet—That is, the false prophet (as in ver. 7.) is a snare; a perpetual snare to the people.——And hatred in.—Newcome, &c. "Against." The false prophets preferred the idolatrous worship of the high places to the sacred altar at Jerusalem. This was evidently before the captivity. Townsend places it B. C. 725.

Ver. 10. As the first ripe.—See Jer. xxiv. 2.——Baal-peor.—See Num. xxv. 3, &c.

Ver. 11. From the birth.—Boothroyd, "There shall be no birth, no pregnancy, no conception;" i. e. there shall be no increase. To the same effect Newcome, Wheeler, &c.

Ver. 12. Though—Boothroyd, &c. "Yea, though."

13 Ephraim, as I saw [r] Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer.

14 Give them, O LORD: what wilt thou give? give them a [s] miscarrying womb and dry breasts.

15 All their wickedness is in [t] Gilgal: for there I hated them: for the wickedness of their doings I will drive them out of my [u] house, I will love them no more: all their princes are revolters.

16 Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit: yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even the [v] beloved fruit of their womb.

17 My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers [w] among the nations.

CHAPTER X.

Israel is reproved and threatened for their impiety and idolatry.

ISRAEL is [a] an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself: according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased [b] the altars; according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly [c] images.

2 [d] Their heart is divided; now shall they be found faulty: he shall [e] break down their altars, he shall spoil their images.

3 For now they shall say, We [f] have no king, because we feared not the LORD; what then should a king do to us?

4 They have spoken words, swearing falsely in making a covenant: thus judgment springeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field.

5 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and [g] the priests thereof that rejoiced on it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it.

6 It shall be also carried unto Assyria for a present to king Jareb: Ephraim shall receive shame, and Israel shall be ashamed of his own [h] counsel.

8 The high places also of Aven, [j] the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; and [k] they shall say to the mountains Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us.

9 O Israel, thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah: there they stood: the battle in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them.

10 It is in my desire that I should chastise them; and the people shall be gathered against them, when [l] they shall bind themselves in their two furrows

11 And Ephraim is as a heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn; but I passed over upon [m] her fair neck: I will make Ephraim to ride; Judah shall plough, and Jacob shall break his clods.

13 Ye have ploughed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity; ye have eaten the fruit of lies: because thou didst trust in thy way, in the multitude of thy mighty men.

14 Therefore shall a tumult arise among thy people, and all thy fortresses shall be spoiled, as Shalman spoiled Beth-arbel in the day of battle: the mother was dashed in pieces upon her children.

15 So shall Beth-el do unto you because of [n] your great wickedness: in a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.

CHAPTER XI.

1 The ingratitude of Israel unto God for his benefits. 5 His judgment. 8 God's mercy toward them.

2 As they called them, so they went from them: they sacrificed unto Baalim, and burned incense to graven images.

Ver. 4. Thus judgment—That is, God's punishments of their iniquities spring up rapidly on every side.

Ver. 5. The calves.—Newcome, &c. "Calf," on the authority of the ancient versions; possibly the form was duplex, but the following sentence confirms the versions.——Mourn over it (or him.)—For Beth-aven, formerly Beth-el, "the house of God," chap. xii. 4. was now Beth-aven, "the house of sin," because of its idolatries.——The priests.—Heb. the Prophet with such terror, as to make him wish their women should be barren, rather than bring forth children to slavery or slaughter.

"He begins with reproving them for their sacrifices and rejoicings on their corn-floors, by which they ascribed to idols, as the heathen did, the praise of all their plenty; for which reason, they are threatened with famine, and devoted to exile in a land where they should be polluted, and want means of worshipping the God of their fathers, or observing the solemnities of his appointment. Nay, more, they shall fall before the destroyer, (some of them) be buried in Egypt, and leave their own pleasant places desolate. The time, too, is declared to be at hand, according to God's revelation by the 'watchman,' (or true Prophet,) whatever might be alleged by false prophets, who pretended to have the Spirit, but who in fact ensnared the souls of others, and like the men of Gibeah, drew deep guilt on themselves. In the succeeding verses, God is introduced declaring his early favor for his people, and the delight he took in their obedience; but now they had so deeply revolted, all their glory will take wing, God will forsake them, and their offspring be devoted to destruction; to destruction twice repeated, to intimate its being both sure and terrible."—Dr. J. Smith.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—15. Israel compared to an exhausted and ruined vine.—In this chapter the subject is pursued allegorically. Israel is compared to a vine which had been flourishing and fruitful, but was now weakened and corrupted by prosperity, luxury, and idolatry: so that though its branches were still widely extended, and its leaves luxuriant, yet, alas! it cast its fruit, and produced no wine to "cheer the heart of God." (Judg. ix. 13.) Their hearts became divided between the true God and idols, and it was soon apparent from the multitude of their altars, to which they were most inclined. Their idolatry is then enlarged on, and its fatal consequences declared in very feeling terms. God is now introduced complaining of their extreme guilt, and threatening them with captivity in terms that bear a manifest allusion to their favourite idolatry, the worshipping of the golden calf, or heifer. Upon which the Prophet, in a beautiful allegory, suggested by the preceding metaphors, exhorts them to repentance, and warns them of the dreadful consequences of persevering in their past course.

Deut. xxv. 4. Secker.——I passed over her fair neck.—Newcome, Boothroyd, &c. supply the word "yoke;" "I passed the yoke over," &c.——I will make Ephraim to ride.—Might we not, without violence, read, "I will ride (or cause to be ridden) Ephraim?" The place is very difficult; but the sense appears to us to be, that all should be subjected to severe labour, like cattle brought under the yoke: some should be used for riding, (for horned cattle are rode in the East,) and others for ploughing.

Ver. 14. As Shalman—That is, Shalmanezer. See 2 Kings xviii. 33, &c. ——Beth-arbel.—[Some think this to be Arbela, a city of Assyria, near the Lycus, which Shalmaneser, here called Shalman, is supposed to have destroyed. Others suppose it to be Arbela, a town of Galilee, not far from Sipporis, (Josephus, Ant.) and perhaps the same which Eusebius places in the great plain 9 miles (perhaps east) from Legio.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. So shall Beth-el do, &c.—That is, as the idolatry of other nations brought on them destruction, so shall the idolatry of Beth-el be your ruin.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. And called my son out of Egypt.—These words certainly refer, in the first instance, to Israel, but admit of an easy accommodation to Christ himself, Matt. ii. 15.

Ver. 2. As they called, &c.—The LXX. and other versions read, "When I called then they departed from me;" and this, as it gives a good sense, is

3 I [l] taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms; but they knew not that I healed them.
4 I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love: and I was to them as they that [c] take off the yoke on their jaws, and I laid meat unto them.
5 ¶ He shall not return into the land of Egypt, [d] but the Assyrian shall be his king, because they refused to return.
6 And the sword shall abide on his cities, and shall consume his branches, and devour them, because of their own counsels.
7 And my people are bent to backsliding from me: though they called them to the Most High, [e] none at all would exalt him.
8 ¶ How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? my heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together.
9 I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for [f] I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city.
10 They shall walk after the LORD: he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west.
11 They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the LORD.
12 ¶ Ephraim compasseth me about with [g] lies, and the house of Israel with deceit: but Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the [h] saints.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Ephraim's glory, by reason of idolatry, vanisheth. 5 God's anger for their unkindness. 9 A promise of God's mercy. 15 A judgment for rebellion.

WHEN Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel; but when he offended in Baal, he died.
2 And now they [a] sin more [b] and more, and standing their ingratitude.—"This chapter gives a very pathetic representation of God's tender and affectionate regard for Israel, by metaphors chiefly borrowed from the conduct of mothers towards their tender offspring. From this, occasion is taken to reflect on their ungrateful returns to the Divine goodness, and to threaten them with deserved punishment. But suddenly and unexpectedly the prospect changes. Beams of mercy break from the clouds just now fraught with vengeance. God, to speak in the language of men, feels the relentings of a tender parent,—his bowels yearn,—his mercy triumphs,—his rebellious child shall yet be pardoned. As the lion of the tribe of Judah, he will exert his power to save his people. He will call his children from the land of their captivity and dispersion, and with the swiftness of doves they will fly to him, a faithful and a holy people.—This prophecy was partly fulfilled in consequence of Cyrus's decree, but in its fullest extent remains to be accomplished in the future restoration of the Jews to their own land."—Dr. J. Smith.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—14. Israel and Judah reproved, and exhorted to repentance, by a recollection of God's special mercies.—God compares the dangerous and unprofitable pursuits of Ephraim to his feeding upon the wind—the pestilential east wind.

Addressing Jacob, the Lord adverts to his natural cunning in supplanting Esau; and contrasts with this his subsequent piety, when "as a prince" he had power over the angel of the covenant at Peniel. This, says Bishop Horsley, is "no other than he whom the patriarch found at Bethel, who there spake with the Israelites in the loins of their progenitor. He, whom the Patriarch found at Bethel, ... was, by the tenor of the context, the antagonist with whom he was matched at Peniel; . . . . and who wrestled with the patriarch in the human form. The conflict was no sooner ended, than the patriarch acknowledged his antagonist as God. . . . And to make the assertion of this person's Godhead, if possible, still more unequivocal, he adds, that to him belonged, as his appropriate memorial, that name which is declarative of the very essence of the Godhead—JEHOVAH is his Memorial." (See Gen. xxxii. 24—30.)

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—16. Threatenings and promises addressed to Israel under the name Ephraim.—This chapter adopted by Newcome, Boothroyd, and others. Perhaps the true sense is, the more they were called to, the farther they went astray. Compare ch. xiii. 2.

Ver. 4 That take off (or lift up) the yoke (that is) upon their jaws.—"It is very probable that these words refer to the custom of (occasionally) raising the yoke forward, to cool the neck of the labouring beast." See Lowth in Isa. i. 3.

Ver. 5. He shall not return, &c.—Dr. Forsayeth, "Shall he not return?" In other parts of this book, returning to Egypt is threatened as a punishment. See chap. vii. 16; viii. 13; ix. 3, 6, &c.——Because they refused to return—Namely, to the Lord.

Ver. 6. The sword shall abide.—Horsley, "Shall weary itself in his cities, and consume his diviners, and devour, because," &c.

Ver. 7. Though they called—i. e. "Though they (i. e. Israel) were called to return to the Most High, none of them would unite to exalt (him;") or, as Bishop Horsley, "All of one mind, they would not be exalted."

Ver. 9. I will not enter into the city.—Bishop Lowth, "Though I inhabit not thy cities." Lect. xix.

Ver. 10. He shall roar.—The style is here very abrupt; Newcome supplies, "(When) he shall roar, then shall their sons hasten (not tremble) from the west."

Ver. 11. They shall tremble.—Newcome, "hasten:" Horsley, "hurry" from the west.

Ver. 12. But Judah yet ruleth—That is, says Boothroyd, "Maintained the law of God, and adhered to his worship professedly; and were, in comparison of Israel, a faithful people:"—"the people of the Most Holy One are faithful."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. Ephraim feedeth on . . . . the east wind.—To feed on the wind, is to feed on that which is unsubstantial; to feed on the east wind, is to feed on what is noxious and dangerous; see note on Job xv. 2.——Oil is carried into Egypt.—To assist in the idolatrous illuminations of the Nile.—Harmer.

Ver. 3. He had power with God.—See note on Gen. xxxii. 28.

Ver. 5. The Lord is his memorial.—Exod. iii. 15; i. e. "God's memorial; his appropriate, perpetual, incommunicable name, expressing his essence." Bishop Horsley. Compare exposition and note, Gen. xxxii.

Ver. 7. He is a merchant—Or Canaanite, or trafficker.——The balances.—Compare ver. 3.

Ver. 10. And used similitudes.—By the ministry ("hand") of the prophets. "In other words, I have employed types, or parables, to convey, in a sensible manner to their thoughts, my purposes toward them." Bishop Chandler, who quotes the Rabbins Jarchi and Kimchi, to the same effect.

Ver. 11. As heaps in the furrows—That is, so numerous.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 2. They sin more and more—i. e. increase in idolatries.——Kiss the calves.—This was part of their idolatrous service as we see in have made them molten images of their silver, and idols according to their own understanding, all of it the work of the craftsmen: they say of them, Let the [c] men that sacrifice kiss [d] the calves.

2 Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff [e] that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.

4 ¶ Yet I am the LORD thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt know no god but me: for there is no saviour beside me.

5 I did know thee in the wilderness, in the land of great [f] [g] drought.

6 According to their pasture, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me.

7 Therefore I will be unto them as a lion: as a leopard by the way will I observe them:

8 I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion: the [h] wild beast shall tear them.

9 ¶ O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me [i] is thy help.

10 [j] I will be thy king: where is any other that may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges of whom thou saidst, Give me a king and princes?

11 I gave [k] thee a king in mine anger, and took him away [l] in my wrath.

12 The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up; his sin is hid.

13 The sorrows of a travailing woman shall come upon him: he is an unwise son; for he should not stay [m] long in the place of the breaking forth of children.

14 I [n] will ransom them from the [o] power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be [p] thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.

15 ¶ Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind shall come, the wind of the LORD shall come up from the wilderness, and his spring shall become dry, and his fountain shall be dried up: he shall spoil the treasure of all [p] pleasant vessels.

16 Samaria [q] shall become desolate; for she hath rebelled against her God: they shall fall by the sword: their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 A promise of God's blessing.

O ISRAEL, return unto the LORD thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.

2 Take with you words, and turn to the LORD: say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and [a] receive us graciously: so will we render the [b] calves of our lips.

3 Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses: neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.

4 ¶ I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him.

5 I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall [c] grow as the lily, and [d] cast forth his roots as Lebanon.

6 His branches shall [e] spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon.

7 They that dwell under his [f] shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and [g] grow as the vine: the [h] scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.

8 Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him, and observed him: I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found.

9 Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the LORD are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.

opens with a truth often asserted and exemplified in the Scriptures, "Before honour is humility, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Thus when Ephraim spake with modesty, diffidence, and trembling, then "he exalted himself in Israel;" but when he assumed the high and independent airs of a worshipper of Baal, then he offended God, and fell under his indignation. When he boasted, "I am become rich, and have found me out substance," then he was found poor, and wretched, and guilty, and is threatened with the just reward of his demerits. God tempers, however, these awful threatenings with gracious intimations of mercy on their repentance. But, alas! instead of repenting, Ephraim is filling up the measure of his iniquity, and foolishly protracting the season of deliverance, by making no struggle to attain to it. Notwithstanding this, God promises at length to exert his almighty power in their favour; and, as it were, to raise them from the dead; although, in the mean time, they must be visited with national calamities, compared to the noxious and parching east wind, and described immediately after in literal terms—they shall fall by the sword of the enemy.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—9. Exhortations to repentance, and promises of mercy.—"By the terrible denunciation of vengeance which concludes the preceding chapter, the Prophet is led to exhort this people to repentance, furnishing them with a beautiful form of prayer, very suitable to the occasion. Upon this, God, ever ready to pardon the penitent, is introduced, making large promises of blessings, in allusion to those copious dews which refresh the green herbs, and which frequently denote, not only temporal salvation, but also the rich and refreshing comforts of the gospel. Their reformation from idolatry is foretold, and their consequent prosperity, under the emblem of a green flourishing fir tree; but then these promises are confined to the godly, and the wicked declared to have no share in them; as might well be expected under the administration of the righteous Governor of the universe."—Dr. J. Smith.

1 Kings xix. 18; and Cicero informs us this rite was common among the heathen. See Newcome.——For the men that sacrifice.—Secker, Horsley, and others, read with our margin, "The sacrificers of men;" but query?

Ver. 3. As early dew.—[To punish these abominable idolatries, the prosperity and tribe of Ephraim should be, like his goodness, "as the morning cloud, the early dew, the chaff before the whirlwind, and the smoke out of the chimney," driven about, dissipated, and speedily vanishing away.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Thou shalt know.—Newcome, Boothroyd, &c. render it in the past tense, "Thou hast known." We should rather render it in the imperfect, "Thou didst know;" namely, at that time. See Deut. xxxii. 12.

Ver. 11. I gave thee a king—Namely, Saul. 1 Sam. viii. 5, 19, &c.; xv. 23.

Ver. 13. Stay long.—"Any time;" i. e. loiter and hesitate in his decision. 1 Kings xviii. 21.

Ver. 14. I will be thy plagues.—Literally, "Thy sentence." The plague was understood to come immediately from God. St. Paul refers to this passage, 1 Cor. xv. 55.——Repentance shall be hid—That is, I will not repent of this decree.

Ver. 15. An east wind.—The east wind was blighting and drying. See Ezek. xix. 12.——The wind of the Lord—That is, a wind specially sent by him. See Ps. lxviii. 33.

Ver. 16. They shall fall by the sword.—Compare 2 Chron. xxv. 13.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 2. Calves of our lips.—The critics remark that this passage, as it now stands in Hebrew, is not grammatical; that omitting one letter, (mem,) would make it correct, and at the same time agree with the LXX. Arabic, and the Apostolic quotation, Heb. xiii. 15, "the fruit of our lips." So Newcome and Boothroyd.

Ver. 5. As the dew—That is, refresh and water, that they may grow, comfort, and make fruitful all who return to him.

Ver. 7. The scent—Or, fragrance. See margin.

Ver. 8. With idols.—Not the whole body of Ephraim, but converted Ephraim, Those who in verses 1 and 2 were sensible of, and confessed sin, and begged for pardon.——I am like.—Boothroyd, "I will make him like." So Newcome and Horsley.

Ver. 9. Who is wise? &c.—These words are the prophet's own conclusion.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF HOSEA.

[THE prophecies of Hosea which were soon fulfilled are very numerous: but those relating to the state of Israel and Judah for many ages, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the future restoration of Israel, are peculiarly distinct and striking: they coincide with those of the other prophets; and the extraordinary fulfilment of several of them, in past and present times, both proves the Divine inspiration of the writer, and gives assurance that the rest will in due time be accomplished. His principal subject, as Bishop Horsley observes, is that which forms the principal subject of all the prophets—"the guilt of the Jewish nation in general, their disobedient refractory spirit, the heavy judgments that awaited them, their final conversion to God, and to a condition of the greatest national prosperity, and of high pre-eminence among the nations of the earth, under the immediate protection of the Messiah, in the latter ages of the world. He confines himself more closely to this single subject than any other prophet. He seems, indeed, of all the prophets, if I may so express my conception of his peculiar character, to have been the most of a Jew. Comparatively, he seems to care little about other people. He wanders not, like Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, into the collateral history of the surrounding heathen nations. He meddles not, like Daniel, with the revolutions of the great empires of the world. His own country seems to engross his whole attention; her privileges, her crimes, her punishment, her pardon. He predicts, indeed, in the strongest and clearest terms, the ingrafting of the Gentiles into the church of God. But he mentions it only generally; he enters not, like Isaiah, into a minute detail of the progress of the business. Nor does he describe, in any detail, the previous contest with the apostate faction in the latter ages. He makes no explicit mention of the share which the converted Gentiles are to have in the re-establishment of the natural Israel in their ancient seats; subjects which make so striking a part of the prophecies of Isaiah, Daniel, Zechariah, Haggai, and occasionally of the other prophets. He alludes to the calling of our Lord from Egypt, to the resurrection on the third day; he touches, but only in general terms, upon the final overthrow of the Antichristian army in Palestine, by the immediate interposition of Jehovah; and he celebrates, in the loftiest strains of triumph and exaltation, the Saviour's final victory over death and hell. But yet, of all the prophets, he certainly enters the least into the detail of the mysteries of redemption. We have nothing in him descriptive of the events between the two advents of our Lord. Nothing diffuse and circumstantial upon the great and interesting mysteries of the incarnation and the atonement. His country, and his kindred, is the subject next his heart. Their crimes excite his indignation; their sufferings interest his pity; their future exaltation is the object on which his imagination fixes with delight.]—Bagster.

THE BOOK OF JOEL.

[JOEL the prophet, according to the Pseudo-Epiphanius, was of the tribe of Reuben, and a native of Bethoron, or rather Bethharan, in that tribe; but nothing certain is known respecting him, except that he was the son of Pethuel, as he informs us in the title of his predictions. It is even very uncertain during what period he prophesied; though it is evident he exercised the prophetic office in the kingdom of Judah. Jerome, Vitringa, Rosenmuller, Horne, and others, think that he lived in the reign of Uzziah, and consequently was contemporary with Hosea and Amos: Calmet, Eckermann, and others, place him in the reign of Josiah; Kimchi and others refer him to the reign of Joram; while the Jewish Chronicles called Sedar Olam, Jarchi, and several Jewish writers, followed by Drusius, Archbishop Newcome, Dr. A. Clarke, and others, maintain that he prophesied under Manasseh; and, as collateral circumstances seem to preponderate in favour of this hypothesis, we have accordingly adopted it. The book of Joel consists of three chapters; in which the prophet, in consequence of a dreadful famine caused by locusts and other noxious insects, calls upon both priests and people to repent with prayer and fasting, cries unto God for them, and represents the very beasts as joining in his supplications. he predicts still greater judgments by an army of locusts, earnestly exhorts them to public fasting, prayer, and repentance, promises the removal of these calamities on their repentance, with various other blessings, makes an elegant transition to the effusion of the Holy Spirit under the Gospel, and foretels the consequent destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation, interspersed with promises of safety to the faithful and penitent; he then predicts the divine judgments to be executed on the enemies of God's people, and the subsequent peace, prosperity, and purity of Israel.]—B.

His style is highly poetical. Bishop Lowth says, "he is elegant, perspicuous, copious, and fluent; sublime, animated, and energetic."

Besides Abp. Newcome, who is our guide through all the minor Prophets, or this prophecy we are particularly indebted to "A paraphrase and Critical Notes' on it, by Dr. S. Chandler, a learned Dissenting Minister of the last century.

CHAPTER I.

1 Joel, declaring sundry judgments of God, exhorteth to observe them, 8 and to mourn. 14 He prescribeth a fast for complaint.

A. M. cir. 3314.
B. C. cir. 690.

THE word of the LORD that came to Joel the son of Pethuel.

2 Hear this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?

3 Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation.

4 [a] That which [b] the palmer-worm hath left hath the locust [c] eaten; and that which the locust hath left hath the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten.

5 Awake, ye drunkards, and weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for [d] it is cut off from your mouth.

6 For [e] a nation is come up upon my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth [f] are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek teeth of a great lion.

7 He hath laid [g] my vine waste, and [h] barked my fig tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

8 ¶ Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth.

9 The meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the LORD; the priests, the LORD's ministers, mourn.

10 The field is wasted, the land mourneth, for the corn is wasted: the new wine is [i] dried up, the oil languisheth.

11 Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vine-dressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished.

12 The vine is dried up, and the fig tree [j] languisheth; the pomegranate tree, the palm tree also, and the apple tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered: because [k] joy is withered away from the sons of men.

13 Gird [l] yourselves, and lament, ye priests: howl, ye ministers of the altar: come, lie all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for the meat-offering and the drink-offering is withholden from the house of your God.

14 ¶ Sanctify ye a [m] fast, call a [n] solemn assembly, gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the LORD your God, and cry unto the LORD, 15 Alas [o] for the day! for [p] the day of the LORD is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

16 Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, [q] joy and gladness from the house of our God?

17 The [r] seed is rotten under their clods, the garners are laid desolate, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered.

18 How do the beasts [s] groan! the herds of CHAP. I. Ver. 1—20. Israel invaded by a nation of locusts.—"This prophecy begins with threatening the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the land of Judah, with such a desolation of their country by swarms of locusts as had never happened to them before, and as should occasion the utmost distress to all sorts of persons amongst them." The havoc that should be made by these creatures, is described in the highest style of poetry. The vegetation of every species should be devoured, and produce such a scarcity of provisions in the land, as not to leave enough to supply the offerings for God's altar. At the same time the heat should be so great, as to occasion the destruction of many of the flocks and herds, partly through drought, and partly through the irritation of these noxious insects.

CHAP. I. Ver. 4. That which, &c.—See margin. Four species of locust are supposed to be here mentioned: 1. The palmer-worm. (Heb. Gezam.) This, Bochart says, is a locust, which, furnished with very sharp teeth, bites off not only grass and grains, and the leaves of trees, but even their bark, and more tender branches. Newcome renders it, "Grasshopper;" but Michaelis, following the LXX. and Vulgate, thinks it means a species of caterpillar, whose mouth is furnished with a kind of sickle, which cuts the leaves of plants to pieces; and which begins its ravages before the locust. 2. The locust, (Arbeh.) whose name is supposed to be derived from its prodigious numbers. 3. The canker-worm (Ialek) is either another species of locust, called by Newcome "the devouring locust," though others think it a species of beetle, or hedge-chafer, devouring even the roots of trees. Orient. Lit. No. 1064. Jer. li. 27, it is rendered the rough caterpillar; but there appears to be a species of locusts, whose heads are covered with hair. Rev. ix. 8. 4. The caterpiller, (Chasil.) rendered by Newcome "the consuming locust." There are ten different species of locust (as is supposed) mentioned in Scripture; and if these are not locusts, it is certain they were most voracious and destructive insects. See Harris's Natural History of the Bible, in Locust; also note on Exod. x. 4.

Ver. 6. A nation—That is, of these voracious insects. Compare Prov. xxx. 25, 26.—Cheek teeth.—Newcome, "Jaw teeth of a lion." Pliny says, their teeth are so sharp and strong, that they bite through even the doors of houses.

Ver. 7. Barked my fig tree—That is, eaten off the bark: but Newcome reads, "Made my fig tree a broken branch," like several of the ancient versions. Dr. Forsayeth, "My fig tree a foam and swelling," being covered with the foam of caterpillars, and the leaves curled up, to enclose their eggs. —The branches are made white—That is, stripped of all their bark, as in the preceding clause; Heb. "Stripping they have stripped it."

Ver. 8. Like a virgin . . . . for the husband of her youth—That is, a betrothed virgin, whose marriage was not consummated.

Ver. 10. Is dried up—Or withered, as ver. 12; Heb. "Blusheth."

Ver. 12. The vine, &c.—[Dr. Shaw observes, that in Barbary, in the month of June, the locusts are no sooner hatched, than they collect themselves into compact bodies, each a "furlong or more square; and marching directly afterwards, forwards directly towards the sea, they let nothing escape them, eating up every thing that is green or juicy, not only the lesser vegetables, but the vine likewise, the fig tree, the pomegranate, the palm, and the apple tree, even all the trees of the field."]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. A solemn assembly.—Newcome, "A solemn day," or day of restraint; i. e. from work, or pleasure.

Ver. 17 The seed is rotten.—Newcome, "The seeds have perished under."

cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate.

19 O LORD, to thee will I [t] cry: for the fire [u] hath devoured the [v] pastures of the wilderness, and the flame hath burned all the trees of the field.

20 The beasts of the field cry also [w] unto thee: for [x] the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

CHAPTER II.

1 He showeth unto Zion the terribleness of God's judgment. 12 He exhorteth to repentance, 15 prescribeth a fast, 18 promiseth a blessing thereon. 21 He comforteth Zion with present 28 and future blessings.

BLOW ye the [a] trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm [b] in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for [c] the day of the LORD cometh, for it is nigh at hand;

2 A day of [d] darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a [e] strong; there hath not been ever the [f] like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of [g] many generations.

3 A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden [h] before them, and behind [i] them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

6 Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather [j] [k] blackness.

7 They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:

8 Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the [l] sword, they shall not be wounded.

9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows [m] like a [n] thief.

10 The earth [o] shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the [p] sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:

11 And the LORD shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the LORD is great and very terrible; and who [q] can abide it?

12 ¶ Therefore also now, saith the LORD, turn [r] ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning:

13 And rend [s] your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God: for he [t] is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil.

14 Who [u] knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a [v] meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the LORD your God?

15 ¶ Blow [w] the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly:

16 Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, [x] gather the children, and those that suck the breasts: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet.

17 Let the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare [y] thy people, O LORD, and give not thy heritage to reproach, that the heathen should [z] rule over them: wherefore [a] should they say among the people, Where is their God?

18 ¶ Then will the LORD be jealous [b] for his land, and pity [c] his people.

19 Yea, the LORD will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:

Some have thought that these predictions may have a farther reference to the army of the Assyrians: but for this we find no sufficient ground. No body of armed men (not even that of Xerxes) was ever half so numerous, half so tormenting or destructive, as an army of these noxious insects, who, while they lived, were a plague, and created a pestilence when they died.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—32. An alarm sounded through the country.—The priests are ordered to sound their trumpets on the approach of this aerial army. The locusts are described—They are compared to cavalry; and the noise and din of their approach to the rattling of war-chariots and the crackling of burning stubble. The regularity and rapidity of their march is then stated; and their invincibility, as it respects human weapons. The heavens are clothed in blackness, and the voice of God announces their approach as his army.

Ver. 19. The pastures of the wilderness—Or desert; and burnt up, &c. See chap. ii. 3. Fires were often made, (though in vain,) to stop the ravages of these insects, by which (fires) the trees and underwood were much injured.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Blow ye the trumpet, &c.—The same alarm is given as if they had been invaded by the most powerful enemies. A Jewish writer, mentioning a swarm of locusts which once appeared in Saxony, says, so terrified are the Jews on such occasions, that they immediately sound a trumpet, and proclaim a fast.

Ver. 2. A day of darkness and of gloominess.—Dr. Chandler quotes, from a German Chronicle of the ninth century, that "so great a multitude of locusts" passed over that country from the east, that during two months, "they oftentimes obscured the rays of the sun for the space of a whole mile; and when they alighted, in one hour consumed every thing that was green upon 100 acres, or more; and being afterwards driven into the sea by the wind, and thrown back by the waves, they corrupted the air by their stench, and produced no small pestilence."—("The quantity of these insects," says Volney, "is incredible to all who have not themselves witnessed their astonishing numbers; the whole earth is covered with them for the space of several leagues. The noise they make in browsing on the trees and herbage, may be heard at a great distance, and resembles that of an army in secret. The Tartars themselves are a less destructive enemy than these little animals. One would imagine that fire had followed their progress. Wherever their myriads spread, the verdure of the country disappears; trees and plants stripped of their leaves and reduced to their naked boughs and stems, cause the dreary image of winter to succeed in an instant to the rich scenery of spring. When these clouds of locusts take their flight, to surmount any obstacles, or to traverse more rapidly a desert soil, the heavens may literally be said to be obscured by them.")—Bagster. Many similar accounts may be found in modern writers, the most authentic. The following is one of the most recent and extraordinary. The narrator being (as we understand it) in the neighbourhood of Gibraltar, saw a dense cloud slowly advancing to the Spanish shore, and darkening the sun as it passed, when, suddenly it burst, and "there fell (says he) such a vast multitude of locusts as exceeded the thickest storm of hail or snow that I ever saw. All around me was immediately covered with these crawling creatures, and yet they continued to fall so thick, that with the swing of my cane, I knocked down thousands. . . . . There was not, in a day or two, the least leaf to be seen on a tree, nor any green thing in a garden." The close of this account illustrates what is said in ver. 20 of the defeat and destruction of this great northern army. "When, glutton-like, they had devoured every thing around them, they took to ponds, brooks, and pools," probably from excessive thirst, and drowned themselves; and lay drowned in heaps, like little hills, with a stench so noisome that it gave reason to fear pestilence. See Asiat. Journ. Aug. 1825.

Ver. 3. A fire devoureth before them.—"They consume like a general conflagration." Ludolf says, "Wherever they fed, their leavings seem, as it were, parched with fire." Newcome. See note on ver. 2.

Ver. 4. Like horses, &c.—An Arab, describing them, compared the heads of the locust to those of horses, their breast to that of a lion, their feet to those of a camel, their belly to that of a serpent, their tail to that of a scorpion, and their feelers to female hair. (Compare Rev. ix. 7.) Niebuhr's Arabia.

Ver. 5 Like the noise of chariots See Rev. ix. 9. Volney compares the noise they make in browsing to that of an army in secret, marching without music. See note on ver. 2 ——Of a flame—Cyril compares the noise of their teeth to a crackling flame.——In battle array—Heb. "Arrayed for war." "Many writers mention the order of locusts in their flight and march; and their manner of proceeding directly forward, whatever obstacles were interposed." Newcome.

Ver. 6. All faces shall gather blackness.—See margin. Tavernier (and other travellers) affirm that, by way of mourning, the Orientals sometimes daub their faces with the black of a kettle. Orient. Lit. No. 1068.

Ver. 7. They shall run, &c.—[In their progress, says Dr. Shaw, "they kept their ranks like men of war; climbing over every tree or wall that was in their way. Nay, they entered into our very houses and bed chambers, like so many thieves. Every effort of the inhabitants to stop them was unavailing; the trenches they had dug were quickly filled up, and the fires they had kindled extinguished by infinite swarms succeeding each other."]—Bagster. Compare verses 2, 4, 5, &c.

Ver. 10. The earth shall quake.—This may be taken figuratively, for the great alarm which they shall create; but literally, the heavens are darkened by their flight. See on ver. 2.

Ver. 11. The Lord shall utter his voice—That is, it is by his command that they advance or retire.

20 But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his [h] hinder part toward the utmost sea, and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath [i] done great things.

21 ¶ Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the LORD [k] will do great things.

22 Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig tree and the vine do yield their strength.

23 Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice [l] in the LORD your God: for he hath given you [m] the former rain [n] moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.

24 And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil.

25 And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army [o] which I sent among you.

26 And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the LORD your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and [p] my people shall never be ashamed.

27 And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the LORD your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed.

28 ¶ And [q] it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit [r] upon all flesh; and your sons and your [s] daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions:

29 And also upon the [t] servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit.

30 And I will show [u] wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke.

31 The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the LORD come.

CHAPTER III.

1 God's judgments against the enemies of his people. 9 God will be known in his judgment. 18 His blessing upon the church.

FOR, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,

2 I [a] will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead [b] with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land.

3 And they have cast lots [c] for my people; and have given a boy for a harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.

4 Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompense? and if ye recompense me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompense upon your own head;

5 Because ye have taken [d] my silver and my gold, and have carried into your temples my goodly [e] pleasant things:

6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the [f] Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border.

7 Behold, I [g] will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompense upon your own head:

8 And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; [h] Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up:

10 Beat your ploughshares into swords, and your [i] pruning-hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong.

11 Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither [j] cause thy mighty [k] ones to come down, O LORD.

12 Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley [l] of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge [m] all the heathen round about.

13 Put [n] ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; for the press is

The nation is then pathetically exhorted to deep and humble repentance; to rend, not their garments only, but their hearts also: as the only means to avert national judgments. In the conclusion, as is common with many of the prophets, the days of the Messiah and the gospel dispensation are adverted to, especially the miraculous effusion of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, and the awful indications of divine judgment preceding the destruction of Jerusalem, and the consequent dispersion of the Jews.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—21.—As the latter part of the preceding chapter referred to gospel times, and the blessings to accompany the dispensation of Messiah, so this appears to refer to a still more distant period, when the Jews shall be released from all their captivities, delivered from all their enemies, and finally restored to their own land; after which there seems an allusion to the same distant and mysterious events, that we have seen mentioned in the latter chapters of Ezekiel, and shall have farther occasion to notice in the close of the New Testament.

The judgment of the valley of Jehoshaphat, must not be confounded with the final judgment of the world. It relates evidently to the punishment of certain heathen nations—perhaps the Gog and Magog referred to by Ezekiel and St. John. (See Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix. Rev. xx. xxi.)

It is an encouraging circumstance to the church, that the denunciations of God's judgments generally end with promises of mercy to his people. When God shall have cleared the earth of crime, his people shall reign with him in everlasting peace and happiness. (See Rev. xxi.)

Ver. 20. The northern army.—These locusts probably came from Circassia, or Mingrelia, to the north of Judea. Some were to be driven into the desert; some into the Eastern or Dead sea, and some into the utmost, or Mediterranean sea.——His stink, &c.—See what is quoted from Dr. Chandler and the Asiatic Journal on ver. 2.——Because he hath done great things.—See marg. &c. It is difficult to apply this to an army of locusts. They had executed the divine command, and their being ended with their commission. Dr. Chandler therefore applies the words to Jehovah, as in the verse following, "He (the LORD) will do (or hath done) greatly, or great things, to advance his own glory." See a like repetition, ver. 26, 27.

Ver 23. He hath given.—Newcome, "He giveth you—he causeth to come down," &c.

Ver. 28. And it shall come, &c.—[Kimchi says, that achari chen, "after thus," is the same as beacharith hyyamim, "in the latter days," which always relates to the days of the Messiah; and accordingly this prophecy refers, as St. Peter applies it, (Acts ii. 17.) to the effusion of the Holy Spirit at the feast of Pentecost, to the subsequent destruction of Jerusalem, attended with the most awful portents, and to the dispersion of the unbelieving Jews.]—B.

Ver. 30, 31. Blood and fire, &c.—This is generally supposed to refer to the prodigies mentioned by our Lord, Mat. xxiv. 29. which see CHAP. III. Ver. 1. In those days.—[According to the preceding prophecy this must refer to the times of the Gospel, and the final restoration of the Jews.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. The valley of Jehoshaphat.—Is literally "the valley of God's judgment," and ought not, perhaps, to be confined to any one spot; though there is probably an allusion to the victory of Jehoshaphat. Newcome. 2 Chron. xxii. 8.

Ver. 3. They have cast lots.—A spirit of gambling seems to have prevailed very early in the world, and there is no doubt but human life has often been the subject of such speculations, in the case of slaves. Sir John Chardin says, "In Mingrelia, they often sell children for provisions and for wine." Harmer.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF JOEL.

[THE style of Joel is allowed by the most competent judges to be inimitably beautiful; containing such an assemblage of elegance, pathos, and sublimity, as can be found in few remains of ancient poetry. "The style of Joel," says Bishop Lowth, "differs much from that of Hosea; but, though of a different kind, is equally poetical. It is elegant, perspicuous, clear, diffusive, and flowing; and, at the same time, very sublime, nervous, and animated. He displays the whole power of poetic description in the first and second chapters; and at the same time his fondness for metaphors, comparisons, and allegories; nor is the connexion of his subjects less remarkable than the graces of his diction. It is not to be denied that in some places he is very obscure; which every attentive reader will perceive, especially in the end of his prophecy." This obscurity, however, does not proceed from the language, which is uncommonly perspicuous, but wholly from the nature of the subjects; the beauties of his expression being somewhat shaded by allusions to circumstances yet unfulfilled. His descriptions are highly animated; and his language, in force, and often in sound, well adapted to his subject. The contexture of the prophecy in the first and second chapters is extremely curious, and wrought up with admirable force and beauty; in which by an animated representation he anticipates the scenes of misery which lowered over Judea. It is generally supposed, that the prophet blends two subjects of affliction in one general consideration, or beautiful allegory; and that, under the devastation to be produced by locusts in the vegetable world, he portrays the more distant calamities to be inflicted by the armies of the Chaldeans in their invasion of Judea. Hence, probably, the studied ambiguity of some of the expressions; while the double destruction to be effected by these fearful insects, and those enemies of which they were the harbingers, is painted with the most expressive force, in terms reciprocally metaphorical, and admirably adapted to the twofold character of the descriptions. These predictions are followed by a more general denunciation of God's vengeance, delivered with such force and aggravation of circumstances, as to be in some measure descriptive of that final judgment, which some temporal dispensations of Providence may be said to prefigure. These several declarations are intermingled with earnest exhortations to solemn fasting, repentance, and prayer, and with promises of deliverance and returning prosperity productive of Gospel blessings; in treating of which, he foretels, in the clearest terms, the general effusion of the Holy Spirit, which was to characterize the Gospel dispensation, predicting, in the fullest and plainest manner, the awful consequences of obstinately rejecting the sacred influence, especially to the Jews, the event of which, to this day, fully attests his Divine inspiration. In conclusion, he foretels the righteous judgments of God in the final excision of his enemies, and the glorious state of prosperity to be yet enjoyed by the church; representing its perfections and blessings under the poetic emblems of a golden age.]—B.

THE BOOK OF AMOS.

AMOS was contemporary with Hosea, though he did not, probably, live so long. He was not educated in the Schools of the Prophets, founded by Samuel; but was called to the prophetic office from being a shepherd and herdsman in Tekoa, in the territory of Judah, and sent to exhort the people of Israel to repentance.—[He began to prophesy two years before the earthquake which happened in the reign of Uzziah king of Judah; which Josephus, (Ant. l. ix. chap. 9.) with most ancient and modern commentators, refers to that prince's invasion of the priest's office, when he attempted to offer incense to the Lord. The book of Amos consists of nine chapters, of which Carmel and others think that the seventh is the first in order of time; in which the prophet denounces the judgments of God on Syria, Philistia, Tyre, Edom, and Ammon, for their cruelty and oppression of Israel; upon Moab, for his impotent revenge on the dead body of the king of Edom; on Judah, for his contempt of God's law; and on Israel, for idolatry, iniquity, and ingratitude; he then expostulates with Israel and Judah, warning them of approaching judgments; calls the Philistines and Egyptians to behold the punishment of Samaria and the ten tribes for their sins; reproves the Israelites for luxury and oppression, warning them to prepare to meet God, who is about to execute vengeance upon them; laments over the destruction of Israel, exhorting them to renounce their idols and to seek the Lord; declares the judgments of God on the scornful, presumptuous, and hypocritical Israelites, whom God sentences to captivity; denounces the most terrible calamities on the self-indulgent and self-confident Jews and Israelites; averts by prayer the judgments of the grasshoppers and fire, and shows, by a wall and plumb-line, the strict justice of God in Israel's punishment. Being accused to Jeroboam by Amaziah the priest, and forbidden to prophesy in Bethel, he shows how God called him to prophesy, and predicts the ruin of Amaziah and his family; under a vision of a basket of summer-fruit, he shows the speedy ruin of Israel; reproves their oppression and injustice; shows the complete ruin of Israel, and threatens a famine of the word of God; he then declares the certainty of the judgments to be inflicted on Israel, though a remnant shall be preserved, and predicts the blessings of Messiah's kingdom, and the conversion and restoration of Israel.]—Bagster. Several of this Prophet's images are borrowed from those rural objects with which he was familiar. His sentiments are frequently lofty, and his style beautiful, as well as plain. "The same celestial Spirit, (says Bishop Lowth,) actuated Isaiah and Daniel in the court, and Amos in the sheep-fold; . . . . occasionally employing the natural eloquence of some, and occasionally making others eloquent."

2 And he said, The LORD will [e] roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—15. God's judgments against several heathen nations.—This chapter denounces judgments against several nations bordering on Palestine, inimical to the Jews. The same judgments were predicted by other prophets, and had their accomplishment by degrees, at different periods, and by different instruments. The prophecy against the Syrians, whose capital was Damascus, was fulfilled by the king of Assyria. (2 Kings xvi. 9.) Those against the Philistines by Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 8; and by Uzziah, 2 Chr. xxvi. 6.—All Syria was also subdued by Pharaoh-Necho, and again by Nebuchadnezzar, who took Tyre, as did afterwards Alexander. Nebuchadnezzar also subdued the Edomites, Jer. xxv. 9, 21. and xxvii. 3, 6. Judas Maccabeus gained fresh victories over them, 1 Mac. v. 3.; and Hyrcanus brought them under entire subjection. The Ammonites were likewise conquered by Nebuchadnezzar. (Jer. xxvii. 3—6.)

5 I will break [j] also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from [k] the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from [l] the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go [m] into captivity unto Kir, saith the LORD.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of [n] Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they [o] carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

8 And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon, and I will turn my hand against Ekron: and the remnant of the Philistines [q] shall perish, saith the Lord GOD.

12 But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.

13 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of the children of [w] Ammon, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have [x] ripped up [y] the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border:

14 But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:

15 And their king shall go into captivity, he and his princes together, saith the LORD.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—16. God's judgments against Moab, Judah, and Israel.—It is observable, that though sin is not screened in any nation or individual, it is never so severely censured as when found among the professors of true religion. The knowledge of God, and the blessings he bestows on those who know him, are great aggravations of their guilt; but we have here some circumstances peculiarly aggravating. The wicked Jews, after taking pledges from their brethren of the garments or coverlets in which they slept, instead of returning them at night, as they ought to have done, (Exod. xxii. 26, 27.) took them with them to their idol temples to lounge or sleep on, where they ought never to have entered. The tempting their Nazarites with wine, which they knew to be forbidden, is a circumstance to which Henry compares the conduct of those who attempt to draw young professors into parties of mirth and pleasure. "Multitudes of young men (says he) that

CHAPTER III.

1 The necessity of God's judgment against Israel. 9 The publication of it, with the causes thereof.

HEAR this word that the LORD hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You [a] only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will [b] punish you for all your iniquities.

3 Can two walk together, except they be [c] agreed?

4 Will a lion roar [d] in the forest, when he hath no prey? will a young lion [e] cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing?

5 Can a bird fall in a snare [f] upon the earth, where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all?

6 Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not [g] be afraid? [h] shall there be evil in a city, [i] and the LORD hath not done it?

7 Surely the Lord GOD will do nothing, but he revealeth [j] his secret unto his servants the prophets.

8 The lion [k] hath roared, who will not fear? the Lord GOD hath spoken, [l] who can but prophesy?

9 ¶ Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, and say, Assemble yourselves upon the mountains of Samaria, and behold the great tumults in the midst thereof, and the [m] oppressed in the midst thereof.

10 For they know not [n] to do right, saith the LORD, who store up violence and [o] robbery in their palaces.

11 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; An adversary [p] there shall be even round about the land; and he shall bring down thy strength from thee, and thy palaces shall be spoiled.

12 Thus saith the LORD; As the shepherd [q] taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear; so [r] shall the children of Israel be taken out that dwell in Samaria in the corner of a bed, and [s] in Damascus in a couch.

13 Hear ye, and testify in the house of Jacob, saith the Lord GOD, the God of hosts, 14 That in the day that I shall [t] visit the transgressions of Israel upon him I will also visit the altars of [u] Beth-el: and the horns of the altar shall be cut off, and fall to the ground.

15 And I will smite the [v] winter-house with the [w] summer-house; [x] and the houses of ivory shall perish, and the great houses shall have an end, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He reproveth Israel for oppression, 4 for idolatry, 6 and for their incorrigibleness.

HEAR this word, ye kine [n] of Bashan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which say to their masters, Bring, and let us drink.

2 The Lord GOD hath sworn by his [b] holiness, that, lo, the days shall come upon you, that he will take you away with [c] hooks, and your posterity with fish-hooks.

3 And ye shall go out at the [d] breaches, every cow at that which is before her; and ye shall [e] cast them into the palace, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Come to [f] Beth-el, and transgress; at Gilgal [g] multiply transgressions; and bring your sacrifices [h] every morning, and your tithes [i] after [j] three years:

5 And offer [k] a sacrifice of thanksgiving [l] with leaven, and proclaim and publish the [m] free-offerings: for [n] this liketh [o] you, O ye children of Israel, saith the Lord GOD.

6 ¶ And I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want [p] of bread in all your places: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

7 And also I have withholden the rain from

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—15. God's judgments denounced more especially against Israel.—This chapter begins with reproving the twelve tribes in general, and then particularly the kingdom of Israel, whose capital was Samaria. He tells them, that while they were at variance with God, they had no right to expect favour from him; but ought rather to tremble at his threatenings, as men do at the roaring of a lion. Nor should they flatter themselves with exemption from punishment on account of privileges which they had abused. We must never infer, from former deliverances, that we may therefore go on to sin with impunity. On the contrary, to Israel God says, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth;" that is, you only have I distinguished by peculiar favours, and, "you, therefore, will I punish for all your iniquities." Other neighbouring nations are then called upon to observe, and take warning from these awful judgments, from which only a small remnant should escape, like the remains of a lamb from the mouth of a lion. The close of the chapter shows, that the Israelites at this time had indulged in every Asiatic luxury; town and country houses, embellished with ivory, with divans and Damascenes of the most costly elegance.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—13.—We are not aware that there is any thing more abhorrent to the God of Israel than "crushing the needy, or oppressing the poor," and that to the end that their masters may indulge in luxury and drunkenness. Let those rich manufacturers consider this, who enjoy the luxuries mentioned in the last chapter; who have elegant houses, richly furnished, while the poor, from whose labours all their

Ver. 3. Every cow.—Boothroyd, "Every fish;" Newcome, "Every one at that which is before it." Perhaps these ladies, before called cows, (as their husbands are elsewhere called "bulls of Bashan," Ps. xxii. 12.) may here be compared to fishes, caught in the net of the harem; but who, on the city being taken, should make their escape severally, as they could, like fishes through a broken net; but the greater part should be carried captive, perhaps into Armenia.——Ye shall cast them into the palace.—See margin. Newcome reads, "I will cast it forth and utterly destroy it." What? Gesenius, who follows Kimchi, thinks the Hebrew word means a seraglio, (or harem,) which is the female department of the palace; but Boothroyd and others take it for a proper name, "Armenia;" the sense is very doubtful, and we must so leave it.

you, when there were yet three months to the harvest: and I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered.

8 So two or three cities wandered unto one city, to drink water; but they were not satisfied: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

9 I have smitten you with [q] blasting and mildew: [r] when your gardens and your vineyards and your fig trees and your olive trees increased, the palmer-worm devoured them: yet [s] have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

10 I have sent among you the pestilence [t] after [u] the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword, [v] and have taken away your horses; and I have made the stink of your camps to come up unto your nostrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

11 I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew [w] Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand [x] plucked out of the burning: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

12 Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare [y] to meet thy God, O Israel.

13 For, lo, he that formeth the mountains, and createth the [z] wind, and declareth unto man what is his [a] thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, The LORD, The God of hosts, is his name.

CHAPTER V.

1 A lamentation for Israel. 4 An exhortation to repentance. 21 God rejecteth their hypocritical service.

HEAR ye this word which I take up against you, even a lamentation, O house of Israel.

2 The [a] virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: she is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord GOD; The city that went out by a thousand shall leave a hundred, and that which went forth by a hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ For thus saith the LORD unto the house of Israel, Seek [b] ye me, and ye shall live:

5 But seek not [c] Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought.

6 Seek the LORD, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el.

7 Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth,

8 Seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night: that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The LORD is his name:

9 That strengtheneth the [d] spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress.

10 They hate [e] him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly.

11 Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted [f] pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them.

12 For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: they afflict the [g] just, they take a [h] [i] bribe, and they turn aside [j] the poor in the gate from their right.

13 Therefore the prudent shall keep silence [k] in that time; for it is an evil time.

14 Seek [l] good, and not evil, that ye may live: and so the LORD, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken.

15 Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate: it [m] may be that the LORD God of hosts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph.

16 Therefore the LORD, the God of hosts, the Lord, saith thus; Wailing shall be in all streets; and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such [n] as are skilful of lamentation to wailing.

17 And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the LORD.

18 Wo unto you that desire the day of the LORD! to what end is it for you? the [o] day of the LORD is darkness, and not light.

19 As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him.

20 Shall not the day of the LORD be darkness, wealth has been derived, are pining in their garrets, surrounded with needy families. "Shall not I visit for these things? saith the Lord." Yes; the fat "kine of Bashan," the ladies of their seraglios, (as Le Bruyn explains it,) shall be dragged, as with fish-hooks, from their palaces, and shall be visited with famine and pestilence, with the sword and with the tempest. (See notes.)

This chapter traces a close connexion between luxurious indulgence in the rich, and criminal oppression of the poor; between luxury also and idolatry. When Jeshurun waxed fat, he kicked against the divine ordinances, and spurned against restraint, even from the Almighty. But it is hard for us to kick against the pricks. As idleness, and luxury, and vice, brought down the fiery tempest that destroyed Sodom; so will the same crimes (sooner or later) insure the ruin of any nation or individual: very solemn, therefore, is the warning here given, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel."

CHAP. V. Ver. 1–27. The Prophet laments over Israel, and exhorts them to repentance.—This chapter opens with a lamentation over the sins and miseries of the house of Israel; in which the prophet complains bitterly of their idolatry, and of their cruel oppression of the poor. He then exhorts them to repentance and reform; and to excite them thereto, the Lord himself is introduced as expressing, in very strong terms, his abhorrence of their gross hypocrisy, in offering sacrifices with sweet incense and melodious music, while, at the same time, their hearts were attached to their idols. In the latter verses of the chapter occurs a passage which has been very differently interpreted. It seems to us a fact incontrovertible, that the Jews were tinctured with idolatry, even from their coming up out of Egypt, and to which probably they were often excited by the mixed multitude which came up from Egypt with them. (Exod. xii. 38.) The first open indication of this appears in the fact of the golden calf; (Exod. xxxii.) and though doubtless Moses was careful to repress every appearance of idolatry, it is very evident that they had their secret idols, (conceal-

21 ¶ I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell [p] in your solemn assemblies.

22 Though ye offer me burnt-offerings and your meat-offerings, I [q] will not accept them: neither will I regard the [r] peace-offerings of your fat beasts.

23 Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols.

24 But [s] let judgment [t] run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.

25 Have ye offered unto me [u] sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?

26 But ye have borne [v] the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves.

27 Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond [w] Damascus, saith the LORD, whose name is The God of hosts.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The wantonness of Israel, 7 shall be plagued with desolation, 12 and their incorrigibleness.

WO to them that [a] are at ease [b] in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, which are named [c] chief [d] of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came!

2 Pass ye unto [e] Calneh, and see; and from thence go ye to Hamath the great: then go down to Gath of the Philistines: be they better than these kingdoms? or their border greater than your border?

3 Ye that put far away [f] the evil day, and cause the [g] seat of violence to come near;

4 That lie upon beds of ivory, and [h] stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall;

5 That [i] chant to the sound of the [j] viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like [k] David;

6 That drink [l] wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the [m] affliction of [n] Joseph.

7 ¶ Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed.

8 The Lord GOD hath sworn by [o] himself, saith the LORD the God of hosts, I abhor [p] the excellency [q] of Jacob, and hate his palaces: therefore will I deliver up the city with all [r] that is therein.

9 And it shall come to pass, if there remain ten men in one house, that they shall die.

10 And a man's uncle shall take him up, and he that burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the house, and shall say unto him that is by the sides of the house, Is there yet any with thee? and he shall say, No. Then shall he say, Hold [s] thy tongue: for [t] we may not make mention of the name of the LORD.

11 For, behold, the LORD commandeth, and he will smite the great house with [u] breaches, and the little house with clefts.

12 ¶ Shall horses run upon the rock? will one plough there with oxen? for ye have turned judgment [v] into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into [w] hemlock:

13 Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought, which say, Have we not taken to us horns by our own strength?

14 But, behold, I will [x] raise up against you a nation, O house of Israel, saith the LORD the God of hosts; and they shall afflict you from the entering in of Hamath unto [y] the [z] river of the wilderness.

CHAPTER VII.

THUS hath the Lord GOD showed unto me; and, behold, he formed [a] grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and, lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowings.

ed probably as artfully as Rachel's;) so that it was not to the Lord alone, as Dr. Doddridge judiciously expresses it, that they offered sacrifice; but they mixed the worship of Moloch, or Baal, or Remphan, with the worship of Jehovah; and this was their prevailing sin even from the Exodus to the captivity in Babylon. Nor can this appear incredible to those who know the human heart; since we find that, even in the present day, of those who call themselves Christians, a great majority are no less prone to unite the service of God and Mammon. (Matt. vi. 24.)

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—14. The luxury, gayety, vice, and incorrigibleness of the people of Israel.—The Jews were undoubtedly a musical people, and mingled their favourite art equally with their devotions and their amusements. Instead of seeking their pleasure in what pleased God, they seem to have supposed that God must needs be pleased with what pleased them—their noisy choruses of praise, and the melody of their viols, (or stringed instruments,) which probably performed the interludes between them.

But music formed also a principal part of their amusements. Like too many Christians, they praised with equal ardour "Jehovah, Jove, or Lord." The gods of beauty, wine, and mirth, have always been the favourite idols of men, who, while they indulge themselves in all the luxuries and gayeties of this life, "are not grieved for the afflictions of Joseph." Those, however, who are thus equally insensible to their duty to God and their fellow-creatures, are announced to be among the first that shall be carried away into captivity in a foreign land.

The latter part of the chapter, ver. 10, &c., is supposed to "describe the effects of famine and pestilence during the siege of Samaria;" when, contrary to the general custom of the Jews, the dead bodies were taken away to be burnt, to prevent the spreading of infection, and that without any funeral rites, or the usual lamentations. All was death and silence. (Chap. viii. 3.) See Abp. Newcome; but, perhaps, the best comment on this melancholy scene may be found in the history of the plague in London, A. D. 1665. (See an interesting and instructive account of this plague, written by De Foe, edited by Rev. H. Stebbins.)

Ver. 2. Calneh—A city in Babylonia.——Hamath—A Syrian city on the Orontes.——Gath—A city of the Philistines. These cities were probably famous for idolatry; but what were they the better for that?

Ver. 3. The seat of violence.—The seat of perverted judgment, is the seat of violence.

Ver 4. Beds of ivory.—[Either sofas to recline on at table, or beds to sleep on; which, among the ancients, were ornamented with ivory inlaid, called lectos eburatos by Plautus, and lectos eburnos, by Horace.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Invent to themselves instruments of music, like David.—What instruments David invented is not known, nor does the expression appear to us intended as a censure on the royal prophet; it might, however, be very culpable in these Jewish rulers to emulate his magnificence, in these times of danger and adversity: besides, David dedicated all his instruments to the service of God; (1 Chron. xviii.) these men, to their convivial pleasures.

Ver. 6. Wine in bowls.—[This probably refers to the costliness and magnificence of the drinking vessels, as well as to the quantity drank.]—Bagster.——With the chief ointments—Or rather, "with the choicest perfumes." See note on Eccles. vii. 1. Sol. Song, i. 3.

Ver. 10. A man's uncle.—Newcome, "Relation."——By the sides.—Booth royd, "In a side room," &c.——Hold thy tongue.—Gesenius, "Hush!"—[Archbishop Newcome says, that this obscure verse seems to describe the effects of the famine and pestilence during the siege of Samaria.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Shall horses run upon the rocks, &c.—This seems to have been impracticable before the invention of shoes for horses. See Lowth in Isa. ver. 28

Ver. 13. In a thing of nought.—Their idols. See 1 Cor. viii. 4.——Horns—That is, power, of which horns were the established emblem.

Ver. 14. A nation—That is, the Assyrians. Hamath was on the north, and the river of the desert, or of Egypt, on the south of Judea.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. He formed grasshoppers.—See margin. (Heb. Gobai) generally considered to be a species of locusts, as Parkhurst thinks, in their caterpillar state, wherein they do the greatest mischiefs.—[This is supposed to have been an emblem of the first invasion of the Assyrians.]—Bagster. See Harris's Nat. Hist. of the Bible in Locust; also, Harmer's Obs.——Mowings—[Or rather, feedings or grazings, as the people of the East make no hay. This was probably in the month of March, which is the only time of the year that the Arabs to this day feed their horses with grass.]—Bagster.

2 And it came to pass, that when they had made an end of eating the grass of the land, then I said, O Lord GOD, forgive, I beseech [b] thee: [c] by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is [d] small.

3 The LORD repented [e] for this: It shall not be, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Thus hath the Lord GOD showed unto me: and, behold, the Lord GOD called to contend by [f] fire, and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part.

5 Then said I, O Lord GOD, cease, I beseech thee: by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.

6 The LORD repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord GOD.

7 ¶ Thus he showed me: and, behold, the LORD stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand.

8 And the LORD said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumb-line. Then said the LORD, Behold, I will set a plumb-line [g] in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by [h] them any more:

9 And the high places [i] of Isaac shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the [j] sword.

10 ¶ Then Amaziah the priest [k] of Beth-el sent to Jeroboam [l] king of Israel, saying, Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel: the land is not able to bear all his words.

11 For thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there:

13 But prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: for [m] it is the king's [n] chapel, and it is the [o] king's court.

14 ¶ Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I [p] was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was a [q] herdman, and a gatherer of [r] sycamore fruit:

15 And the LORD took me [s] as I followed the flock, and the LORD said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.

16 ¶ Now therefore hear thou the word of the LORD: Thou sayest, Prophesy [t] not against Israel, and drop [u] not thy word against the house of Isaac.

17 Therefore [v] thus saith the LORD; thy wife shall be a harlot [w] in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land: and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 By a basket of summer fruit is showed the propinquity of Israel's end. 4 Oppression is reproved. 11 A famine of the word threatened.

THUS hath the Lord GOD showed unto me: and behold a basket of summer fruit.

2 And he said, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A basket of summer fruit. Then said the LORD unto me, The end [a] is come upon my people of Israel; I [b] will not again pass by them any more.

3 And the songs [c] of the temple [d] shall be howlings in that day, saith the Lord GOD: there [e] shall be many dead bodies in every place; they shall cast them forth [f] with silence.

4 ¶ Hear this, O ye that swallow [g] up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail,

5 Saying, When [h] will the [i] new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the [j] sabbath, that we may [k] set forth wheat, making the ephah [l] small, and the shekel great, and [m] falsifying the balances [n] by deceit?

6 That we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?

7 The LORD hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely, I will [o] never forget any of their works.

8 Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn [p] that dwelleth therein? and it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord GOD, that I will cause the sun to go down at [q] noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day:

10 And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentations; and I will bring up [r] sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the [s] mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

about to bring on Israel; but most of which were averted or mitigated by the intercession of the Prophet. The first is a plague of locusts, threatening to cut off the hopes of the harvest, by attacking it in the time of the second growth; the first luxuriances of the crop being probably mowed (or cut off) for the king's horses. The second vision threatens a destructive judgment by fire, which would consume a great part of the nation; and the third judgment, which is declared irreversible, a total overthrow of Israel, levelling the people, as it were, by a measuring line. The rest of the chapter is a denunciation of heavy judgments against Amaziah, priest of Bethel, who had brought an accusation to the king against this Prophet. This Amaziah was one of the courtly priests of Jeroboam's calves, and felt quite indignant that the rural Prophet should presume to interfere in his department: "It is the king's chapel," and in "the king's court." But the herdsman of Tekoah puts to shame the priest of Bethel.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—14. A fourth vision representing the near approach of Israel's ruin.—A basket of ripe "summer fruits," here represents, in one view, Israel's ripeness for ruin, and the near approach of God's vindictive judgments. The Prophet then proceeds to reprove them for their oppression and injustice, which appears to have been their ruling sin, and to have eaten up the vitals of their religion; so that, even while they were engaged in public worship, they were anxious for it to be over; and were ready to take every advantage of the poor to enrich and aggrandize themselves. The Prophet then foretels, that in the time of one of their solemn festivals, the sky should be darkened by a solar eclipse, (in those days thought ominous,) which should turn their joy into mourning,

Ver. 3. The Lord repented.—See exposition of Gen. vi. 1—7.

Ver. 4. Contend by fire.—[This is supposed to denote the invasion of Tiglath-pileser, which threatened entire destruction.]—Bagster.——It devoured the great deep.—This seems to have been a subterraneous fire, which raised up a part of the bottom of the sea.

Ver. 8. Behold, I will set a plumb-line, &c.—That is, according to Newcome, "I will destroy and level, as it were, by a line.' See 2 Sam. xviii. 2. 2 Kings xxi. 13. [This was an emblem of strict justice; and intimated that God would now visit them according to their iniquities.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Amos hath conspired.—[This was truly a lying prophet: there was not one word of truth in his message to Jeroboam.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Prophesy not any more.—Heb. "Add not to prophecy"——For it is the king's chapel.—See margin.——Beth-el—Signifies "the house of God."

This fruit grows from the tree, without leaves, and requires skill in dressing it, to make it good. [Rather, as bolais is rendered by the LXX. and Vulgate, "a scraping," or a scraper of sycamores; for the fruit does not ripen till it is rubbed with iron combs. CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. A basket of summer fruit.—Newcome, "Of late summer fruits;" by which we understand, such as had remained to nearly the end of the season, and were full ripe, and fast approaching to decay; an apt representation of Israel at this period.

Ver. 2. End is come.—[There is here not only an allusion to the nature of the summer fruit, which must be eaten as soon as gathered, but also a paronomasia upon the words kayitz, "summer fruit," and ketz, "an end."]—B.

Ver. 3. There shall be many dead, &c.—We should rather read, (" So) many dead bodies . . . . (that) they shall be cast forth with silence." Compare chap. vi. 10.

Ver. 6. The poor for silver.—See chap. ii. 6.

Ver. 8. Land tremble.—[It is supposed that an earthquake is here intended; the rising and falling of the ground with a wave-like motion, and its leaving its proper place and bounds, in consequence of an earthquake, being justly and beautifully compared to the swelling, overflowing, and subsiding of the Nile.]——Rise up as a flood—That is, like the inundation of the Nile.——Be cast down and drowned.—Newcome, "Sink down as the river of Egypt."

God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but [t] of hearing the words of the Lord:

12 And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it.

13 In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for [u] thirst.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The certainty of the desolation. 11 The restoring of the tabernacle of David.

I SAW the Lord standing upon the altar: and he said, Smite the [a] lintel of the door, that the posts may shake: and [b] cut them in the [c] head, all of them; and I will slay the last of them with the sword: he that fleeth of them shall not flee away, and he that escapeth of them shall not be delivered.

2 Though [d] they dig into hell, thence shall my hand take them; though they climb up to [e] heaven, thence will I bring them down:

3 And though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel, I will search and take them out thence; and though they be hid from my sight in the bottom of the sea, thence will I command the serpent, and he shall bite them:

4 And though they go into captivity before their enemies, thence [f] will I command the sword, and it shall slay them: and I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good.

5 And the Lord God of hosts is he that toucheth the land, and it shall [g] melt, and all that dwell therein shall mourn: and it shall rise up wholly like a flood; and shall be drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

6 It is he that buildeth his [h] stories in the heaven, and hath founded his [i] troop in the earth; he that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name.

7 Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord. Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt? and the Philistines [k] from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir?

8 Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not [l] utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord.

9 For, lo, I will command, and I will [l] sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least [m] grain fall upon the earth.

10 All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword, which say, The evil shall not overtake nor prevent us.

11 ¶ In [n] that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and [o] close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old:

12 That they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, [p] which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this.

13 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that [q] the ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that [r] soweth seed; and [s] the mountains shall drop [t] sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt.

14 And [u] I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

15 And I will [v] plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.

and be a sign of the calamities here predicted. He concludes with threatening a famine of the word of God, which they now made so light of, as to persecute the Prophet by whom it was delivered. Abp. Usher states that there was, about eleven years after Amos prophesied, a great eclipse of the sun, at the feast of tabernacles, which may be here alluded to; but the passage appears to us chiefly to refer to Israel's political decline as a nation, while Judah still subsisted for full 150 years longer, and a great part of that time with much glory, particularly during the reigns of Hezekiah and Josiah.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—15. Israel's captivity certain; but its restoration under Messiah no less sure.—God is here represented as standing upon his own altar, and solemnly denouncing his judgments against Israel, in the general dispersion of the people, without showing them any more respect than to heathen nations to whom his providence also extended. The latter part of the chapter concludes the prophecy as usual with large and comfortable promises of restoration and prosperity under the kingdom of Messiah. Three things here merit our particular notice: 1. That God reckons his own people not according to the flesh, but according to the faith of their father Abraham, (Rom. ix. 8.) 2. That when the true Israelites return, it shall be in harmony and union with converted Gentiles. So (ver. 12) "the heathen called by my name" are Christians. 3. That when the Jews shall be brought back to God, together with converted Gentiles, they shall enjoy in common, as well the blessings of peace and temporal prosperity as those of grace and pardon. "Godliness hath as well the promises of this life," as of "that which is to come." (1 Tim. iv. 8.)

eclipse; and Archbishop Usher has shown that about eleven years after Amos prophesied, there were two great eclipses of the sun, one at the feast of tabernacles, and the other some time before the passover.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Famine not of bread, &c.—A spiritual famine. Either the written word or the word of prophecy. Though now they despise it, they shall yet hunt for prophets to tell them when their troubles shall end. How truly desolate and wretched is any nation where the means of moral and religious instruction are inadequate for the population; as the soul is more precious than the body, as eternity is of greater consequence than time, how to be dreaded is a spiritual famine.

Ver. 14. The manner of Beer-sheba.—Heb. "Way;" i. e. of worship. Compare Acts xxiv. 14.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. Upon the altar.—What altar? Dr. Boothroyd thinks that at Beth-el; but the scene is the temple at Jerusalem, as appears by the next clause.—Smite the lintel of the door.—See margin. So Gesenius, "The knop, or capital of a pillar, perhaps in the form of a pomegranate, or its flower." See Zeph. ii. 14.—I will slay the last—That is, the whole of them.

Ver. 2. Into hell.—Newcome, "The grave;" Boothroyd, "Hades." Compare Ps. cxxxix. 8.—[All these energetic expressions were intended to show the utter impossibility of escape.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Carmel.—A mountain of considerable extent, and said to contain great cavities. See 1 Kings chap. xviii.—The serpent—That is, doubtless, the great sea serpent. See exposition, Isa. xxvii. 1. and note.

Ver. 5. It shall rise up.—Compare chap. viii. 8.

Ver. 6. His stories in the heaven.—[Or, spheres. Heb. ascensions. Maaloth, "upper chambers," which in eastern houses are the principal apartments.—Perhaps there is a reference here to the various systems which God has created in illimitable space, transcending each other as the planets do in our system.]—Bagster. Compare Ps. civ. 3.—Troop.—[Aguddah, probably is the same as the Arabic ijad, "an arch, vault," and may here denote the vault of heaven, or atmosphere, which God "hath founded, or established, upon, or over, al, the earth," and into which "he calleth the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth."]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Children of the Ethiopians.—Heb. "Cushites." The Arabian Cushites, who, according to Bochart, were a powerful, though despised people. They were freebooters and idolaters.—The Philistines from Caphtor.—See note on Jer. xlvii. 4. The sense of the verse is, that "God had raised up and transplanted other nations, as well as the Israelites," they must not, therefore, infer from their being brought up from Egypt, that they should never be rejected. See Boothroyd.

Ver. 9. Yet shall not the least grain—That is, no true Israelite, no child of Abraham by faith.

Ver. 12. That they may possess the remnant of Edom.—For Edom, the LXX. Arabic, and some Syriac MSS. read Adam, or "men," and so St. James quotes the passage, Acts xv. 17. See note there.

Ver. 13. The ploughman shall overtake the reaper—That is, instead of the greater part of the year being spent in military campaigns, the whole shall be spent in cultivating and gathering in the fruits of the earth. Comp. Isa. ii. 4.

Ver. 15. No more pulled up.—[As the Jews, after their return from Babylon, were driven from their land by the Romans, this can only refer to their future conversion and restoration; and to the security and peace of the church.]—Bagster.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF AMOS.

AMOS was by profession a herdman and a dresser of the sycamore fruit; and hence, as Archbishop Newcome observes, he "borrows many images from the scenes in which he was engaged; but he introduces them with skill, and gives them tone and dignity by the eloquence and grandeur of his manner. We shall find in him many affecting and pathetic, many elegant and sublime passages. No prophet has more magnificently described the Deity; or more gravely rebuked the luxurious, or reproved injustice and oppression with greater warmth, and a more generous indignation." Jerome is of opinion, that there is nothing great or sublime in the style of Amos; and calls him "rude in speech, but not in knowledge," applying to him what St. Paul modestly professes of himself. (2 Cor. xi. 6.) Calmet and many others have followed the authority of Jerome, in speaking of this prophet, as if he were indeed quite rude, void of eloquence, and destitute of all the embellishments of composition. The matter, however, as Bishop Lowth has remarked, is quite otherwise. "Let any person, who has candour and perspicacity enough to judge, not from the man, but from his writings, open the volume of his predictions, and he will, I think, agree that our shepherd 'is not a whit behind the very chief of the prophets.' (2 Cor. xi. 5.) He will agree, that, as in sublimity and magnificence he is almost equal to the greatest, so in splendour of diction, and elegance of expression, he is scarcely inferior to any." It should, however, be observed, that rustic employments were very general and honourable among the Hebrews; and that comparisons drawn from rural scenes, and the pastoral life, are by no means peculiar to Amos; the principal images, and those of the greatest beauty and elegance, both in the poetical and prophetical parts of Scripture, being derived from the same natural objects.}—Bagster. "But many of these images must falsely appear mean and obscure to us, who differ so materially from the Hebrews in our manners and customs; but in such cases it is our duty neither too rashly to blame, nor too suddenly to despair. The mind should rather exert itself to discover, if possible, the connexion between the literal and figurative meanings, which, in abstruse subjects, frequently depending upon some delicate and nice relation, eludes our penetration. An obsolete custom, for instance, or some forgotten circumstance, opportunely adverted to, will sometimes restore its true perspicuity and credit to a very intricate passage."—Lowth.

THE BOOK OF OBADIAH.

OF the prophet OBADIAH nothing certain is known; but it is highly probable, as Abp. Newcome and others suppose, that he flourished between the taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 588, and the destruction of Idumea by the same monarch, which took place a few years afterwards. Consequently he was contemporary with Jeremiah, one of whose prophecies, respecting the destruction of Edom, bears a striking similarity to that of Obadiah. Is this book he foretels the subjugation and ruin of the Idumeans by the Chaldeans, and finally by the Jews, whom they had used most cruelly, when brought low by other enemies; and he concludes, as almost all the other prophets do, with consolatory promises of restoration and prosperity to the Jews. The prophecy, according to Usher, began to be fulfilled about five years after the destruction of Jerusalem; that is, about 582 years before Christ. Townsend, however, places the prophecy much earlier, viz. B. C. 740. See 2 Chron. xxviii. 17.

THE vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the Lord GOD concerning [a] Edom; We have heard a rumour from the LORD, and an ambassador is sent among the heathen, Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle.

2 Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen: thou art greatly despised.

3 ¶ The pride of thy heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, whose habitation is high; that saith [b] in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground?

4 Though [c] thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the LORD.

5 If thieves came to thee, if robbers by night, (how art thou cut off!) would they not have stolen till they had enough? if the grape-gatherers came to thee, would they not leave [d] some grapes?

6 How are the things of Esau searched out! [e] how are his hidden [f] things sought up!

7 All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border: the men [g] that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; [h] they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee: there [i] is none understanding [j] in him.

8 Shall I not in that day, saith the LORD, even destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau?

9 And thy mighty [k] men, O Teman, shall be dismayed, to the end that every one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter.

10 ¶ For thy violence [l] against thy brother Jacob shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever.

11 In the day that thou stoodest on the other side, in the day that the strangers carried away captive [m] his forces, and foreigners entered into his gates, and cast lots [n] upon Jerusalem, even thou wast as one of them.

12 But [o] thou shouldest not have looked [p] on the day of thy brother in the day that he became a stranger; neither shouldest thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; neither shouldest thou have [q] spoken proudly in the day of distress.

13 Thou shouldest not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity; yea, thou shouldest not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity, nor have laid hands on their [r] substance in the day of their calamity;

14 Neither shouldest thou have stood in the crossway, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldest thou have [s] delivered up those of his that did remain in the day of distress.

15 For [t] the day of the LORD is near upon all the heathen: as [u] thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head.

16 For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually, yea, they shall drink, and they shall [v] swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

17 ¶ But [w] upon mount Zion shall be [x] deliverance, and [y] there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions.

18 And the house of Jacob shall be a [z] fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in

Ver. 1—21. This book contains but one chapter, which begins with representing God as calling the nations against Edom, denouncing his utter destruction, and declaring that all his strong holds should not save him, nor any of his allies stand by him. The Babylonians accordingly subdued and expelled them from Arabia Petræa, of which they never afterwards recovered possession.

The last four verses of this prophecy foretel the restoration of the Jews, their victory over all their enemies, and their flourishing state in the latter times. This prophecy was, no doubt, fulfilled in part by their return from the Babylonian captivity, and by the conquests of the Maccabees over the Edomites, (1 Mac. v. 3—5, 65, &c.) but may have a farther aspect to events still future.

Ver. 1. We have heard a rumour.—See Jer. xlix. 14.

Ver. 2. Small . . . . despised.—Edom was comparatively a small, mountainous territory, on the south of Canaan.

Ver. 3. Dwellest in clefts, &c.—[Jerome observes, that all the southern parts of Palestine, from Eleutheropolis to Petra and Elath, were full of caverns hewn out of the rocks, and that the people had subterraneous dwellings similar to ovens. The whole of Idumea was very mountainous, and these caverns are the clefts of the rock here referred to; in which they thought themselves safe, and that no power brought against them could dislodge them from their fastnesses.}—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Men of thy confederacy.—[The Chaldeans, whose agents they became in persecuting the Jews.]—Bagster.—Have laid a wound.—This Newcome thinks unintelligible, and reads with ancient versions, "Laid a snare under thee." But to us, to lay a wound under a person, appears to mean, to wound them secretly and unawares.

Ver. 8. Wise men out of Edom—"Idumea (or Uz) was regarded by the Jews in the same light of elegance as Greece was by the Romans; and Teman as the Athens of Arabia Petræa." Good, in Job, introduction. See Jer, xlix. 5, 7.

Ver. 9. O Teman.—[This was one of the strong places of Idumea; and is here and elsewhere used, to avoid monotony, and to give variety to the Poet's versification, for Idumea itself.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. For thy violence, &c.—Instead of "Cut off by slaughter," the ancient versions join the last word of the preceding verse with this, thus: "For slaughter and for violence against," &c. Compare Amos i. 11. So Newcome and Boothroyd.

Ver. 11. Thou wast as one of them.—The following verses, by stating what Edom should not have done, give us to understand what they did do, which amounts (ver. 14.) to no less than robbery and murder.

Ver. 12. Shouldest not have looked—[That is, "Thou shouldst not have looked with pleasure on the day of thy brother's calamity." These verses describe the guilty part which the Edomites took against the Jews, when the Chaldeans took Jerusalem and burnt the temple.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. As ye have drunk.—[This address is to the Jews. As they had drunk the cup of God's indignation even on mount Zion, so the heathen in CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF OBADIAH.

[THE book of OBADIAH is composed with much force and beauty, and unfolds a noble and very interesting scene of prophecy. These predictions began to be fulfilled about five years after the destruction of Jerusalem, when the Chaldeans, with whom they had formerly been in alliance, under Nebuchadnezzar, ravaged Idumea, and dispossessed the Edomites of a great part of Arabia Petræa, of which they never after recovered possession. The Jews having returned to their own land, by the decree of Cyrus, at the termination of the seventy years of the Babylonian captivity, their temple was rebuilt, and the worship of God restored; and Jerusalem was re-established in prosperity, and the land replenished with inhabitants. They also extended themselves in every direction:—to Edom on the south,—to the Philistines on the west,—to Ephraim and Phœnicia on the north,—and to Gilead on the east. Alexander the Great gave Samaria to the Jews; and John Hyrcanus subdued the same country after his wars with the Syrians. (Josephus.) GOD at various times raised up certain persons as saviours or deliverers of his people, such as Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and the Maccabees. The Asmonean princes having united the priesthood with the state, the kingdom, or dominion, was actually possessed and exercised by the LORD—that is, the high priest had both the civil and ecclesiastical power in his own hands. The house of Jacob and the house of Joseph did also break out as a flame upon the Idumeans; for under Judas Maccabæus they attacked and defeated them several times, killed no less than twenty thousand at one time, and more than twenty thousand at another, and took their chief city Hebron, "with the towns thereof, and pulled down the fortress of it, and burned the towns thereof round about;" (1 Mac. v. 2 Mac. x.;) and at last his nephew, Hyrcanus son of Simon, took other of their cities, and reduced them to the necessity of either embracing the Jewish religion, or of leaving their country, and seeking other habitations; in consequence of which they submitted to be circumcised, became proselytes to the Jewish religion, and ever after were incorporated into the Jewish church and nation. (Josephus, Ant.) Thus they were actually masters of Edom, and judged and governed the mount of Esau. We know, indeed, as Bp. Newton remarks, little more of the history of the Edomites than as it is connected with that of the Jews: and where is the name or the nation now? They were swallowed up and lost, partly among the Nabathian Arabs, and partly among the Jews; and the very name was abolished and disused about the end of the first century after CHRIST. Thus were they rewarded for insulting and oppressing their brethren the Jews; and, while at this day we see the Jews subsisting as a distinct people, Edom is no more. Agreeably to the words of this prophet, he has been "cut off for ever," for his violence against his brother Jacob, (ver. 10.;) and there is now "not any remaining of the house of Esau, for the LORD had spoken it." Thus the prophecy appears to have had a very literal and exact fulfilment; but it is probable it also refers to the future conversion and restoration of the Jews, the destruction of all antichristian opposers, and that prosperous state of the church to which all the prophets bear witness, when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our LORD and his CHRIST; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.]—Bagster.

This prophet, after describing the pride and cruelty of the Edomites, declares that though they dwelt in fancied security among the clefts of the rocks, yet, that the men of Teman should be dismayed, and every one of the mount of Esau should be cut off by slaughter. The south part of Palestine, from Eleutheropolis to Petra, (the ancient capital of Idumea,) and Elah, was full of rocks, among which the Edomites dwelt. Obadiah's name implies, the servant of Jehovah, a title equivalent to that by which Moses was distinguished, (Num. xii. 7.) and to that in which Paul gloried. The prophet's work is short, but composed with much beauty: it unfolds a very interesting scene of prophecy, and an instructive lesson against human confidence and malicious exultation.—Gray's Key.

THE BOOK OF JONAH.

JONAH, the son of Amittai, was a native of Gath-hepher, in Galilee, and a type of our Saviour in his resurrection, is the most ancient of those Prophets whose writings are preserved in the sacred canon.—[He predicted the successes of Jereboam, II. the son of Joash, in whose reign he is supposed by Blair and others to have flourished; but Bishop Lloyd and others think he exercised the prophetical office as early as the latter part of Jehu's reign, or the beginning of that of Jehoahaz.]—Bagster. (See the Table of the Prophets, at the beginning of the prophetic writings.) His prophecy is a simple narrative, containing nothing poetical, excepting his thanksgiving ode (chap. ii.) which is most beautiful and sublime. The first mention we have of Jonah is in 2 Ki. xiv. 25.

CHAPTER I.

1 Jonah, sent to Nineveh, fleeth to Tarshish. 4 He is bewrayed by a tempest, 11 thrown into the sea, 17 and swallowed by a fish.

NOW the word of the LORD came unto [a] Jonah the [b] son of Amittai, saying,

2 Arise, go to [c] Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up [d] before me.

3 But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence [e] of the LORD, and went down to [f] Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD.

4 ¶ But the LORD [g] sent out [h] a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship [i] was like to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and [i] cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep.

6 So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

7 And they said every one to his fellow, Come, and let us cast [k] lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah.

8 Then said they unto him, Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us; What is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?

9 And he said unto them, I am a Hebrew, and I fear [l] the LORD, the God of heaven, which [m] hath made the sea and the dry land.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—17. Jonah is sent to Nineveh, but flies to Tarshish, and is swallowed by a great fish.—Jonah being sent with a threatening of some great calamity that should overwhelm the capital of Assyria, flies a contrary way to avoid the mission, and that for the most extraordinary reason that ever influenced a prophet, or even a good man. He confesses afterwards (chap. iv. 2.) it was not from the fear of personal danger; but lest God should relent from his threatening, and he should be thought a false prophet. He flies, however, in vain. A storm arrests him in his career, and a fish brings him back again. And here we have an answer to all the objections which infidelity can raise against the fact. God "had prepared a great fish:" but what could this fish be? a whale, it is said, could not swallow a man, and the teeth of a shark would crush him to atoms. Perhaps not. He that prepared the whale could surely provide it with a sufficient gullet; or, if it were a shark, he who shut the mouths of Nebuchadnezzar's lions, could doubtless secure the teeth of a shark from biting.

We must not proceed, however, without remarking the contrast between this Hebrew Prophet, and the pagan mariners. Jonah, as if totally insensible of his situation and his crime, goes fast to sleep: the pagan mariners, on the contrary, are all alive to their situation, and each one calls upon his god; and when they hear of Jonah's God, they call upon him also, and earnestly implore his mercy. Nor is this all: they evince more humanity, as Ver. 3. Unto Tarshish.—[As Jonah embarked at Joppa, a sea-port on the Mediterranean, it was probably either Tarsus in Cilicia, or rather Tartessus in Spain, to which he intended to flee. When we reflect how such a message would be received in the streets of London at this day, we shall not wonder at the prophet's reluctance to announce the destruction of the proud and idolatrous Nineveh.]—Bagster.

10 Then were the men [n] exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the LORD, because he had told them.

11 ¶ Then said they unto him, What shall we do unto thee, that the sea may be [o] calm unto us? for the sea [p] wrought, and was tempestuous.

12 And he said unto them, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my [q] sake this great tempest is upon you.

13 Nevertheless the men [r] rowed hard to bring it to the land; but they could not: for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous against them.

14 Wherefore they cried unto the LORD, and said, We beseech thee, O LORD, we beseech thee, let us not perish for this man's life, and [s] lay not upon us innocent blood: for thou, O LORD, hast done as it pleased thee.

15 So they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea: and the sea [t] ceased from her raging.

16 Then [u] the men feared the LORD exceedingly, and [v] offered a sacrifice unto the LORD, and [w] made vows.

17 ¶ Now the LORD had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. [x] And Jonah was in the [y] belly of the fish three days and three nights.

CHAPTER II.

1 The prayer of Jonah. 10 He is delivered from the fish.

THEN Jonah prayed unto the LORD his God out of the fish's belly,

2 And said, I [a] cried [b] by reason of mine affliction unto the LORD, and he heard me; out [c] of the belly of [d] hell cried I, and thou heardest [e] my voice.

3 For [f] thou hadst cast me into the deep, in the [g] midst of the seas; and the floods compassed me about: all thy billows [h] and thy waves passed over me.

4 Then [i] I said, I am cast out of thy sight yet I will look again toward [j] thy holy temple.

5 The waters compassed me [k] about, even to the soul: the depth closed me round about, the weeds were wrapped about my head.

6 I went down to the [l] bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me for ever: yet [m] hast thou brought up my life from [n] corruption, O LORD my God.

7 When my soul fainted within me I remembered the LORD: and my prayer came [o] in unto thee, into thy holy temple.

8 They [p] that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy.

9 But I will sacrifice [q] unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving; I will pay that that I have vowed. Salvation is of the LORD.

10 ¶ And [r] the LORD spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

CHAPTER III.

1 Jonah, sent again, preacheth to the Ninevites. 5 Upon their repentance, 10 God repenteth.

AND the word of the LORD came unto Jonah the second time, saying,

2 Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.

3 So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the LORD. Now Nineveh was an [a] exceeding great city of three days' journey.

4 And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and [b] said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

5 ¶ So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.

6 For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes.

7 And he caused it to be proclaimed and [c] published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his [d] nobles, saying, Let neither well as more piety, than the Prophet. He is content to give up one of the largest cities then existing with all its inhabitants, to plague or earthquake; they are struggling to save the life of a single individual, and that individual the very man whose sin and folly had brought them into danger.—How or what they sacrificed, we are not told; but it is evident they were ready to sacrifice any thing to pacify the angry deity, while the Prophet remained stupid and insensible, till he sunk to the roots of the mountains, and the bottom of the ocean. But how long did he remain there? The text says "three days and three nights;" but the same expression is applied to our Lord's continuance in the grave, which we know was only one whole day, and a small part of two others. (See Matt. xii. 40.)

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—10. Jonah's prayer and thanksgiving.—This ode is not to be considered as composed (much less written) in the belly of the whale; but it expresses the feelings of his mind in that distressing situation, as well as his gratitude afterwards, when he was again safe on dry land.—It has been remarked, that it contains no confession of his guilt, in disobeying the divine command. It intimates, however, that he had repented, and made vows, (as well as the mariners,) which vows we have no reason to doubt but he performed. The ode before us also, containing only eight verses, can be supposed to contain but a small part of his reflections or devotions, since it appears that he retained the full possession of his senses during the whole time of his confinement.

Some have supposed that this miraculous deliverance of Jonah might have great effect in promoting the repentance of Nineveh; but we have no proof that they ever heard of it, and the natural taciturnity of Jonah leads us to think the contrary. It is more natural, as well as more scriptural, to attribute their repentance wholly to a divine influence on their minds.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—10. Jonah's preaching and its success.—Our Lord confirms the fact, that the Ninevites repented at the preaching of Jonah, though a stranger and a foreigner, whilst his own preaching to the Jews, accompanied as it was with many miracles, produced upon the nation, as such, no salutary

Ps. xxxiii. 9.——Upon the dry land—That is, at Joppa, from which he set out; and there are traditional reports, that the bones of a vast fish were there found, which some attribute to the monster that threatened Andromeda, and others, to the whale that swallowed Hercules: a story which doubtless originated in this narrative of Jonah. See Orient. Lit. No. 1081.

CHAP. III. Ver. 2. Preach unto it the preaching.—Heb. "Cry (or proclaim) unto it the proclamation." The primitive idea of preaching is taken from the office of a public crier. Isa. xl. 2, 6. Jonah was not sent to deliver orations, but a proclamation, as in ver. 4.

Ver. 3. An exceeding great city.—Heb. "A city great toward (or before) God." Compare Gen. xiii. 13.—[Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, was situated on the eastern bank of the river Tigris, opposite the present Mosul, about 280 miles north of Babylon, and 400 N. E. of Damascus, in lat. 36° 20 N. lon. 73° 10 E. It was not only a very ancient, (Ge. X. 11.) but also a very great city. Strabo says, that it was much larger than Babylon, the circuit of which he estimates at 385 furlongs; and, according to Diodorus Siculus, it was an oblong parallelogram, extending 150 furlongs in length, 90 in breadth, and 480 in circumference, i. e. about 20 miles long, 12 broad, and 60 in compass. This agrees with the account given here of its being "an exceeding great city of three days' journey," i. e. in circuit; for 20 miles a day was the common computation for a pedestrian. (See Herodotus.) It was surrounded by large walls 100 feet high, so broad that three chariots could drive abreast on them, and defended by 1500 towers 200 feet in height. (See notes on Nahum.)]—B.

Ver. 4. A day's journey.—Jonah had not proceeded more than one day's journey, before the people and government began to repent; and a public fast was enjoined, the strictest of which we ever read.

Ver. 6. Sat in ashes.—See Job ii. 12.

8 But let man and beast be covered with [e] sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands.

9 Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?

10 ¶ And God saw [f] their works, that they turned [g] from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Jonah, repining at God's mercy, 4 is reproved by the type of a gourd.

BUT it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

2 And he prayed unto the LORD, and said, I pray thee, O LORD, was not this my saying, when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil.

3 Therefore now, O LORD, take, I beseech thee, my life from me; for [a] it is better for me to die than to live.

5 So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city.

6 And the LORD God prepared a [c] gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah [d] was exceeding glad of the gourd.

7 But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.

8 And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a [e] vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

9 And God said to Jonah, [f] Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, [g] I do well to be angry, even unto death.

10 Then said the LORD, Thou hast [h] had pity on the gourd, for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which [i] came up in a night, and perished in a night:

effects. It is true that this reform was only temporary, and so are all national reforms. In the next generation they again degenerated, and were eventually destroyed; yet this repentance, which, in many individual cases, was probably permanent and saving, was also to the nation a great "lengthening of their tranquillity"—probably to the extent of a century and a half.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—11. Jonah retires to await the event of his predictions.—"Jonah dreading to be thought a false prophet, repines at God's mercy at sparing the Ninevites, whose destruction he seems to have expected, from his retiring to a place without the city about the close of the 40 days. But how does he glorify that mercy which he meant to blame! And what an amiable picture does he give of the compassion of the true God! This attribute of the deity is still farther illustrated by his tenderness and condescension to the Prophet himself, who, with all his spiritual gifts, had much of human infirmity. What pity and what honour did God show him, in providing for him a miraculous shelter? And what a gentle reproof did he give him, when uneasy at its being removed?—"Thou hast had pity on the gourd, and should I not spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand (infants) that cannot discern between the right hand and left; and also much cattle?" (Dr. J. Smith.)

"Let this goodness of God engage us to fear him, and hope in his mercy, who is long-suffering even to his enemies, 'not willing that any should perish,' but desirous that all should come to repentance."

Ver. 7. Man nor beast.—Heb. "Cattle." So ver. 8. In some countries, it appears that cattle have been shut up during times of drought, under the idea that their lowing and bleating, joined to the cries of mankind, might induce the Deity to hear, and send rain. See Orient. Lit. No. 1082.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 3. Better for me to die than to live.—Heb. "My death is better than my life."

Ver. 4. Doest thou well to be angry?—Newcome, "That (thine anger) is kindled?" See margin.

Ver. 6. Prepared a gourd.—[Heb. Kikajon, probably the palma Christi, called kiki or kouki, by the Egyptians, and Elcheroa, by the Arabs, from which castor oil is extracted. It is as large as the olive tree, has leaves like those of a vine, sometimes as broad as the brim of a hat, and is of very quick growth. See Bochart.]—B. Newcome, "A plant." The disputes about the species of this plant are as futile as those respecting the whale. If God prepared a fish, a plant, or a worm, for any special purpose, it was no doubt fitted for that purpose; but there must be something miraculous in the rapidity with which it grew and withered. Jonah had made himself a booth, but the shade must have been imperfect, till this plant shot up, and filled up all the interstices through which the noon-day sun might smite him.

Ver. 10. Which came up in a night, &c.—"Which was the son of a night, and which perished the son of a night."

Ver. 11. Persons that cannot discern—That is, children. [It is generally calculated, that the young children of any place are a fifth of the inhabitants; and consequently the whole population of Nineveh would amount to above 600,000; which is very inferior to that of London and Paris, though they occupy not one quarter of the ground. In eastern cities there are large vacant spaces for gardens and pasturages, so that there might be "very much cattle." See note on chap. iii. 3.]—Bagster.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF JONAH.

[WE are here presented with a fine description of the power and tender mercies of GOD; and the impartiality of the prophet in detailing his own weakness and folly, (a conduct almost wholly restricted to the sacred writers,) is worthy of particular notice. Some writers, from the supposed difficulties of this Book, have considered it as a parabolic history, or allegory; others have thought that the account of his being swallowed by a great fish, praying in its belly, and being cast on dry land, was a dream which he had when fast asleep in the ship; and others, with equal propriety, have contended that by dag, we should understand, not a fish, but a fishing-cove, or fishing-boat! Such absurd opinions are scarcely worthy of notice; they are plainly contrary to the letter of the text, and the obvious meaning of language; and are completely overthrown by the appeal of our LORD to the main facts of this history, and especially by the use which he makes of it. (Mat. xii. 40. Lu. xi. 39.) This testimony puts an end to all mythological, allegorical, and hypothetical interpretations of these great facts; and the whole must be admitted to be a miracle from beginning to end, effected by the almighty power of GOD. GOD, who commissioned Jonah, raised the storm; He prepared the great fish to swallow the disobedient prophet; He maintained his life for three days and three nights in the bowels of this marine monster; He led it to the shore, and caused it to eject the prophet on dry land at the appointed time. He miraculously produced the sheltering gourd, that came to perfection in a night; He prepared the worm which caused it to wither in a night. And how easy was all this to the almighty power of the Author and Sustainer of life, who has a sovereign, omnipresent, and energetic sway in the heavens and in the earth! The miraculous preservation and deliverance of Jonah were surely not more remarkable or descriptive of almighty power, than the multiplied wonders in the wilderness, the protection of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, in the fiery furnace, of Daniel in the lion's den, or the resurrection of the widow's son: all were deviations from the general laws of nature, and the ordinary course of human events, and evident demonstrations of supernatural and miraculous interference. But foolish man will affect to be wise, though born as a wild ass's colt; and some, because they cannot work a miracle themselves, can hardly be persuaded that GOD can do it! The fame of the prophet's deliverance appears to have been widely propagated among the heathen nations; and the Greeks, ever fond of adorning the memory of their heroes by every remarkable event and embellishment which they could appropriate, added to the fictitious adventures of Hercules, that of having continued three days and nights in the belly of a sea monster, or shark, cutting and hacking his entrails, and afterwards coming out of the monster without any injury, except the loss of his hair. The fable of Arion and the Dolphin, of which the date is fixed at a period nearly coeval with that of Jonah, is probably also a misrepresentation of the particulars recorded in this sacred Book.]—Bagster.

THE BOOK OF MICAH.

[THE prophet MICAH was a native of Moresheth, a town in the kingdom of Judah, which JEROME places about ten furlongs from Eleutheropolis; and, as we learn from the commencement of his predictions, prophesied in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah. He was, therefore, contemporary with Isaiah and Hosea; though it is probable that he began to prophesy later than they.]—B. He reproves the Jews for their sins with great warmth and indignation; foretels their several captivities; and, for the comfort of the pious, delivers many things concerning the Messiah, his incarnation and offices, and the happiness and glory of his church in the latter days. "The style of Micah is for the most part close, forcible, pointed, and concise; sometimes approaching the obscurity of Hosea; in many parts animated and sublime, and in general truly poetical." Pp Lowth, Lect. xxi.

CHAPTER I.

[1] Micah showeth the wrath of God against Jacob for idolatry. [10] He exhorteth to mourning.

THE word of the LORD that came to Micah [a] the Morasthite in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.

2 ¶ Hear, [b] all ye people; [c] hearken, O earth, and [d] all that therein is: and let the Lord GOD be witness [e] against you, the Lord from his holy temple.

3 For, behold, the LORD cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth.

4 And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down a [f] steep place.

5 For [g] the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jerusalem?

6 Therefore I will make Samaria as a heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard: and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof.

7 And all the graven images thereof shall be beaten to pieces, and all the hires thereof shall be burned with the fire, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate: for she gathered it of the hire of a harlot, and they shall return to the hire of a harlot.

8 Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked: I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the [h] owls.

9 For [i] her wound is incurable; for it is come [j] unto Judah; he is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jerusalem.

10 ¶ Declare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all: in the house of [k] Aphrah roll thyself in the dust.

11 Pass ye away, [l] thou [m] inhabitant of [n] Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of [o] Beth-ezel; he shall receive of you his standing.

12 For the inhabitant of Maroth [p] waited carefully for good: but evil came down from the LORD unto the gate of Jerusalem.

CHAPTER II.

[1] Against oppression. [4] A lamentation. [7] A reproof of injustice and idolatry. [12] A promise of restoring Jacob.

WO to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their [a] beds! when the morning is light, they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand.

2 And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they [b] oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.

3 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove your necks; neither shall ye go haughtily: for [c] this time is evil.

4 ¶ In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a [d] doleful lamentation, and say, We be utterly spoiled: he hath changed the portion of my people: how hath he removed it from me! [e] turning away he hath divided our fields.

5 Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord [f] by lot in the congregation of the LORD.

6 [g] Prophesy ye not, say they to them that prophesy: they shall not prophesy to them, that they shall not take shame.

7 ¶ O thou that art named the house of Jacob, is the spirit of the LORD [h] straitened? are these [i] his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh [j] [k] uprightly?

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—16. The Prophet declaims against idolatry, and exhorts to repentance and humility.—This chapter contains prophecies, first against Samaria, whose fate the Prophet laments in the dress of a professed mourner, and with the doleful cries of the most mournful animals; and then, secondly, against Jerusalem, which is threatened with the like stroke; namely, the invasion of Sennacherib. Other cities of Judah are also threatened, and their dangers represented to be so great, as to oblige them to have recourse for protection even to their enemies, the Philistines. But all resources are declared vain; their captivity is decreed, and their crimes and obduracy have rendered it necessary.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—13. A severe reproof of the oppression and cruelty of the great, and a lamentation over the national calamities.—The Prophet begins with denouncing a bitter wo against those who laid on their beds to devise mischief, and

Dr. Boothroyd translates this, "Let not the inhabitress of Zaanan go forth; the mourning of Beth-ezel will take from you its support." In the original here is a peculiar play of words, in the nature of punning. Bp. Lowth remarks the same in all the prophets, particularly Isaiah x. 28—32. See also Orient. Lit. No. 1085. The general sense in Micah seems to be, that the funeral rites should be embarrassed and neglected.

Ver. 12. The inhabitant of Maroth waited, &c.—Maroth is bitter, and here is, perhaps, another paronomasia; but to render these verses intelligible to a mere English reader, would be very difficult, and occupy much room. We must therefore refer to Bp. Newcome.

Ver. 14. Achzib means a lie. Jos. xv. 44.

Ver. 16. Make thee bald.—As a sign of mourning. See Amos viii. 10. The bald eagle is probably here referred to.—Orient. Lit. No. 1086.

Ver. 5. None that shall cast a cord, &c.—That is, you shall have no lot, or portion, in the land, but be wholly exiled.

Ver. 6. Prophesy ye not, &c.—Dr. Boothroyd seems to have given the clearest version of this passage: "Prophesy not, (say they,) O ye that prophesy: should they not prophesy to such as these, yet will their disgrace not be removed." He adds, "I consider that the unbelieving thus speak to God's prophets, ('Prophesy not,' &c.) to whom Micah replies, 'Should they not,' this will not remove the reproach, or disgrace, attached to God's prophets."

Ver. 7. Is the spirit of the Lord straitened?—That is, Is there any want of the prophetic spirit?—My words do good, &c.—Compare 2 Cor. ii. 16.

Ver. 8. Ye pull off the robe.—Newcome, "Ye strip the mantle from off the garment," &c. i. e. they spoiled the unprotected passenger.

children have ye taken away my glory for ever.

10 Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest: because it is [o] polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction.

11 If a man [p] walking in the spirit and falsehood do lie, saying, I will prophesy unto thee of wine and of strong drink; he shall even be the prophet of this people.

12 ¶ I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold: they shall make great noise by reason of the multitude of men.

13 The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it: and their king shall pass before them, and [q] the LORD on the head of them.

CHAPTER III.

1 The cruelty of the princes. 5 The falsehood of the prophets. 8 The security of them both.

AND I said, Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel; Is it not for you to know judgment?

2 Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones;

3 Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

4 Then shall they cry unto the LORD, but [a] he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets [b] that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:

6 Therefore night shall be unto you, [c] that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, [d] that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7 Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover [e] their [f] lips; for [g] there is no answer of God.

8 ¶ But truly I am full of power [h] by the spirit of the LORD, and of judgment, and of might, to declare [i] unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

9 Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

10 They [j] build up Zion with [k] blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

11 The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for [l] hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the LORD, [m] and say, Is [n] not the LORD among us? none evil can come upon us.

12 Therefore shall Zion for your sake be ploughed as a field, and [o] Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the [p] forest.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The glory, 3 peace, 8 kingdom, 11 and victory of the church.

BUT [a] in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the LORD shall be established in [b] the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.

2 And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and [c] he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into [d] pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither [e] shall they learn war any more.

4 But [f] they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the LORD of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all [g] people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we [h] will walk in the name of the LORD our God for ever and ever.

6 ¶ In that day, saith the LORD, will I assemble [i] her that [j] halteth, and I will gather [k] her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

7 And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation:

rose only to put in practice the evils they had devised. In return for this, God devises against them an evil, by which they should effectually be humbled; namely, their captivity in a foreign land.

The last two verses some explain as promising them a return again from their calamity; but Boothroyd remarks, "After long considering ver. 12, and the next verse, I am convinced that they ought to be regarded as a denunciation of punishment." That is, the people should be penned up together, like sheep in a fold, by the Chaldean army, which should occasion great alarm and confusion; at length their king, Zedekiah, should break forth at the head of the few troops that were with him; and the Lord himself should lead (or cause them to be led, as Ezek. xxxix. 28,) forth into captivity. See the history, 2 Kings xxv. 4.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—12. The cruel character of the Jewish princes, and the falsehood of their prophets.—It is evident that a great degeneracy now prevailed, as well in the church as in the state; and many who had been educated in the schools of the Prophets, followed their apparent worldly interest instead of their duty, and became prophets of Baal, or of the golden calves, instead of prophets of Jehovah, though they would always be thought to be the latter. Against such, Micah denounces disappointment and confusion; but on his own part declares himself animated by the Spirit of the Most High. But how were the people to distinguish? Moses has given two criterions; one, the fulfilment of their predictions, but this required time to ascertain; a more certain and immediate criterion is therefore given; if any prophet attempted, either directly or indirectly, to lead them into idolatry, he was to be considered as a false prophet, and was liable to the penalty of stoning. See Deut. xiii. 1—5.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—13. A prophecy of Messiah's kingdom.—From the great similitude between the first three verses of this chapter, and the opening verses of the second chapter of Isaiah, it is very natural to suppose that one had reference to the

They broke out, and passed the gate, (ver. 5,) but the king was taken, and carried to Babylon, as had been predicted

8 And thou, O tower [m] of [n] the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first [o] dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem.

11 ¶ Now [s] also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look [t] upon Zion.

12 But they know not [u] the thoughts of the LORD, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather [v] them as the sheaves into the floor.

13 Arise and [w] thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs [x] brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces [y] many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the LORD, and their substance unto the LORD of the whole earth.

CHAPTER V.

1 The birth of Christ. 4 His kingdom. 8 His conquest.

NOW gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us: they shall smite [a] the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek.

2 But [b] thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler [c] in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from [d] [e] everlasting.

3 Therefore will he give them up, until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth: then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.

4 ¶ And he shall stand and [f] feed in the strength of the LORD, in the majesty of the name of the LORD his God; and they shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.

5 And this man shall be the [g] peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our land: and when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise against him seven shepherds, and eight [h] principal men.

6 And they shall [i] waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod [j] in the entrances thereof: thus shall he [k] deliver us from the Assyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders.

7 And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a [l] dew from the LORD, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.

8 ¶ And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of [m] sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9 Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

10 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots:

11 And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds:

other: and if, as Bishop Lowth thinks, Isaiah was first written, this may fairly be considered as a quotation, though with some little variation; the sacred writers not always aiming, as it should seem, at verbal exactness in their quotations.

The kingdom of the Messiah is constantly represented as an establishment of peace, and truth, and righteousness; but truth and righteousness can never be in harmony with practical error or moral evil; hence, He who bears the character of Prince of Peace, sends forth from his mouth a sharp two-edged sword. The word of God can never be at peace with sin or error, while they remain upon the earth. (Rev. xix. 13—15.) Messiah must and shall reign till both are put beneath his feet.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—15. An eminent prophecy of Messiah.—This prophecy was applied to Messiah in the time of our Saviour; for when Herod inquired where Messiah was to be born, the chief priests and Pharisees replied by quoting this prediction, though with some verbal difference. Instead of reading with us, ("Though) thou be little," they read, "Thou art not the least;" (Mat. ii. 6.) in which some have found an apparent contradiction. Both assertions, however, are not only true, but accurate. Beth-lehem, as a city, was never extensive nor populous, compared with Jerusalem, or even Zion: yet it ranked high as the birth-place of king David, and was therefore fixed upon by the Romans as the town where all the tribe of Judah should be taxed. Its name, Beth-lehem (the house of bread,) is supposed to have been given it, from the fine corn-fields with which it was surrounded, called the coasts thereof, (verse 16,) and which appear to have been inhabited, though thinly, from Herod sending thither to destroy the children. Another thing which made it rank still higher was, its being the predicted birth-place of the Messiah. Beth-lehem, though but a small city, and of few inhabitants, evidently ranked high from the days of David, and especially from those of Micah to those of Jesus; we see, therefore, no reason to alter the translation, either in the Prophet or the Evangelist.

From this town, it is said, should come forth one who should be the ruler in Israel; i. e. the Messiah, whose "goings forth," have been of old, from everlasting. Without disputing the doctrine of eternal generation, which many derive from this text, we much doubt its being here referred to: we should

Ver. 7. The Lord shall reign.—[The Targumist applies these words to the Messiah: "But thou, O Messiah, who art hidden because of the sins of the congregation of Zion, the kingdom shall come unto thee.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Tower of the flock.—Meaning, probably, mount Zion. It was customary, in extensive pastures, to have a frame erected, of considerable height, to watch the flock. (Something of this nature, it is said, Buonaparte had in the field of Waterloo.) Zion is here considered as the watch tower of the kingdom.

Ver. 9. Is there no king in thee?—That is, though Zedekiah be gone into captivity, Jehovah is king. See Je. viii. 19.

Ver. 11. Let our eye look.—Newcome, "See (its desire) on Sion." Compare Ps. liv. 7.; lix. 10.

Ver. 12. They know not the thoughts, &c.—The heathen knew not God's design in suffering them to be carried into captivity. Is. x. 7.

Ver. 3. Their gain—That is, their spoil taken.

CHAP. V. See the concluding remarks on this book for the opinion of Dr. Hales, on ver. 1—5.——Ver. 1. Now gather, &c.—Boothroyd, following the Hebrew. Syriac, &c. joins this verse to the preceding chapter, and we think very properly.——They shall smite the judge, &c.—Perhaps this indignity was offered to Zedekiah when he fled. 2 Ki. xxv. 6. 7.

Ver. 2. Beth-lehem Ephratah.—Beth-lehem is, literally, the house, or place, of bread, and it was called Ephratah, from its vicinity to Ephrath (Ge. xlviii. 7.) and of Judah, to distinguish it from a town less considerable in the tribe of Naphtali.——Among the thousands.—The tribes of Israel were divided into thousands, each containing 1000 families, as the counties of England were divided into hundreds, doubtless for a like reason. It is proper to mention here, that, more completely to avoid the appearance of inconsistency, many learned men read the words of the prophet interrogatively, as Newcome, "Art thou too little to be among the leaders (or thousands) of Judah?" The text might certainly be so read, but we see no necessity for the alteration.——Whose goings forth.—The Hebrew verb here used is applied to the rising of the sun, (Ps. xix. 6.,) to the flowing of a fountain, to the springing of plants, and a variety of other objects. And in the first chapter of this prophecy (ver. 3.) it is applied to the Lord's coming forth from his place, to execute judgment. See Parkhurst in Isa, and Gesenius in Motsaah. The terms "of old," "from everlasting," always refer to high antiquity, and sometimes to a proper eternity. De. xxxiii. 27. Ps. lv. 19. Hab. i. 12. Ge. xxi. 33. Ps. xc. 2. Abp. Secker says, "All the (ancient) Jews, whose writings we have, apply this text to the Messiah."

Ver. 3. Therefore.—Dr. Pococke renders this particle, "But yet," or "notwithstanding." So Hos. ii. 4.——His brethren.—Newcome, "Their brethren," which is the reading of the LXX, Arabic, and Chaldee, and seems more consistent, and differs but in one letter from the printed text. Dr. Hales reads, "Thy brethren," all referring to the Jewish nation.——Shall return.—Newcome, "Be converted."

Ver. 5. Peace.—Dr. Pye Smith, "The Restorer;" Boothroyd, "The Author of peace." All the above close the prophecy at this line, except Bp. Chandler, who connects it with the following, thus: "He shall be the peace; but if the Assyrians shall come," &c.——Seven shepherds (i. e. leaders) and eight principal men.—"Princes of men."

Ver. 8. As a young lion.—Newcome refers this to the victories of the Maccabees.

Ver. 10. I will cut off thy horses.—Horses were expressly forbidden to the Jews. De. xvii. 16.—[This seems to refer to those happy times when the Jews shall be converted and restored to their own land; and all their enemies being destroyed, they shall have no farther need of cavalry or fenced cities.]—B.

Ver. 11. Strong holds.—The Jews were enjoined to put their trust in God, and in no human aid. Ps. xx. 7.

12 And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thy hand; and thou shalt have no more [n] soothsayers:

13 Thy graven images also [o] will I cut off, and thy [p] standing images out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thy hands.

14 And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee: so will I destroy thy [q] cities.

15 And I will execute vengeance [r] in anger and fury upon the heathen, such as they have not heard.

4 For I brought [e] thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5 O my people, remember now what Balak [f] king of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him from Shittim unto Gilgal; that ye may know the righteousness [g] of the LORD.

rather consider the term (which is of very general import) as referring to the divine appearances of the Messiah under the Old Testament, and the many deliverances wrought by him for his people Israel, in almost every age.

But it is added, the Lord will give up these his ancient people "until she which travaileth hath brought forth." Bishop Chandler applies this to the Jewish church. His words are, "Although God shall send his Ruler in Israel, he will let Israel remain in captivity to the time that Sion hath gone the full time of her travail, and then her sorrows shall have a joyful issue; then the remnant of his brethren shall return," &c.

Archbishop Newcomb, Dr. Hales, Dr. Pye Smith, and others, explain the latter part of this prophecy somewhat differently. The former reads, ver. 3, "Therefore will he deliver them until the time when she hath brought forth." This he explains, "God will not fully vindicate and exalt his people, till the Virgin Mother shall have brought forth her son; and till Judah and Israel, and all the true sons of Abraham among their brethren the Gentiles, be converted to Christianity." Drs. Hales and Smith adopt nearly the same interpretation, considering the prediction as parallel to Isa. vii. 14. and referring to our Lord's miraculous conception. All these gentlemen close the prophecy with verse 4 of this chapter.

The Prophet then returns to his own times, predicts the fall of Assyria. Verse 7, and the following verses, are thought to refer to the spread of the knowledge of the true God among the heathen by means of the captive Jews, and to the destruction of idolatry by the subsequent propagation of the Gospel. But we confess we do not see the necessity of cutting off the connexion at the conclusion of ver. 4. If it be continued, we think it may imply that the preservation of the Jews, and their return from Babylon, with every other mercy vouchsafed to them, had a reference to the same Saviour, who is our peace as well as theirs. See Ephes. ii. 14.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—16. The Lord's controversy with his people.—The manner in which the Prophet calls upon the inanimate creation to hear the expostulation of Jehovah with his people, is awakening and sublime.

The Prophet then argues with the people on the folly of preferring ritual services, and even the most costly sacrifices, to moral duties and to humble submission to his will; the sentiment is forcibly and beautifully expressed, and nearly corresponds with the words that Moses addressed to Israel in the wilderness. "What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul?" (Deut. x. 12.)

The subsequent threatenings are terrible and alarming, and what we see this day fulfilled, in a people who are become "A desolation and a hissing, and a reproach" in all the earth.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—20. The church's complaint and confession before God.—The Prophet begins this chapter with lamenting the decay of religion and the growth of ungodliness, using a beautiful allegory, borrowed from the vineyard, to represent the scarcity of true piety and of good men, who were as rarely to be found as the early fig in the advanced season, or a cluster after the vintage had been gathered. He then reproves and threatens them, in terms so expressive of great calamities, as to be applied in the New Testament to times of the hottest persecution. (See Mat. x. 35, 36.) Notwithstanding which, a pious Jew is here introduced, professing, in the name of his captive brethren, the strongest faith in the mercy of God, the most submissive resignation to his will, and the firmest hope in his favour in future times, when they should CHAP VI. Ver. 1. Arise, contend thou.—[The manner of raising attention, says Abp. Newcome, in ver. 1, 2, by calling a man to urge his plea in the face of all nature, and on the inanimate creation, to hear the expostulation of Jehovah with his people, is truly awakening and magnificent. The words of Jehovah follow in ver. 3..5. And God's mercies having been set before the people, one of them is introduced in a beautiful dramatic form, asking what his duty is towards so gracious a God, ver. 6, 7. 16 The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

17 They shall [s] lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like [t] worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the LORD our God, and shall fear because of thee.

triumph over all their foes. An expression which here occurs has, in more than one instance, confounded the enemies of true religion, and raised it up friends under severe persecution.

During the troubles of the seventeenth century, in England, when many suffered for conscience sake, a pious nonconformist minister was conducted, with a sort of brutal triumph, from Birmingham to Norwich, his legs being chained under his horse's belly. As he was about to enter the castle jail, a woman observed him out of her window, who had probably heard him boast in the name of the Lord his God, and called out to him, "Where is the Lord your God now?" In reply he directed her to verse 10 of the chapter now before us, and she was so struck on reading it, that she became a kind friend to him in all his subsequent confinement. CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF MICAH.

[THE prophecy contained in chap. v. 1—5, says Dr. Hales, "Is perhaps the most important single prophecy in the Old Testament, and the most comprehensive respecting the personal character of the Messiah, and his successive manifestations to the world. It crowns the whole chain of predictions descriptive of the several limitations of the blessed Seed of the woman to the line of Shem, to the family of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to the tribe of Judah, and to the royal house of David, here terminating in his birth at Bethlehem, 'the city of David.' It carefully distinguishes his human nativity from his eternal generation; foretels the rejection of the Israelites and Jews for a season; their final restoration; and the universal peace destined to prevail throughout the earth in the Regeneration. It forms, therefore, the basis of the New Testament, which begins with his human birth at Bethlehem, the miraculous circumstances of which are recorded in the introductions of Matthew's and Luke's Gospels; his eternal generation as the ORACLE, or WISDOM, in the sublime introduction of John's Gospel; his prophetic character, and second coming, illustrated in the four Gospels and Epistles, ending with a prediction of the speedy approach of the latter in the Apocalypse. (Re. xxii. 20.)" That the ancient Jews understood this prophecy of the Messiah is evident, not only from the decision of the chief priests and scribes, (Mat. ii. 6.) but also from many of the Jewish writers which are now extant. JONATHAN in his Targum expressly applies it to the Messiah; rendering it, "And thou Bethlehem Ephratah, art thou too little to be numbered among the thousands of the house of Judah? From thee before me shall come forth the Messiah to exercise dominion in Israel, whose name is declared of old, from the days of eternity." In the Targum on the Pentateuch ascribed to the same author, on Ge. xxxv. 21. the tower of Edar, rendered in Micah, "the tower of the flock," and which JEROME says was near Bethlehem, and the place where the birth of Jesus Christ was declared to the shepherds, is expressly affirmed to be "the place from which the king Messiah shall be manifested in the end of the days." In Pirke Eliezer also, the passage in Micah is referred to the Messiah; and "his goings forth from the beginning," is interpreted by "when the world was not yet created." See also Talmud Hieros. Berachoth. In fact, nothing can be clearer or more undoubted than the application of this remarkable prophecy; which was fully verified in the birth of our Saviour, by a peculiar act of Providence, at Bethlehem.

THE BOOK OF NAHUM.

[NAHUM, the prophet, was a native of Elkosh, a town of Galilee, the ruins of which were still in being, and well known, in the time of JEROME. JOSEPHUS (Ant. l. ix. c. 11. § 3.) says, that he flourished in the time of Jotham, king of Judah, and that "all the events which he foretold concerning Nineveh came to pass one hundred and fifteen years afterwards." But JEROME, with more probability, places him in the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah, and says, that "his name by interpretation is a comforter; for the ten tribes being carried away by the king of Assyria, this vision was to comfort them in their captivity: nor was it less consolation to the other two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who remained in the land, and were besieged by the same enemies, to hear that these conquerors would in time be conquered themselves, their city taken, and their empire overthrown." This prophecy consists of three chapters, forming one entire poem, the conduct and imagery of which are truly admirable. In the exordium, the prophet sets forth with grandeur the justice and power of God, tempered with lenity and goodness; foretels the ruin of the Assyrian king and his army, and the deliverance of the people of God, with their rejoicing on the occasion; predicts the siege and taking of Nineveh by the Medes and Babylonians, the ruin of the Assyrian empire, the plundering and destruction of the city, and the extinction of the royal family, for their oppression and cruelty; denounces a heavy wo against Nineveh for her perfidy and violence, and idolatries; shows that the desolation of No-Ammon, in Egypt, may lead her to expect similar destruction; and predicts her utter and final ruin, and the inefficacy of all methods to prevent it."]—Bagster. T. H. Horne recommends Bp. Newton's 9th Dissertation on the Prophets, as the best commentary on this book; we have therefore carefully consulted it, in connexion with Abp. Newcome's Version, and Dr. Boothroyd's.

CHAPTER I.

The majesty of God in goodness to his people, and severity against his enemies.

THE burden of Nineveh. The book of the vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

2 [a] God is [b] jealous, and the LORD [c] revengeth; he LORD revengeth, and [d] is furious; the LORD will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies.

3 The LORD is slow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked: the LORD hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet.

4 He rebuketh the sea, and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers: Bashan languisheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth.

5 The mountains [e] quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein.

6 Who can stand before his indignation? and who can [f] abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him.

7 The LORD is good, a [g] strong hold in the day of [h] trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him.

8 But with an overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkness shall pursue his enemies.

9 What do ye imagine against the LORD? he will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time.

10 For while [i] they be folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry.

11 There is one come out of thee, that imagineth evil against the LORD; [j] a wicked counsellor.

12 Thus saith the LORD; [k] Though they be quiet, and likewise many, yet thus shall they be [l] cut down, when he shall pass through. Though I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more.

13 For now will I break his yoke from off thee, and will burst thy bonds in sunder.

14 And the LORD hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown: out of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image and the molten image: I will make thy grave; for thou art vile.

15 Behold [m] upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace! O Judah, [n] keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows: for [o] the wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly [p] cut off.

CHAPTER II.

The fearful and victorious armies of God against Nineveh.

HE [a] that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face: keep the munition, watch the way, make thy loins strong, fortify thy power mightily.

2 For the LORD hath turned away the [b] excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel: for the emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine branches.

3 The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are [c] in scarlet: the chariots shall be with [d] flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken.

4 The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: [e] they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.

5 He shall recount his [f] worthies: they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the [g] defence shall be prepared.

6 The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be [h] dissolved.

7 And [i] Huzzab shall be [j] led away captive, she shall be brought up, and her maids shall

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—15. The majesty of God exhibited in his goodness to his own people, and his severity toward their enemies.—This chapter opens the prophecy with a sublime description of the majesty and power of God, tempered with lenity and goodness to his people, but breathing wrath and judgment to all his enemies. The Prophet then turns to the Assyrians, describes the confusion that prevailed in their counsels, and the corruption of their manners, insomuch that Nineveh, as well as Babylon, appears to have fallen a victim to intoxication.

The one gone forth, the wicked counsellor mentioned in ver. 11, has been generally explained of one or other of the Assyrian kings; but we conceive applies more justly to Rab-shakeh, the general of Sennacherib, who was the messenger of his blasphemies, and probably the chief author of them; especially of the letter sent in his master's name, 2 Kings xix. 49, &c. Both this wicked king and his wicked counsellor loudly boasted of their success against surrounding nations, without drawing any line of distinction between the God of Israel and the idols of the heathen. The Prophet therefore announces the confusion of these blasphemers; the termination of their proud career; and, as to Sennacherib, that his tomb is prepared. (2 Kings xix. 37.) Messengers are then seen from the surrounding mountains, announcing the death of the tyrant, and the deliverance of Israel from his yoke, so that they may perform their religious rites secure and uninterrupted. Similar language is, by Isaiah, applied to messengers announcing the incarnation of Messiah, and the salvation of mankind. (Isa. lii. 7.)

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—13. The armies, commissioned by God, attack Nineveh.—"Nineveh is now called on to prepare for the approach of her enemies, the instruments of Jehovah's vengeance; and the military array and muster, the very arms and dress of the Medes and Babylonians, their rapid approach to the city, the process of the siege and inundation of the river,

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. The burden.—See note on Is. xvii. 1.—The Elkoshite.—this term is differently understood, "Many suppose (says Townsend) that he was a descendant of Elkosha, while others infer that he was born at Elkosh, or Elkosha, a village in Galilee." The latter sense is adopted by all the authorities referred to in the Introduction to this book.

Ver. 2. A jealous God.—See margin. See exposition De. ch. xvi.—And is furious.—Heb. "Having fury," or wrath, namely, for his enemies.

Ver. 3. Will not at all acquit.—See note on Ex. xxxiv. 7.

Ver. 4. The sea . . . . the rivers.—See Ex. xiv. 21. Jos. iii. 16.

Ver. 6. Who can abide?—See margin; that is, all must fall before him.

Ver. 8. With an overrunning (or overflowing) flood, &c.—This describes a complete and utter overthrow.

Ver. 10. Folden together as thorns—That is, as a thorn hedge, says Gesenius. The idea seems to be, that they and their counsels were as full of confusion and perplexity as a thorn hedge, with an infinite number of prickles in every direction; they also intoxicated themselves like drunkards: in this case, they were prepared for destruction, as stubble fully dry is to be consumed by fire.

Ver. 11. A wicked counsellor.—See margin—Or evil adviser. See exposition.

Ver. 12. Though they be quiet.—Wheeler, "At peace;" Boothroyd, "Prosperous."—And likewise many—Or numerous. Compare 2 Ki. xix. 17, 18. —[Or, If they would have been at peace so should they have been many, and so should they have been shorn, and he should have passed away.]—B.

Ver. 14. That no more of thy name be sown.—Newcome, "That thy name be no more scattered (or spread) abroad."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. He that.—See margin. See Je. i. 23. Some refer this to Sennacherib; it more properly refers to the Medes.—Dasheth—As a heavy and strong hammer breaks into pieces, and then with a mighty arm scattereth the pieces, so shall the destroyer of Nineveh do

Ver. 2. The excellency of Jacob—Perhaps Jerusalem.—The emptiers of wasters—i. e. the Assyrians, who had now wasted Israel, and carried the nation into captivity.

Ver. 3. The shield . . . . made red.—We conceive this implies the sanguinary character of the enemy. Compare Is. lxiii. 1, 2. But some think it alludes only to their dress.—With flaming (or fiery) torches.—These either preceded or accompanied their war chariots. See Orient. Lit. No. 1562.—And the fir trees—Which formed the axle-trees of these war chariots. Dr. Wheeler.

Ver. 5. Worthies.—See margin. Newcome. "Mighty men."—Defence.—See margin; namely, under which the besiegers fought.

Ver. 6. The gates, &c.—[Diodorus Siculus informs us, that "there was an ancient prophecy, received from their forefathers, that Nineveh should not be taken till the river first became an enemy to the city: and in the third year of the siege the Euphrates (Tigris) being swollen with continued rains, overflowed part of the city, and threw down 20 stadia of the wall. The king then thinking that the oracle was fulfilled, the river having manifestly become an enemy to the city, casting aside all hope of safety, and lest he should fall into the enemy's hands, built a large funeral pyre in the palace; and having collected all his gold and silver and royal vestments, together with his concubines and eunuchs, placed himself with them in a little apartment built in the midst of the pyre, and burnt them, himself, and the palace together. When the death of the king was announced by certain deserters, the enemy entered at the breach the waters had made, and took the city.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. And Huzzab.—See margin. Or, "the establishment;" meaning, the queen and the royal harem; though some think this might be the queen's proper name; and others, that the city of Nineveh itself was thus described. See *Orient. lead her as with the voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts.

8 But Nineveh is [k] of old like a pool of water: yet they shall flee away. Stand, stand, shall they cry; but none shall [l] look back.

9 Take ye the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold: [m] for there is none end of the store and glory out of all the pleasant furniture.

10 She is [n] empty, and void, and waste: and the heart melteth, and the knees smite together, and much pain is in all loins, and the faces of them all gather blackness.

11 Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding place of the young lions, where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid?

12 The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and fil'ed his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

13 Behold, I am against thee, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions: and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

CHAPTER III.

The miserable ruin of Nineveh.

WO [a] to the [b] bloody city! it is all full of lies and robbery; the prey departeth not;

2 The noise of a whip, and the noise of the rattling of the wheels, and of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots.

3 The horseman lifteth up both the [c] bright sword and the glittering spear: and there is a multitude of slain, and a great number of carcasses; and there is none end of their corpses; they stumble upon their corpses:

4 Because of the multitude of the whoredoms of the well-favoured harlot, the mistress of witchcrafts, that selleth nations through her whoredoms, and families through her witchcrafts.

5 Behold, I am against thee, saith the LORD of hosts; and I will discover thy skirts upon thy face, and I will show the nations thy nakedness, and the kingdoms thy shame.

6 And I will cast abominable filth upon thee and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazing-stock.

7 And it shall come to pass, that all they that look upon thee shall flee from thee, and say, Nineveh is laid waste: who will bemoan her? whence shall I seek comforters for thee?

8 Art thou better than [d] populous No, that was situate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea?

9 Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite; Put and Lubim were [e] thy helpers.

10 Yet was she carried away, she went into captivity: her young children also were dashed [f] in pieces at the top of all the streets: and they cast lots [g] for her honourable men, and all her great men were bound in chains.

11 Thou also shalt be [h] drunken: thou shalt be hid, thou also shalt seek strength because of the enemy.

12 All thy strong holds shall be like fig trees [i] with the first ripe figs: if they be shaken, they shall even fall into the mouth of the eater.

13 Behold, thy people in the midst of thee are [j] women: the gates of thy land shall be set wide open unto thine enemies: the fire shall devour thy [k] bars.

14 Draw thee waters for the siege, fortify thy strong holds: go into clay, and tread the mortar, make strong the brick-kiln.

15 There shall the fire devour thee; the sword shall cut thee off, it shall eat thee up like the [l] canker-worm: make thyself many as the canker-worm, make thyself many as the locusts.

16 Thou hast multiplied thy merchants above the stars of heaven: the canker-worm [m] spoileth, and fleeth away.

17 Thy crowned are as the locusts, and thy captains as the great grasshoppers, which camp in the hedges in the cold day, but when the sun ariseth they flee away, and their place is not known where they are.

the capture of the place, the captivity, lamentation, and flight of the inhabitants, the sacking of the wealthy city, and the consequent desolation and terror, are all described in the true spirit of Hebrew poetry, with many pathetic, vivid, and sublime images."—Dr. J. Smith.

In verse 7, Huzzab, meaning either the queen, or rather, Nineveh herself, is represented as a great princess, led captive with her attendants, bewailing her and their own condition, by beating their breasts, and by other expressions of sorrow. Nineveh is then compared to a vast den, and her inhabitants to lions and lionesses, strong and ferocious, yet devoted to death and to destruction.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—19. Nineveh's utter destruction.—The Prophet goes on to denounce a wo against Nineveh, for her perfidy and violence. He assigns her sins as the cause of her

C. 606, or 612. Diodorus, who, with others, ascribes the taking of it to Arbaces the Mede and Belesis the Babylonian, says, that he "dispersed the citizens in the villages, levelled the city with the ground, transferred the gold and silver, of which there were many talents, to Ecbatana, the metropolis of the Medes; and thus subverted the empire of the Assyrians."]—Bagster.——The heart melteth.—See Is. xiii. 7, 8.——The faces of them all gather blackness.—We understand this figuratively, as an expression of vexation and disappointment; but compare note on Joel ii. 6.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Bloody city.—See margin; i. e. violence and murder. [Nineveh; the threatenings against which, says Dr. Adam Clarke, are continued in a strain of invective, astonishing for its richness, variety, and energy. One may hear and see the whip crack, the horses prancing, the wheels rumbling, the chariots bounding after the galloping steeds, the reflection from the drawn and highly polished swords, and the hurled spears, like flashes of lightning dazzling the eyes, the slain lying in heaps, and horses and chariots stumbling over them!]—Bagster.

ignominious and unpitied fall, which he compares to the dreadful destruction of the famous city of No, in Egypt. He then describes the ease with which her strong holds should be taken, and pronounces that all her preparations, her numbers, opulence, and chieftains, would be of no avail, and that her tributaries would desert her. The whole concludes with introducing the nations she had oppressed, as exulting with joy at her destruction.

By comparing Nahum i. 8. with chap. iii. 13, it appears that Nineveh was to owe its destruction to the opposite elements of fire and wate., and such the Pagan author just cited assures us was its fate. When Nahum uttered his prophecy, Nineveh was the capital of the greatest empire in the world, being about 60 miles in circumference, and well peopled. See Jonah iii. 3. What probability then was there that such a city should ever be so totally destroyed, that the place where it stood should not be known? Yet Lucian, who was a native of a neighbouring country, and flourished in the second century, affirms, that no traces of Nineveh remained, even then; and now, its very situation is disputed; such is the truth and exactness of the divine predictions. (See Bishop Newton's Diss. ix., also concluding remarks on Nahum.) that the king despatched messengers to all his subjects, requiring power from them to succour him; and that he thought himself able to endure the siege, and remained in expectation of armies which were to be raised throughout his empire, relying on the oracle that the city would not be taken till the river be came its enemy. See on ch. ii. 6.]—Bagster.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF NAHUM.

[THE prophecy of NAHUM forms a regular and perfect poem. The exordium is grand and truly majestic; the preparations for the destruction of Nineveh, and the description of its downfall, are painted in the most vived colours, and are admirably clear. The destruction of Nineveh took place a little more than a century afterwards; and its utter desolation is unanimously attested both by ancient and modern writers. "But," as Bp. Newton justly observes, "what probability was there, that the capital of a great kingdom, a city which was sixty miles in compass, a city which contained so many thousand inhabitants, ... should be totally destroyed? And yet so totally was it destroyed, that the place is hardly known where it was situated. We have seen that it was taken and destroyed by the Medes and Babylonians; and what we may suppose helped to complete its ruin and devastation was Nebuchadnezzar's soon afterwards enlarging and beautifying Babylon. From that time no mention is made of Nineveh by any of the sacred writers; and the most ancient of the heathen authors, who have occasion to say any thing about it, speak of it as a city that was once great and flourishing, but now destroyed and desolate. Great as it was formerly, so little of it was remaining, that authors are not agreed even about its situation . . . . There is at this time a city called Mosul, situated upon the western side of the river Tigris, and on the opposite eastern shore are ruins of a great extent, which are said to be the ruins of Nineveh . . . . But it is more than probable, that these ruins are the remains of the Persian Nineveh, and not of the Assyrian. Even the ruins of old Nineveh have been, as I may say, long ago ruined and destroyed. Such an 'utter end' hath been made of it; and such is the truth of the Divine predictions! This perhaps may strike us the more strongly, by supposing only a parallel instance. Let us then suppose, that a person should come in the name of a prophet, preaching repentance to the people of this nation, or otherwise denouncing the destruction of the largest city within a few years.....I presume we should look upon such a prophet as a madman, and show no farther attention to his message than to deride and despise it; and yet such an event would not be more strange and incredible than the destruction and devastation of Nineveh. For Nineveh was much the larger, and much the stronger, and older city of the two: and the Assyrian empire had subsisted and flourished more ages than any form of government in this country; so that you cannot object the instability of the eastern monarchies in this case. Let us then.....suppose again, that things should succeed according to the prediction; the floods should arise, and the enemy should come, the city should be overflown and broken down, be taken and pillaged, and destroyed so totally, that even the learned could not agree about where it was situated. What would be said or thought in such a case? Whoever of posterity should read and compare the prophecy and event together, must they not by such an illustrious instance be thoroughly convinced of the providence of GOD, and of the truth of his prophet, and be ready to acknowledge, 'Verily this is the word that the LORD hath spoken, verily there is a GOD who judgeth the earth?'"]—Bagster.

THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

[OF the prophet HABAKKUK we have no certain information; but it is probable, as EPIPHANIUS and DOROTHEUS assert, that he was of the tribe of Simeon, and a native of Bethzacar. It is evident that he prophesied in Judea before the captivity, and probably, as Abp. USHER supposes, in the reign of Jehoiakim, being contemporary with Jeremiah. His genuine writings are comprised in the three chapters of which this book consists; in which the prophet, indignantly complaining of the growth of iniquity among the Jews, GOD is introduced as denouncing his vengeance to be inflicted upon them by the Chaldeans; then, making a sudden transition, he humbly expostulates with GOD for punishing them by the instrumentality of the Chaldeans; in answer to which complaint, GOD shows the certainty of the vision, and denounces the destruction of the Babylonian empire, with the judgments to be inflicted upon the Chaldeans for their ambition, cruelty, treachery, and idolatry: the prophet then implores GOD to hasten the deliverance of his people, recounting the wonderful deliverances which GOD had vouchsafed to his people, in conducting them through the wilderness, and giving them possession of the promised land; and, deeply affected with the approaching judgments, he yet resolves to rejoice in the mercy and goodness of GOD when all other comforts failed.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

1 Unto Habakkuk, complaining of the iniquity of the land, 5 is showed the fearful vengeance by the Chaldeans. 12 He complaineth that vengeance should be executed by them who are far worse.

THE burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

2 O LORD, how long shall I cry, and thou [a] wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save!

3 Why dost thou show me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? for spoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raise up strife and contention.

4 Therefore the law is slacked, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore [b] wrong judgment proceedeth.

5 ¶ Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously: for [c] I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you.

6 For, lo, I raise up the [d] Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the [e] breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling places that are not theirs.

7 They are terrible and dreadful: [f] their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

8 Their horses also are swifter than the leopards, and are more [g] fierce than the evening wolves: and their horsemen shall spread themselves, and their horsemen shall come from far; they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat.

9 They shall come all for violence: [h] their faces shall sup up as the east wind, and they shall gather the captivity as the sand.

10 And they shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them: they shall deride every strong hold; for they shall heap dust, and take it.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—17. The judgments of God on the Chaldeans.—The Prophet, contemplating with a virtuous indignation the rapid progress of vice and impiety among his countrymen, reproaches, as it were, the Almighty, for suffering such a state of things to prevail, and then suddenly bursts forth in a divine oracle, and threatens them with judgments, not only

CHAP. I. Ver. 4. The law is slacked—That is, relaxed or neglected.——Doth compass about.—More accurately, "doth circumvent."

Ver. 5. Behold ye among the heathen.—For St. Paul's quotation of this passage, see Ac. iii. 41. But for "the heathen" (Heb. "nations,") the LXX. read, as quoted by St. Paul, "ye despisers," with the difference of one letter only, as suggested by Houbigant. So also the Arabic and Syriac.——Wonder marvellously—That is, exceedingly.

Ver. 6. Hasty.—Newcome, "Swift."

Ver. 8. Horses are swifter.—[The Chaldean cavalry were proverbial for swiftness, courage, and cruelty. Oppian, speaking of the horses bred about the Euphrates, says, "They are by nature war horses, and so intrepid that neither the sight nor the roaring of the lion appals them; and, besides, are astonishingly fleet." The leopard, of all quadrupeds, is allowed to be the swiftest: they are frequently used for hunting, and seize their prey with surprising agility.]—Bagster.——Spread themselves—That is, to ravage and destroy, like the modern Tartars. So Harmer. But the late Mr. Taylor, remarking that the Hebrew (Parash) is here used both for horses and horsemen, (see Gesenius,) applies the term in both places to the former, as being, in the first place, a technical term, implying the ground they cover; and, in the second place, to their being a foreign breed, "from afar," perhaps Egyptian. See Taylor's Expos. Index.

Ver. 9. Their faces shall sup up.—See margin. So Peters, Newcome, &c. The meaning appears to us to be, that as the east wind blast and destroys every thing within its reach, so these Chaldeans should gather up every thing within their reach, as is said, ver. 15.——Their faces, according to the Hebrew idiom, means, their presence; which agrees with the clause following; gather the captivity, i. e. the captives.

Ver. 10. They shall heap dust (or earth) and take it.—The Chaldee explains

11 Then shall his mind change, and he shall pass over, and offend, imputing this his power unto his god.

12 ¶ Art thou not from everlasting, O LORD my God, my Holy One? we shall not die. O LORD, thou hast ordained them for judgment; and, O mighty [i] God, thou hast [j] established them for correction.

13 Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on [k] iniquity: wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he?

14 And makest men as the fishes of the sea, as the [l] creeping things, that have no ruler over them?

15 They take up all of them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their [m] drag: therefore they rejoice and are glad.

16 Therefore [n] they sacrifice unto their net, and burn incense unto their drag; because by them their portion is fat, and their meat [o] plenteous.

17 Shall they therefore empty their net, and not spare continually to slay the nations?

CHAPTER II.

1 Unto Habakkuk, waiting for an answer, is showed that he must wait by faith. 5 The judgment upon the Chaldean for insatiableness, 9 for covetousness, 12 for cruelty, 15 for drunkenness, 18 and for idolatry.

I WILL stand upon my watch, and set me upon the [a] tower, and [b] will watch to see what he will say [c] unto me, and what I shall answer [d] when I am reproved.

2 ¶ And the LORD answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it.

3 For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.

4 Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but [e] the just shall live by his faith.

5 ¶ [f] Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people:

6 Shall not all these take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, [g] Wo to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay!

7 Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?

8 Because [h] thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee; because of men's [i] blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

9 ¶ Wo to him that [j] coveteth an evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the [k] power of evil!

10 Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off many people, and hast sinned against thy soul.

11 For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the [l] beam out of the timber shall [m] answer it.

12 ¶ Wo to him that buildeth a town with [n] blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity!

13 Behold, is it not of the LORD of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves [o] for very vanity?

alarming, but incredible, to be inflicted by the agency of the Chaldeans, who should themselves be afterwards visited for their idolatry and other sins.

The Prophet closes with an animated appeal to the Almighty against the Chaldean conquerors, as attributing to themselves all the glory of their achievements, and as themselves guilty of the very sins they were employed to correct in others.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—20. The necessity of faith and patience.—A Prophet is a spiritual watchman, and one part of his duty is, to wait for divine communications. So did Isaiah, (chap. xxi. 8.) and so Habakkuk in the chapter now before us. Having appealed to the divine Being in behalf of his country, he expects, and speedily receives, an answer, in a prophetic vision, which he is ordered to record. At the same time he is guarded against expecting an immediate fulfilment of the whole, by being told that the vision was for an appointed time; but he is encouraged to wait, by an assurance that it shall be punctually fulfilled whenever that time shall come.

Bishop Chandler, however, considers this as a direct prophecy of Messiah, who is elsewhere described as "He that should come," (Mat. ix. 3,) and whose time of coming, both first and second, is designated "the end, the latter days." &c. (See Deut. viii. 19, 23; xii. 4, &c.) Of him also it might be justly said, "He shall break forth as the morning," and not disappoint the expectation of those who "waited for the salvation of Israel." It is therefore added, "though he tarry wait for him because he will surely come." He will not be behind the appointed period. But what connexion shall we trace between the passage so explained and the verse following? The inspired author of the Epistle to the Hebrews will perhaps give us a clue to this. The humble believer (and there are no un-humbled believers) is upright and righteous before God, and by his faith, lives and triumphs; but the proud man, (whose soul is lifted up,) he falls back, or withdraws in the hour of trial; apostatizes, and is lost. If we apply this to the particular circumstances of either Christ's first or second coming, it will harmonize with this connexion. Doubtless many infidels have said concerning both, "Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Peter iii. 4.) and from the apparent delay of his incarnation, in the first instance, and in the next, from a like apparent delay in his second coming, have renounced their profession, and denied the faith.

What relation this passage has to the fall of the Chaldeans, is not so easy to ascertain. The coming of Messiah was so this of raising mounds of earth, as was the practice of those times, by which they might scale and attack the walls.

Ver. 11. Then shall his (or their) mind change—That is, corrupted by their extraordinary successes, they will attribute all to themselves, or to their idols, and thus becoming guilty, call down punishment on themselves.

Ver. 12. O mighty God.—See De. xxxii. 4. Boothroyd, "Thou hast founded them (as) a rock for correction;" Newcome, "to correct us."

Ver. 13. Canst not look—That is, with pleasure, or endurance; hence it follows, Wherefore lookest thou upon them . . . . and holdest thy tongue—Newcome, "Art silent," &c.

Ver. 14. And makest men—That is, why dost thou suffer thy people to be taken, and swallowed up by them, as if they were fishes, &c.

Ver. 16. Their drag—A part of their fishing tackle; the meaning is, they attribute every thing to their own merits, or their idols.——[They ascribed their victory to their sword and armour, which they worshipped instead of God. So King Mezentius, one of the worst characters in the Æneid of Virgil, is represented as invoking his own right hand, and his spear, in battle.]—Bagster. Ward (the Missionary) says, "The Hindoos annually worship the implements of their trade."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. When I am reproved—That is, in case what I deliver should be disputed; but most of the ancient versions and modern critics read, "What he (the Lord) would reply to my arguing;" referring to the close of the preceding chapter. So Boothroyd; but Newcome hesitates.

Ver. 2. Upon tables—Or tablets, which were commonly hung up in public places, (like our placards,) being written in large and bold characters.——That he may run that readeth—That is, so legible that it may be read while running.

Ver. 3. It shall speak and not lie—That is, not deceive, but surely be fulfilled at the appointed time; but Bishop Chandler renders this by a personal pronoun, He, as the Hebrew certainly will bear; and so is the text rendered by the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. x. 37. instead of "It shall speak," he reads, "He shall break forth," alluding to the breaking of the day, as the Hebrew verb is used. Cant. ii. 17; iv. 6.——Though it tarry.—Chandler, "Though he tarry, wait for him; he will not go beyond, (or be after,) namely, the appointed time." The Hebrew word here used is totally distinct from that rendered tarry in the preceding member of the verse.

Ver. 4. His soul which is lifted up, is not upright.—This, as a general proposition, is incontrovertible, "the Lord abhorreth the proud." Prov. xvi. 5.

Ver. 5. Ye also.—Newcome, "Moreover;" Boothroyd, "Truly."

Ver. 9. Power of evil.—See margin. The grasp of evil.

Ver. 10. Thou hast consulted.—Boothroyd, "Devised" shame.——Sinned against thy soul—That is, rendered thyself guilty.

Ver. 11. For the stone . . . . and the beam.—The ancients used to lay beams of timber in their stone walls, to bind them. Juvenal (the Roman poet) has a passage which well illustrates this:

"Should trembling slaves not dare to squeak, Beasts, dogs, and posts, and marble walls will speak."—Sat. xi

Ver. 12. Wo to him, &c.—[The celebrated and costly buildings of Babylon had been erected by the spoils of conquered nations, and by the blood of multitudes; and, in the righteous judgment of God, the royal family would soon be ruined, the seat of empire removed, and the city itself finally destroyed. Houses built, and fortunes made by such iniquitous means, in most cases become as chaff before the whirlwind of God's indignation.

Hark! he answers. Wild tornadoes,
Strewing yonder seas with wrecks,
Wasting towns, plantations, meadows,
Are the voice with which he speaks."—Cowper

Ver. 13. Labour in the fire.—See Jer. li. 58.

14 For the earth shall be filled [p] with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

15 ¶ Wo unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness!

16 Thou art filled [q] with shame [r] for glory: drink thou also, and let thy foreskin be uncovered: the cup [s] of the LORD's right hand shall be turned unto thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory.

17 For the violence of Lebanon shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts, which made them afraid, because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

18 ¶ What profiteth the graven image that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a teacher of lies, that the [t] maker of his work trusteth therein, to make dumb idols?

19 Wo unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb stone, Arise, it shall teach! Behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it.

20 But the LORD is in his holy [u] temple: [v] let all the earth keep silence before him.

CHAPTER III.

Habakkuk in his prayer trembleth at God's majesty. 17 The confidence of his faith.

A PRAYER of Habakkuk the prophet [a] upon Shigionoth.

2 O LORD, I have heard thy [b] speech, and was afraid: O LORD, [c] revive [d] thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy.

3 ¶ God came from [e] Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise.

4 And his brightness was as the light; he had [f] horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power.

5 Before him went the pestilence, and burning [g] coals went forth at his feet.

6 He stood, and measured the earth: he beheld, and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow: his ways [h] are everlasting.

7 I saw the tents of [i] Cushan [j] in affliction: and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble.

8 Was the LORD displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thy horses and thy chariots [k] of salvation?

9 Thy bow was made quite naked, according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word. Selah. Thou didst cleave [l] the earth with rivers.

10 The mountains saw thee, and they trembled: the overflowing of the water passed by: the deep uttered his voice, and lifted up his hands on high.

11 The [m] sun and moon stood still in their habitation: [n] at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

12 Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thresh the heathen in anger.

13 Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, even for salvation with thine anointed; thou woundedst the head [o] out of the house of the wicked, by [p] discovering the foundation unto the neck. Selah.

important a part of the Old Testament predictions, that it seems, in many cases, abruptly introduced, and with but a remote connexion to the subject immediately in hand. The 5th verse evidently refers to Nebuchadnezzar, who is brought in as a contrast to the humble believer in the preceding verses. The particle which introduces this verse, is very general and indefinite; we should render it, "But truly, he that transgresseth through wine; a proud man, and one who is never quiet; whose avarice and ambition are as insatiable as death and the grave; who grasps at the possession of all countries, and at the subjugation of the world; shall not all the people whom he has subdued take up a parable against him, saying, Wo to him that increaseth what is not his! How long will he lade himself with thick clay?" &c. Such we take to be the general meaning of this passage, and such was the character of the Chaldean monarch, who was himself, in his turn, to be subdued, reproached, insulted, and subjugated, partly in his own person, and partly in his immediate successors. The rest of the chapter goes on with exposing the other parts of this character, as a perfect contrast to the humble and pious believer in the true God and his Messiah.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—19. An Ode of prayer and praise.—"The Prophet having seen the calamities which were to be brought on his country by the ministry of the Chaldeans, and the punishments which awaited the Chaldeans themselves, partly struck with terror, and partly revived with hope and confidence in the divine mercy, beseeches God to hasten the redemption of his people. Such a petition would naturally lead his thoughts to the astonishing deliverance which God vouchsafed to the same people of old; and the inference from it was obvious, that he could, with the same ease, deliver their posterity now. But hurried on by the fire and impetuosity of his spirit, he disdains to wait the process of connecting these ideas, and bounds at once into the midst of his subject: "God came from Teman," &c. He goes on to describe the majesty and might which God displayed in conducting his people to the land of promise; selecting the most remarkable circumstances, and clothing them in the most lofty language. As he goes along, his fancy becomes more glowing, till at length he is transported to the scene of action, and becomes an eye-witness of the wonders he describes: "I beheld the tents of Cushan in affliction." After having touched on the principal circumstances of that deliverance which he celebrates, he returns to what passed before them in Egypt, his enthusiasm having led him to begin in the midst of his subject; and at last he ends the hymn as he began it, with expressing his awe of the divine judgments, and his firm trust in the mercy and goodness of God while under them; and that in terms of such singular beauty, elegance, and sublimity, as to form a very proper conclusion to this admirable piece of divine composition. It would seem, from the title, and from the note annexed to the end, that it was set to music, and sung in the service of the temple."—Dr. J. Smith.

This last idea receives confirmation from the repeated use of the term Selah in this Ode, which marked certain pauses in the music. (See note.) It is generally agreed that Habakkuk prophesied before the captivity, though but a short time; and it is probable that when Jehoiakim was carried off to Babylon, with all the chief people, (2 Kings xxiv. 14.) the musical establishment of the Temple was broken up; this prophecy was, therefore, probably written and sung in the Temple before this period.

Ver. 14. The earth shall be filled, &c.—This may refer primarily to the spread of the knowledge of the true God upon Nebuchadnezzar's conversion. Dan. iv. 34—37. Compare Isa. xi. 9.

Ver. 17. Violence of Lebanon, &c.—In felling its trees, in stripping it of cattle, and perhaps of wild beasts, for show, and for skins.

Ver. 18. The maker of his work.—See margin. The idol maker.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Shigionoth.—See note on the title of Ps. vii. Newcome agrees with those who take this for a musical instrument of great compass; but we know nothing of any such instrument; and had this referred to an instrument, it would doubtless have been connected with the last verse. We are satisfied that the sense given to the term in the above note, is just; namely, that of elegy, a grave and solemn poem.

Ver. 2. O Lord, I have heard.—Heb. "Hearing, I have heard (and) feared." ——Make known.—That is, "make (thyself) known." Bishop Lowth explains "in the midst of the years," to mean, "within a fixed time;" i. e. the time predicted.

Ver. 3. God came from Teman.—The same able critic considers this as a sudden burst of poetic ardour, referring back to God's wonderful appearances on the behalf of Israel. See Deut. xxxiii. 1. &c. and exposition. Teman was in Moab. See Jer. xlix. 7. Amos i. 12. Obad. 9.——Selah.—See note on Ps. iii. 2.

Ver. 4. He had horns coming out of his hand.—The Hebrew verb signifies to shine, and the noun, "a pencil, or cone of rays, issuing from a point, and diverging into the shape of a horn." Newcome. Compare Deut. xxxiii. 2, 3, and notes.——There (in his hand, or at his right hand, Deut. xxxiii. 3.) was the hiding of his power—That is, the infinity of his power is concealed from us by the immensity of his glory.

Ver. 5. And burning coals.—Newcome, "Flashes of fire went after him." English readers should remember, that pit-coal (which we burn) was unknown to the Hebrews; when, therefore, we read of coals, we should understand flames, or flaming brands.

Ver. 6. Scattered.—Newcome, "Broken;" namely, by fire and earthquake.

Ver. 7. Cushan—Or the Arabian Cushites.

Ver. 9. Thy bow was made quite naked (or bare.)—Bows were generally kept in cases, to preserve them from the weather.

Ver. 11. At the light, &c.—Newcome, "By their light," and 'by their shining;" i. e. of the sun and moon.

Ver. 13. Unto the neck.—Newcome, "The rock."

14 Thou didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages: they [q] came out as a whirlwind to scatter me: their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly.

15 Thou didst walk through the sea with thy horses, through the [r] heap of great waters.

Ver. 17. Fig-tree shall not blossom, &c.—[This verse most nervously paints the desolate state of Judea during the captivity; and the two following verses contain the finest display of the prophet's resignation, confidence, and holy triumph in the God of his salvation. He saw that the evil, which the Spirit of God enabled him to paint in all its calamitous circumstances, was at hand, and unavoidable; he submitted to this dispensation of Providence; and confided in his mercy and goodness.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. He will make my feet like hinds' feet—That is, he will renew my strength and activity.—To the chief singer, &c.—We have before seen, 1 Kings x. 12, that Solomon "made harps and psalteries for singers;" and from comparing these passages we may infer, that the principal singers in the temple, like the Grecian bards, accompanied themselves in singing. See exposition of Psalm iv.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

[HABAKKUK, as a poet, holds a high rank among the Hebrew prophets. The beautiful connexion between the parts of his prophecy, its diction, imagery, spirit, and sublimity, are particularly striking, and cannot be too much admired. The prayer of Habakkuk, in particular, is allowed by the best judges to be a masterpiece of its kind; and it is adduced by Bishop Lowth as one of the most perfect specimens of the Hebrew ode. The prophet illustrates the subject of the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian slavery throughout "with equal magnificence, selecting from such an assemblage of miraculous incidents the most noble and important, displaying them in the most splendid colours, and embellishing them with the sublimest imagery, figures, and diction; the dignity of which is so heightened and recommended by the superior elegance of the conclusion, that were it not for a few shades, which the hand of time has apparently cast over it in two or three passages, no composition of the kind would, I believe, appear more elegant, or more perfect, than this poem."]—B.

THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH.

[ZEPHANIAH, according to Epiphanius, was of the tribe of Simeon, and of mount Sarabatha, or Baratha; but, though he mentions his ancestors for no less than four generations, yet nothing certain can be inferred as to what family he belonged. We learn, however, from the commencement of his prophecy, that he delivered his predictions in the reign of Josiah king of Judah; and, from the description he gives of the disorders which then prevailed, it is evident that it must have been before the reformation made by Josiah, in the eighteenth year of his reign; and as he predicts the destruction of Nineveh, which, as Calmet remarks, could not have taken place before the sixteenth of Josiah, we must therefore place his prophecy about the beginning of the reign of Josiah, or from B. C. 640 to 609. The book of Zephaniah consists of three chapters; in which the prophet denounces the wrath of God against Judah and Jerusalem for idolatry and apostacy; predicts terrible judgments coming upon sinners of different descriptions; exhorts them to repentance, as the only mean to avert the Divine vengeance; prophesies against the Philistines, Moabites and Ammonites, Ethiopians and Assyrians; sharply rebukes Jerusalem for various aggravated sins; and predicts their future restoration, and the ultimate prosperous state of the church in the days of the Messiah.]—B.

God's severe judgment against Judah for divers sins.

THE word of the LORD which came unto Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon, king of Judah.

3 I will consume man and beast, I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea, and the [c] stumbling-blocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the land, saith the LORD.

4 I will also stretch out my hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off [d] the remnant of Baal from this place, and the name of the Chemarims with the priests;

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—18. God's judgments denounced against Judah.—Idolaters, and sinners of several other denominations, are particularly threatened, and the approaching visitation enlarged on, by the addition of several aggravating circumstances. These idolaters, it seems, had not wholly renounced the service of Jehovah; but they united with it idol worship: they served God and Baal, or rather Malchom, (both representatives of the sun,) whom they honoured as the king of heaven. He had also his priests and sacrificers, who worshipped him upon the house-tops. We may, however, depend upon it, that all attempts to serve God and Baal, or Moloch, or Mammon, will only bring confusion and destruction on the worshippers.

CHAP. I. Ver. 2. I will utterly consume.—See margin. Heb. "Consuming I will consume," all things; i. e. man and beast, ver. 3.

Ver. 3. The stumbling-blocks with (Newcome, "of") the wicked—That is, their idols.

Ver. 4. Cut off the remnant.—This probably refers in the first instance to the reformation which Josiah effected, and also to the final extirpation of the devotees of Baal, with the priests of the tribe of Levi who united with them in their worship, by the Chaldeans.]—Bagster ——Chemarims.—Newcome, "Sacrificers;" i. e. to Baal. See Hos. x. 5, and note. The name implies that they were clothed in black, which was generally the case with the idolatrous priests. See Orient. Lit. No. 1097.

Ver. 5. Malchah—Or "Malchom," or "Moloch;" i. e. "the king," the same idol, probably, as Baal, both pointing to the sun, the king, or lord of heaven.

Ver. 7. He hath bid (or bidden) his guests.—[The Babylonians, whom he had commissioned to destroy them. There is here a beautiful allusion to the custom of inviting guests to a festival sacrifice.]—Bagster. See Rev xix. 17, 18.

Ver. 8. Strange apparel.—The idolaters appear to have worn a peculiar dress in their worship. See 2 Kings x. 22.

Ver. 9. Leap on (or over) the threshold—That is, to invade their neighbour's premises: but query? May not this refer to some idolatrous or superstitious rite now unknown.—[Or, "that leap over the threshold," by which is probably meant the Philistines, who, after the time that Dagon fell before the ark and was broken on the threshold, leaped over it when entering his temple.]—B.

Ver. 10. Crashing.—Newcome, "Breach."

Ver. 11. Maktesh.—"Lower city," houses in the valleys, between the hills, where the lower order of tradesmen dwelt.—They that bear silver—That is, the money-changers. Newcome.

Ver. 12. With candles.—Newcome, "Lights," perhaps "torches;" implying a strict search.—Settled on their lees.—Heb. "Curdled," like wine not cleared. See Jer. xlviii. 11.

that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are [q] settled [r] on their lees: that say [s] in their heart, The LORD will not do good, neither will he do evil.

13 Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation: they shall also build houses, but not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

14 The great day of the LORD is [t] near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the LORD: the mighty [u] man shall cry there bitterly.

15 That [v] day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of [w] darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness,

16 A day of the [x] trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers.

17 And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind [y] men, because they have sinned against the LORD: and their blood [z] shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung.

18 Neither their [a] silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the LORD's wrath; [b]but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

CHAPTER II.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 The judgment of the Philistines, 8 of Moab and Ammon, 12 of Ethiopia and Assyria.

GATHER [a] yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation not [b] desired;

2 Before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the [c] chaff, before the fierce anger [d] of the LORD come upon you, before [e] the day of the LORD's anger come upon you.

3 Seek [f] ye the LORD, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his [g] judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be [h] ye shall be hid in the day of the LORD's anger.

4 ¶ For Gaza [i] shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noon-day, and Ekron shall be rooted up.

5 Wo unto the inhabitants of the sea coasts, the nation of the [j] Cherethites! the word of the LORD is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

6 And the sea coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

7 And the coast shall be for the [k] remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed thereupon; in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening: [l] for the LORD their God shall visit [m] them, and turn away [n] their captivity.

8 ¶ I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border.

9 Therefore as I live, saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely [o] Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and salt pits, and a perpetual desolation: the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.

10 This shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the LORD of hosts.

11 The LORD will be terrible unto them: for he will [p] famish all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

12 ¶ Ye Ethiopians [q] also, ye shall be slain by my sword.

13 ¶ And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy [r] Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness.

14 And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the [s] cormorant and the bittern shall lodge in the [t] upper lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows: desolation shall be in the thresholds: [u] for he shall uncover the cedar work.

15 This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said [v] in her heart, I am, and there is none beside me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

CHAPTER III.

1 A sharp reproof of Jerusalem for divers sins. 8 An exhortation to wait for the restoration of Israel, 14 and to rejoice for their salvation by God.

WO to [a] her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city!

2 She obeyed not the voice; she received not [b] correction; she trusted not in the LORD; she drew not near to her God.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—15. Judgments on the Philistines and other nations.—The Prophet, having declared the judgments which were ready to fall upon his people, exhorts them to sincere repentence, before these judgments overtake them. He then foretels the fate of other neighbouring and hostile nations, the Philistines, Moabites, and Ammonites, Ethiopians and Assyrians. In the close of the chapter, Nineveh, reduced to ruins, is beautifully contrasted with its former flourishing condition. Ah! what is all the strength and riches, the pomp and splendour of Nineveh, or Babylon, when the Almighty enters into judgment with it! For many years, no doubt, every passing stranger was ready to point with his hand, and say, "There was Nineveh, and there Babylon!" But now the very site of those mighty cities is only known by conjecture.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—20. Promises of future restoration to Judah and Jerusalem, with exhortations to gratitude and praise.—The picture here drawn, by Zephaniah's inspired pencil, of the rulers and higher classes of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, presents features of horror and disgust. Her princes roaring lions; her judges ravening wolves, so covetous of prey, that they stop not to devour what they obtain, but hide it in their dens, and prowl again for more. Her prophets full of levity, and treacherous; and her priests polluting the sanctuary, and wresting the law of God! But the Lord will arise to judgment, and make a prey of them who have preyed upon his church.

In the midst of this depraved and guilty nation, there is yet "a poor and afflicted people;" and while the rich and great are consigned to deserved destruction, God will bring his poor and humble suppliants, even from beyond the ri-

3 Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow.

4 Her prophets [c] are light and treacherous persons: her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law.

5 The [d] just LORD is in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: [e] every morning doth he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not; but the unjust knoweth no [f] shame.

6 I have cut off the nations: their [g] towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely [h] thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so their dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose [i] early, and corrupted all their doings.

8 ¶ Therefore wait [j] ye upon me, saith the LORD, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the [k] nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth [l] shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

9 For then will I turn to the people a pure [m] language, that they may [n] all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one [o] consent.

10 From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia [p] my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

11 In that day shalt thou not be ashamed [q] for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me: for then I will take away out of the midst of thee them that rejoice in thy pride, and thou shalt no more be haughty [r] because of my holy mountain.

12 I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor [s] people, and they shall trust in the name of the LORD.

13 The remnant of Israel shall not do [t] iniquity, nor speak [u] lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

14 ¶ [v] Sing, O daughter of Zion, shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem.

15 The LORD hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out [w] thine enemy: the king of Israel, even the LORD, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more.

16 In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not: and to Zion, Let not thy hands be [x] slack.

17 The LORD thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice [y] over thee with joy; he will [z] rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing.

18 I will gather them that are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom [a] the reproach of it was a burden.

19 Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee: and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will [b] get them praise and fame in every land [c] where they have been put to shame.

20 At [d] that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the LORD.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH.

"ZEPHANIAH and Jeremiah resemble each other so much in those parts where they treat of the idolatries and wickedness that prevailed in their time, that Isidore asserts, that Zephaniah was the abbreviator of Jeremiah; but he apparently prophesied before Jeremiah; and the latter seems to speak of those abuses as partially removed, which the former describes as present in the most flagitious extent. Compare Zeph. i. 4, 5, 9, with Jer. ii. 5, 20, 32. Zephaniah conspired with Josiah in his righteous design of bringing back the people to the worship and obedience of the true God. The style is poetical; but it is not distinguished by any peculiar elegance or beauty, though generally animated and impressed."—Gray's Key.

THE BOOK OF HAGGAI.

[Of the parentage of the prophet Haggai we know nothing; but the general opinion, founded on the assertion of Epiphanius, is, that he was born at Babylon, during the captivity, and was one of the Jews who returned with Zerubbabel in consequence of the edict of Cyrus. The building of the temple having been interrupted for about fourteen years, in consequence of the ill offices of the neighbouring satraps, who prejudiced the mind of the Persian monarch against the Jews; Darius Hystaspes, in the second year of his reign, renewed the permission formerly granted by Cyrus; and Haggai was sent to encourage his countrymen to proceed with the work. The prophet reproves the delay of the Jews in building the temple, and exhorts them to proceed; they obey the prophet's message, and receive encouragement from God; the prophet comforts the old men, who wept at the diminished magnificence of the second temple, by assuring them that its glory should be greater than that of the first by the presence of the Messiah; he shows that their sins had deprived them of God's blessing, and promises them fruitful harvests from that day forward, and predicts the prosperity of the Messiah's kingdom, under that of Zerubbabel, his ancestor and type.—The style of this Prophet is, generally, plain and prosaic; interspersed, however, with some passages of a highly poetic character

CHAPTER I.

1 Haggai reproveth the people for neglecting the building of the house. 7 He inciteth them to the building. 12 He promiseth God's assistance to them being forward.

IN the second year [a] of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the LORD by [b] Haggai the prophet unto [c] Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, [d] governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of [e] Josedech, the high priest, saying,

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—15. Haggai excites and encourages the Jews to build the house of God.—The prophet reproves them for their delay, and want of zeal in erecting the house of God, while they were diligent and active in erecting elegant and commodious dwellings for themselves; and admonishes them that the late unproductive seasons with which they had been visited, had been sent to punish their negligence in that respect. This produced the desired effect, especially upon the governor and high priest, and the work was resumed with renewed vigour.

"By the hand of Haggai."—Shealtiel.—[Shealtiel, is exactly the same in the original with Salathiel, and Josedech, with *Jehozadak. 2 ¶ Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the LORD's house should be built.

3 Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

4 Is [f] it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?

5 Now therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts; [g] consider [h] your ways.

6 Ye have sown [i] much, and bring in little; ye [j] eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag [k] with holes.

7 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

9 Ye looked [l] for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow [m] upon it. Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because of my house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house.

10 Therefore [n] the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.

11 And I called for a drought [o] upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

12 ¶ Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the LORD.

13 Then spake Haggai the LORD's [p] messenger in the LORD's message unto the people saying, I [q] am with you, saith the LORD.

14 ¶ And the LORD [r] stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and [s] they came and did work in the house of the LORD of hosts, their God, 15 In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king.

CHAPTER II.

1 He encourageth the people to the work, by promise of greater glory to the second temple than was in the first. 10 In the type of holy things and unclean he showeth their sins hindered the work. 20 God's promise to Zerubbabel.

IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD [a] by the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who [b] is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as [c] nothing?

4 Yet now be [d] strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the LORD; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the LORD, and work: for I [e] am with you, saith the LORD of hosts:

5 According to the word [f] that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my spirit [g] remaineth among you: fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; Yet once, it is a little while, and [h] I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land;

7 And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall [i] come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the LORD of hosts.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—23. The future glory of the church to exceed its former glory.—When this prophecy was uttered (about four years before the temple was finished, and about 520 B. C.) it appears that some aged men among the Jews were greatly dispirited, on account of this second temple being, in its appearance, so much inferior to the former. (See Ezra iii. 12.) To animate and encourage them in the work, the Prophet solemnly assures them that the glory of this second temple (or the second glory of this temple) should exceed the former, through its being honoured with the presence of the Messiah, whose presence alone was more than a counterbalance to every supposable deficiency. And he, who was exhibited in the types and prophecies as the glory of the old dispensation, should now be exhibited as the glory of the new dispensation, in his miracles and discourses, life, death, and resurrection.

The latter part of the chapter adverts to subjects more temporary and peculiar, not only to the Jews, but to that generation. Two questions are put to the priests, relative to ceremonial pollution, and from these an inference is drawn, that if such apparently trivial circumstances rendered them ceremonially unclean, much more would their neglect of God's house and worship render them so morally, and subject them to the divine displeasure. This is mentioned to account for their late unfruitful seasons, and ill success in agricultural pursuits.

The last four verses appear of doubtful interpretation. Who is intended by Zerubbabel? Surely it did not require again to shake heaven and earth, to promote the man who was already in possession of the government. The next Prophet will exhibit this Zerubbabel as a type of Christ (Zech. iv. 7.) and the genealogies of the New Testament inform us, that he was the lineal ancestor of our Lord, (Mat. ii. 12; Luke iii. 27;) whom Isaiah introduces as God's elect (servant,) in whom his soul delighteth! (Isa. xlii. 1.)

the son of Josedech—Which Josedech was the son of Seraiah, who was high-priest when Jerusalem was taken, and was slain at Riblah. 2 Kings xxv. 18—24.

Ver. 4. Ceiled houses.—Such, it appears, were a luxury at this period.—And this house lie waste.—Its foundation had been laid nearly fifteen years before. Ezra iii. 8.

Ver. 9. Blow upon it.—Heb. "Snuff at it," as animals when they refuse their provender. Newcome. [They had used all proper means in the cultivation of their lands, and had "sown much;" but when they rationally entertained the most sanguine expectations of a large increase, they were strangely disappointed; and even what they had brought home was unaccountably wasted, as if the Lord had blown "upon it," and driven it away! And the reason was, because they neglected the temple and left it in ruins, whilst they eagerly employed themselves in building and decorating their own houses; therefore they were visited by drought and famine, and by various diseases on man and beast.]—Bagster.

CHAP. II. Ver. 6. Yet once, it is a little while.—Newcome, "Yet once (more; m) a short (time.")—I will shake the heavens, &c.—This refers to the numerous revolutions, civil and religious, which preceded the appearance of our Lord.—[This refers to a most important change or revolution, which should take place during the continuance of this temple, introducing a new and more glorious state of the church. "Yet once more" Jehovah intended to change entirely its external form, and to bring in that dispensation which should endure to the end. This would be "a little while," compared with that which had elapsed from the first promise of the Messiah, or even from the giving of the law. Then the Lord would "shake the heavens and the earth:" various convulsions and changes would take place in the Jewish church and state, which would end in the abrogation of the ritual law, and the ruin of their civil government, attended with tempests, earthquakes, &c. These events would be preceded by great revolutions among the nations; the Persian monarchy would be subverted by that of the Greeks, and that by the Romans; and at the appointed time, the Messiah, "the desire of all nations," whom all nations should and would desire, He, "in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed," would come, and fill that "house with glory."]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. The desire of all nations.—Most Christian commentators apply this to the Messiah; but against this a critical objection has been raised, from the verb being plural, whereas the noun is singular. For answer to this, it is sufficient to refer to the late Professor Dathe, as quoted by Dr. Pye Smith. Archbishop Newcome, however, thinks the noun also was originally plural, with a vau inserted, which is now supplied by a Masoretic point. Nor is the noun being plural an objection of any weight, as applied to an individual, since the Hebrews often use plural nouns by way of excellence, and this, in particular, is so used in reference to Messiah. Cant. v. 16. See Bishop Newcome. Compare also, in the Hebrew, Dan. xi. 37, 43. But to obviate all objections, Bishop Chandler reads, "And he shall come, even the desire of all nations." He supposes that the vau prefixed to the verb, should be prefixed to the noun immediately following; an error easily accounted for, as originally the words were not divided. See concluding remarks on Haggai.

Ver. 8. The silver is mine, &c.—Many Jewish commentators, and some others, consider this clause as explaining ver. 7. "The silver and the gold," say they, "are the desirable things of all nations;" but, after all, in silver and gold the second temple was comparatively poor, nor does this agree with the solemnity of the introduction; it needed not, surely, to shake all nations, and even heaven and earth, to produce those presents which had been already made by Cyrus and his successors; besides, the mention of these things seems rather with a view to undervalue, than to extol them. Compare Ps. l. 9—12.

9 The glory [k] of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the LORD of hosts: and in this place will I give [l] peace, saith the LORD of hosts.

10 ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ask now the priests [m] concerning the law, saying,

12 If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch [n] any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, So [o] is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the LORD:

16 Since those days were, when [p] one came to a heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

17 I smote [q] you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labours of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 Consider now from this day and upward from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the [r] day that the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, consider it.

19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the [s] vine, and the fig tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive tree, hath not brought forth: from this day will I bless you.

20 ¶ And again the word of the LORD came unto Haggai in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying,

21 Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake [t] the heavens and the earth;

22 And I will overthrow [u] the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and [v] I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother.

23 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the LORD, and will make thee as a [w] signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the LORD of hosts.

Ver. 9. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than the former.—[Whoever compares the description of the temple of Solomon, in the first book of Kings, with the most splendid accounts of the second temple, however adorned with costly stones and other magnificent decorations in after ages, must perceive, that the former, being wholly overlaid with pure gold, was incomparably more glorious than the latter in its greatest magnificence; and the Jews themselves allow, that the ark of the covenant, fire from heaven, the Urim and Thummim, the anointing oil, the Shechinah, or visible glory, and the Spirit of prophecy, which distinguished the former temple, were wanting in this. In nothing, in fact, could the second temple excel the first in glory, except in the personal presence of "the Desire of all nations," He who is "the glory of the Lord," and the true temple "in whom dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," and who was the true Shechinah of which that of Solomon's temple was merely a type. And if it be admitted that the presence of the promised Messiah was intended, then it will follow that "Jesus of Nazareth" was He; for the second temple, in which as the "Prince of peace" he preached peace and reconciliation with God, has been utterly destroyed for upwards of seventeen hundred years.]—Bagster. But a query has been here raised, whether the temple in our Lord's time can be called the second temple, having, according to Josephus, been again rebuilt by Herod. On this Dr. Boothroyd says, "It may, I think, be doubted whether the whole was rebuilt by Herod. It is probable that what Herod did, was repairing certain parts, erecting others, and making the whole as perfect and complete as possible; and though ever so much improved, yet it would be regarded as the same house. I know that Josephus says, that Herod took away the old foundations, and laid others; but I think this must be confined to such parts as were decayed; or else how could the divine service have been observed? Rabbi Joseph, Maimonides, and other Jewish authors, always speak of this as a second temple." See the authors distinctly cited by Archbishop Newcome. See also concluding remarks on Haggai. After all, perhaps the words might be translated, "The latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former." So Parkhurst, who refers to the Hebrew of Jer. ii. 34, for a similar construction. Heb. Lex. in Chamed, 3d edit., and so Dr. Blayney. Dr. Pye Smith renders it, "Great shall be the glory of this house, the latter above the former."—In this place I will give peace.—Peace, with the Hebrews, included every blessing, and it might here have reference personally to him who is our peace.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF HAGGAI.

IN order to encourage and cheer those who fondly remembered the glorious structure which had been raised by Solomon, and who, perhaps, impressed with the description furnished by Ezekiel, must have lamented the comparative meanness of the present building, the prophet Haggai declares to them in the name of the Lord, that the glory of this latter house, though it might appear as nothing in their eyes, should be greater than that of the former. A glory more apparent and manifest than was that clouded and symbolical representation of the Divine Majesty, which overshadowed the mercy-seat in the old temple; and which prefigured only that incarnate presence of the Messiah in whom "dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," (Col. ii. 6,) and from this temple, which though not decorated with gold and silver should thus surpass the former in glory, should appear the "Prince of peace," (ch. ii. 9. compared with Ep. ii. 14.) This illustrious prophecy the ancient Jews correctly applied to the Messiah, though some modern writers have made objections to its exact fulfilment by the advent of Christ. It has been pretended, that the temple in which our Saviour appeared was in reality not a second, but a third temple, rebuilt by Herod; but it is certain, that whatever alterations and additions were made by Herod, it did not constitute an entirely new building. There was a temple for the worship of Jehovah according to the law, during all the forty-six years which were spent in repairing or rebuilding it; and consequently, one part must have been taken down at once, as far as was needful for the purpose, and no more: but the old foundations, and the most essential parts of the structure, no doubt remained. In fact, no nominal distinction between Zerubbabel's and Herod's temple was ever made by the Jews; but, in popular language, both these structures were spoken of as the second temple. On one occasion, Josephus himself mentions only two buildings of the temple; a former in the time of Solomon, and a latter in that of Cyrus; and in the Chronicon Hebræum, &c. Vespasian is said to have destroyed the temple four hundred and forty years after it was built. The Prophet, indeed, could not have used greater precision of language, consistently with his design of consoling the Jews; for had he adopted such a distinction it would have led them to expect the demolition of the temple then building, and the erection of another in its stead. It is also undeniable, that the Jews did, in consequence of this prophecy, expect the Messiah to appear in this temple, till after its destruction by Vespasian; they then, in order to evade its application to Jesus of Nazareth, applied it to a third, which they expect at some future period. For the same purpose, other Jewish writers, who are followed by some modern commentators, contend, that chemdath, "desire," which is in construction with a plural verb, oovaoo, "and they shall come," should be read chemdoth, "desires."—"the desirable things of all nations shall come:" which they understand of the valuable and rich presents which various nations should bring into the temple. But this alteration, though apparently sanctioned by some of the ancient versions, is not acknowledged by any MS. yet collated; and it was evidently read in the singular by both the Targum and Vulgate; which have, "and the Desire of all nations shall come," "and the Desired Person shall come to all nations." It has also been justly objected to this interpretation, that it is inconsistent with the great solemnity of the introduction; and that the language itself, "the desirable things of all nations shall come," is highly improper, as it should rather have been, "the desirable things of all nations shall be brought," a sense which ba never has in Kal, but only in Hophal. In fact, no alteration is needed to clear the grammatical construction; for it is a well known Hebraism for a verb or participle to agree with the latter of two connected substantives, though in sense it strictly relates to the former; and thus oovaoo, "they shall come," agrees, not with chemdath, "desire," its proper nominative, but with goyim, "nations," with which it is in construction. For similar instances the reader is referred to Gen. iv. 10. Lev. xiii 9. 1 Sa. ii. 4. 2 Sa. x. 9. 1 Ki. xvii. 16. Neh. ix. 6. Job xv. 20. xxix. 10. xxxii. 7. Prov. xxix. 25. Eccles. xi. 1. Isa. xxv. 3. Jer. ii. 34. in the Hebrew. To nothing else indeed than the advent of the Messiah can this prophecy refer; and nothing but the presence of the incarnate son of God could fulfil the prediction, and render "the glory of this latter house greater than of the former." This great event, and this alone, agrees with the whole of the context; with the political convulsions by which it was preceded and followed, and with the great and final religious revolution which it introduced.

THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH.

[ZECHARIAH was, as he himself informs us, the son of Berechiah, and grandson of Iddo; but the tribe and family from which he was descended, as well as the time and place of his birth, are equally unknown. It is, however, certain that he was one of the captives who returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel; and from an expression in ch. ii. 4. there is reason to believe that he was called to the prophetic office when a young man. He began to prophesy in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, A. M. 3484. B.C. 520., in the eighth month of the sacred year, and consequently two months after Haggai. Zechariah, after general warnings, and exhortations to repentance, foretels the completion of the temple, (ch. i.;) the rebuilding and prosperity of Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, (ch. ii 1—5;) the judgments of God upon Babylon, from which he admonishes the Jews to depart previous to its destruction, (ver. 6—9.) promising them the Divine presence, (ver. 10—13;) under a vision of Joshua the high-priest arrayed in new sacerdotal attire, he predicts the restoration of the temple and its service, (ch. iii. 1—7.;) whence, by an easy transition, he sets forth the glory of Christ, as the chief corner stone of his church, (ver. 8—10.;) under the vision of the golden candlestick and two olive trees, he represents the success of Zerubbabel and Joshua in rebuilding the temple, and restoring its service, (ch. iv.;) by the vision of a flying roll and an ephah, he shows the judgments which would come on the wicked Jews and the abject and oppressed state of the nation, after they had filled up the measure of their sins, (ch. v.;) by the vision of four chariots drawn by several sorts of horses, and by two crowns placed on Joshua's head, he sets forth primarily the re-establishment of the civil and religious polity of the Jews under Zerubbabel and Joshua, and secondarily and principally, the high priesthood and kingdom of Christ, called emphatically the Branch, (ch. vii.;) some Jews having been sent to Jerusalem from the exiles at Babylon, to inquire whether they were still bound to observe the fasts instituted on account of the destruction of that city, (ch. vii. 1—3.;) the prophet is commanded to enforce upon them the weightier matters of the law, lest the same calamities befall them which were inflicted on their fathers, (ver. 4—14.,) promising them, in the event of their obedience, the continuance of the favour of God, (ch. viii. 1—8.;) encouraging them to go on with the building, (ver. 9—17.;) and permitting them to discontinue the observance of those fasts, (ver. 18—23.:) the prophet then predicts the intermediate events which should happen to the surrounding nations and to the Jews, from the completion of the temple till the coming of Christ, with figurative intimations of the prevalence of the Gospel by the triumphs of his apostles and servants, (ch. ix. x.;) foretels the destruction of the temple and the rejection of the Jews for their rejection of Christ, and other sins, (ch. xi.;) and predicts the preservation of Jerusalem against an invasion in the latter ages of the world, and the destruction of her enemies, (ch. xii. 1—9.;) the conversion of the Jews to their crucified Messiah, (ver. 10—14 ch. xiii.;) the destruction of Jerusalem, and the judgments inflicted on the unbelieving Jews; the preservation of a remnant, and their conversion; the ruin of the nations that fought against her; the final conversion of all nations, and the peace and prosperity of the church, (ch. xiv.)]—Bagster. The design of the first part of this prophecy, like that of his contemporary Haggai, was to encourage the Jews to go on with rebuilding the temple, by giving them assurance of God's aid and protection. From this he proceeds to foretel the glory of the Christian church (the true temple of God) under its great High Priest and Governor Jesus Christ, of whom Zerubbabel and Joshua were figures. The first six chapters consist chiefly of prophetic visions, in the manner of Ezekiel, Daniel, and the Revelation of St. John. On these chapters, in addition to the writers consulted on the other Minor Prophets, we are happy to avail ourselves of the recent learned labours of Dr. Stonard; and where we cannot exactly adopt his interpretations, we must still admire his ingenuity, and commend his serious piety. The following chapters treat of the death, sufferings, and kingdom of Messiah, in many particulars not mentioned by any of the Prophets before him; every thing relating to those great events becoming more explicit in proportion as their accomplishment drew nearer. Zechariah's style, like that of Haggai, is for the most part prosaic, only more obscure towards the beginning, on account of his various types and emblems. Towards the end he is more plain, as well as more elevated and poetical. The difference in the style, among other reasons, has led many to conclude, that the last six chapters might be written by Jeremiah, or some other Prophet, though annexed to this prophecy of Zechariah.

IN the eighth month, in the [a] second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto [b] Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

2 The LORD hath been [c] sore displeased [d] with your fathers.

3 Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Turn [e] ye unto me, saith the LORD of hosts, and I [f] will turn unto you, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the LORD.

5 Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever?

6 But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not [g] take hold [h] of your fathers? and they returned and said, Like as the LORD of hosts thought [i] to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so [j] hath he dealt with us.

7 ¶ Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

8 I saw by night, and [k] behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there [l] red horses, [m] speckled, and white.

9 Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will show thee what these be.

10 And the man that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, [n] These are they whom the LORD hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And they answered the angel of the LORD that stood among the myrtle trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.

12 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD answered and said, O LORD of hosts, how [o] long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these [p] threescore and ten years?

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—21. Zechariah exhorts to repentance, and relates two visions of different coloured horses, &c.—The Prophet begins with reminding the Jews, that their fathers had (many of them) died in captivity, and under the divine displeasure; and earnestly cautions them against following their evil example, lest they should provoke the like judgments upon themselves.

The first prophetic vision opens in the 8th verse, and it is expressly said to have been seen by night. The scene is a valley of "myrtle trees," and the principal character exhibited was "the Angel of the Lord" upon a red (or bright bay) horse, and followed by other horses of different colours, and mounted by riders (as is supposed) representing the various agents employed by Providence in the government of the world. (See note.) The Angel of the Lord here introduced as riding upon a red horse, is very naturally understood as the Son of God himself, who, in the last book of the New Testament, is represented as a Conqueror upon a white horse. (Rev. vi. 2.) The red horse, indeed, seems to represent him, not so properly in the victories of the gospel, (as described by St. John,) as in dispensing judgments among the heathen; red being symbolical of wrath, of war, and of punishment. By those that followed him on horses of the same colour, we must understand inferior ministers, perhaps both good and evil; and it is very remarkable that they are described as using the very language used by Satan in the introduction of the book of Job; as "going (or walking) to and fro" to see what was doing in the earth: and they bring in a report that "all the earth is sitting still and at rest;" meaning, as we conceive, that the chosen people having been completely subjugated, the surrounding nations were enjoying their triumph over them. This gives occasion for Israel's advocate, the Angel of the Lord, to offer a prayer on their behalf. "O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem?" intimating at the same time that the seventy years of their captivity were now about to terminate. To this an answer is immediately given by the medium of another angel, expressing how much the Lord was displeased with the heathen, in not setting them at liberty. For though both Cyrus and Darius had intimated their disposition to that effect, it is plain enough that there was a very powerful combination to oppose them.

In the last four verses of this chapter, another vision is introduced of four horns—the horns which are said to have "scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem." But commentators are not exactly agreed whether these are to be considered as distinct horns, (like the horns of the altar,) or as horned animals, as in Daniel's visions. By four labouring or working men coming to fray or frighten them away, we are naturally led to think of living animals; and if the number of the horns, or military powers, implies that Israel had enemies on every side, (i. e. to the four winds,) it naturally leads us to the idea of one-horned animals, or unicorns, whereof we read in different parts of scripture, and which were certainly ferocious animals; and not to tame cattle, which seldom did any mischief.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. In the eighth month.—Compare Haggai ii. 1, 10.—The second year of Darius—is reckoned by Blair the year 520 before Christ. This Dr. Stonard considers as the termination of the seventy years' captivity, which we have commenced, B. C. 588, and consequently ends 518, following Usher, Blair, and other eminent chronologists, which is two years later than Dr. Stonard; but perhaps these dates cannot be ascertained with perfect accuracy.

Ver. 2. Sore displeased.—Heb. "Angry (with) anger;" i. e. very angry.

Ver. 5. Your fathers, &c.—That is, "Your fathers are dead, and the prophets who prophesied to them are dead: but the testimony of facts to the truth of my predictions still remains." Abp. Newcome. The question implies, that they had died under marks of God's displeasure.

Ver. 6. Did they not take hold?—Marg. "Overtake?" So Newcome.

Ver. 7. The month Sebat.—[The Chaldee name of the 11th month of the ecclesiastical year, but the 5th of the civil year, answering to part of January and February.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Red horses, speckled and white.—Newcome, "Red, dun, and white;" Stonard, "Red, pale, and white;" the middle term being of disputed import. Newcome says, these angels "had horses to show their power and celerity; and horses of different colours, to intimate their different ministries, whether adverse, neutral, or friendly." [These seem to have been emblematical of angels, or ministers of Providence; and the diverse colours of their horses may denote different dispensations of wrath or mercy, or both blended together, which they superintended.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. All the earth, &c.—[The Persian empire, and the other nations connected with Judea, enjoyed peace at that time; but the state of the Jews was unsettled, which gave occasion to the following intercession.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Three score and ten years.—[This period, from the first captivity in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, expired when Cyrus first issued his edict; but it was almost seventy years from the destruction of the city and temple, and just that period from the time that Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem.]—B

13 And the LORD answered the angel that talked with me with good [q] words and comfortable words.

14 So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; I am jealous [r] for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy.

15 And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease: for [s] I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD; I am returned [t] to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the LORD of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem.

17 Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; My cities through [u] prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and [v] the LORD shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose [w] Jerusalem.

18 ¶ Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold four horns.

19 And I said unto the angel that talked with me, What be these? And he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem.

20 And the LORD showed me four carpenters.

21 Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered [x] Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which lifted up [y] their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it.

CHAPTER II.

1 God, in the care of Jerusalem, sendeth to measure it. 6 The redemption of Zion. 10 The promise of God's presence.

I LIFTED up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line [a] in his hand.

2 Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure [b] Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof.

3 And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him,

4 And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited [c] as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein:

5 For I, saith the LORD, will be unto her a wall [d] of fire round about, and will be the glory [e] in the midst of her.

6 ¶ Ho, ho, come forth, and flee [f] from the land of the north, saith the LORD: for I [g] have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the LORD.

7 Deliver [h] thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you [i] toucheth the apple of his eye.

9 For, behold, I will shake [j] my hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me.

10 ¶ [k] Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD.

11 And many nations [l] shall be joined to the LORD in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell [m] in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee.

12 And the LORD shall inherit [n] Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose [o] Jerusalem again.

13 Be silent, O all flesh, before the LORD: for he is raised up out of [p] his holy habitation.

CHAPTER III.

1 Under the type of Joshua, the restoration of the church, 8 Christ the Branch is promised.

AND he showed me Joshua [a] the high priest standing before the angel of the LORD, and [b] Satan [c] standing at his right hand to [d] resist him.

2 And the LORD said unto Satan, The LORD rebuke [e] thee, O Satan; even the LORD that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand [f] plucked out of the fire?

Who the powers were that scattered Israel; and who the agents that conquered and dispersed them, Daniel will inform us. See chap. vii. throughout. The more immediate object of this vision, however, appears to be, to allay the apprehensions of the pious Jews, as to the opposition they should meet with in erecting the second temple.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—13. By the vision of a man with a measuring line, Israel is encouraged to expect great enlargement.—The vision with which this chapter opens portended great increase and prosperity to Jerusalem. Accordingly, Josephus tells us, that "the city overflowing with inhabitants, extended beyond its walls," (as predicted in ver. 4; see note.) and acquired much glory, especially during the time of the Maccabees. But these promises of the Shechinah in the midst, and "wall of fire all around," must have a farther reference to the glory and prosperity of the latter days of the Messiah. In consequence however of these promises, the Jews then inhabiting Babylon, and the regions round about, are called upon to hasten home, ("Ho! from the north," &c.) that they might not be involved in the fate of their enemies, who were to fall a prey to the nations which they had formerly subdued. The promises of God's presence with his church, and her consequent prosperity as set forth in the latter verses of this chapter, were in some measure fulfilled in the great number of proselytes made to Judaism, both during and after the captivity; still more so in the conversion of many thousands to Christianity after the day of Pentecost; yet have we good reason to expect a farther signal and extensive fulfilment of them in the glorious days of the Millennium.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—10. The Jewish church vindicated, and Messiah promised.—The vision here exhibited, represents the enemies of the Jews, as incorporated in the person of the great adversary of mankind, while the Jewish church itself, as some expositors conceive, is personified in Joshua the high priest, and its melancholy condition represented by his tattered and defiled garments. The promised change of raiment plainly indicates reconciliation with God, to which, in the latter part of the chapter, is added an express prophecy of the Messiah, as the branch predicted by Isaiah two centuries before. (Isa. iv. 2; xi. 1.) Dr. Macknight (who is herein followed by Dr. Stonard) was of opinion, that the church personified as above in the person of Joshua, is intended by "the body of Moses"

Ver. 18. Four horns.—[Horns were the emblems of power; and these four horns represented the enemies which the Jews had, or should have, in the "four winds of heaven."]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Four carpenters.—From this rendering, we may suppose that our translators supposed these horns to be of wood: so Vitringa renders the word smiths, because he imagined them to be of iron. If we admit, however, that they were horns of living animals, we may render the term more literally, as Newcome does, "Workmen," or rather, working men, either in agriculture or in the arts. It is obvious that it needed neither carpenters nor smiths to drive away living animals; and nothing is said of cutting off their horns. [Able instruments whom God would raise up to deliver his people, and punish their enemies.]—Bagster.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. A measuring line.—Heb. "And in his hand a line of measuring."

Ver. 4. To this young man—i. e. the prophet: but Dr. Stonard understands it of the angel, though we think without reason. The angel that had talked with Zechariah, "went forth" as if to leave him; but the superior Angel directed him to run, i. e. to step quickly back with this message to the prophet. ——As towns without walls—That is, with an overflowing population. [We learn from Josephus that Jerusalem actually overflowed with inhabitants, and gradually extended itself beyond its walls, and that Herod Agrippa fortified the new part, called Bezetha.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Daughter of Babylon.—[The Babylonians were vanquished by the Persians, formerly their servants, under Darius Hystaspes; who took Babylon after a siege of twelve months, demolished its walls, and put 300,000 of the inhabitants to death. See Prideaux.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8, 9. After the glory.—Newcome, "After (the obtaining of) glory." Stonard, "After glory hath he sent me;" i. e. after the glory of the nations; as it is added, "they shall become a spoil to their servants; that is, they shall plunder those who plundered them. See also Rev. xxi. 24.——I will shake my hand upon—or "over;" i. e. in a threatening attitude.

Ver. 11. I will dwell. The Lord hath sent, &c.—From this passage, compared with Isa. xlviii. 16, an argument has been drawn in favour of the Holy Trinity. One person, who is Jehovah, sends another person, who also is Jehovah, yet are there not two Jehovahs. See Dr. Eveleigh's Sermon at Oxford, on Zech. ii. 8—11.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. And Satan.—See margin. See note on Job i. 6.

Ver. 2. The Lord said.—The Syriac, Newcome, Boothroyd, and others, supply from chap. i., "The angel of." Compare Jude, ver. 9. This angel, however, must be understood to mean, "the Angel of the covenant."

3 Now Joshua was clothed with [g] filthy garments, and stood before the angel.

4 And he answered and spake unto those that stood before him, saying, Take away the filthy garments from him. And unto him he said, Behold, I [h] have caused thine iniquity to pass [i] from thee, and I will clothe thee with change [j] of raiment.

5 And I said, Let them set a fair [k] mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the angel of the LORD stood by.

6 ¶ And the angel of the LORD protested unto Joshua, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my [l] charge, then thou shalt also judge my house, and shall also keep my courts, and I will give thee [m] places to walk among these that stand by.

8 ¶ Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men [n] wondered at: for, behold, I will bring forth my servant the [o] BRANCH.

9 For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven [p] eyes: behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.

10 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig tree.

in the Epistle of St. Jude; but the inquiry would here perhaps be premature.

As to the Jews now occupied in rebuilding their temple, the vision was calculated to give them the strongest encouragement, by assuring them, that God, after plucking them as "brands out of the fire," (i. e. from the captivity of Babylon,) would not now give them up to their adversaries, but would still continue to prosper their undertaking; and that, notwithstanding all the interruptions they had met with, the work should be finished under the superintendence of a kind Providence; and that their high priest, clothed in his pontifical robes, should again officiate in the sanctuary.

As to Joshua, personally considered, he is involved in no charge of public guilt (though it appears his sons were; Ezra x. 18;) but is assured, that by due attention to his official duties, he should hereafter be accepted and rewarded; and that, degraded as his present situation might appear, he should one day be numbered among the heavenly hosts, and have a place to walk in white amongst them.

In the mean time the Messiah is brought again before us, as the foundation stone of all the church's hope; and upon this stone is engraved by the hand of God himself, seven eyes. These eyes naturally remind us of him, who is described as having "seven horns and seven eyes," (Rev. v. 6.) i. e. a fulness of power and wisdom—or, which is the same thing, "the fulness of the Godhead"—residing in him "bodily." (Col. ii. 9.) The eyes of kings are their counsellors, and the kings of Persia had "seven counsellors;" (Ezra vii. 14. Esther i. 13, 14.;) but the King of Zion needs no foreign aid—"The seven eyes are in the stone."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—14. The vision of the golden candlestick and two olive trees.—The Prophet, overpowered by his last vision, is roused by the angel to behold another, intended farther to assure Joshua and Zerubbabel of their success in finishing the temple; that they should surmount every obstacle, and at length, by the good providence of God, bring forth the top-stone, amidst the joyful acclamations of the spectators. It is plain that the golden candlestick is the Jewish state; the oil, the spirit or power of God, in opposition to human efforts; and the two anointed ones, Joshua and Zerubbabel, the sole appointed instruments of the great work in hand. Neither was the high priest, nor the temporal governor, endowed with coercive authority or human strength; but they were assisted by "the eyes of the Lord, (chap. iii. 9.) which run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards him." (2 Chron. xvi. 9.) The application of this prophecy (in its typical sense) to the Messiah, is, like that of the preceding ones, plain and obvious. Jesus Christ unites in his person both the kingly and priestly offices. He is anointed with the Spirit above measure,

Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 9. The stone.—See Gen. xlix. 24. Ps. cxviii. 22. Isa. viii. 13, 14. Dan. ii. 34, &c.—Upon one stone shall be seven eyes.—Some render this in the present tense, "are seven eyes;" but as there is no verb in the original, we think, with Dr. Stonard and others, that none is necessary; "Behold . . . upon one stone seven eyes!" We can by no means, however, agree with our learned author, that these eyes "are intended to represent the angels of God, subject to the command of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1. Angels are not (we believe) ever compared to eyes; and, 2. The Head of the church sees with his own eyes, and not, like temporal monarchs, with the eyes of others. See exposition.—In one day.—Compare Dan. ix. 14. Heb. ix. 26.

Ver. 10. Under the vine, &c.—See Micah iv. 4.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 2. A candlestick is certainly an improper term, since it was to hold lamps; nor is chandelier more literally correct, though, as being a French term, its absurdity is not so glaring. The golden vessel here named appears to us to have strongly resembled the candlestick, or lamp-bearer, in the tabernacle, Exod. xxxii. 31, &c., with perhaps this difference, that instead of the branches being solid, they were hollow, for the purpose of conveying to each lamp the supply of oil which was received by the bowl from the olive trees beside them.—Seven pipes to the seven lamps.—See margin. Dr. Stonard thinks that he has discovered in the Hebrew phraseology of this chapter, two sevens of lamps, one seven belonging to the Jewish, the other to the Christian church; but we confess that we see no evidence to support this discovery; nor do we think it harmonious with the doctrine of the New Testament. It is true there were many Christian societies, or worshipping assemblies, both of Jews and Gentiles; but we have no idea of their forming two distinct and coeval churches. The Christian church is one, united under one head, and animated by one spirit. We hope to be excused in the freedom of this remark, though it would be absurd to attempt here the minute examination of an hypothesis which occupies several pages in the statement.

Ver. 6. Not by might, (or army.) &c.—That is, the building of this temple, and more especially of the Christian church, should not be effected by secular power, nor by human might, but by the divine agency.

Ver. 7. Who (or what) art thou?—That is, who is the chief opposer of this work? and what is the obstacle to its completion? Before the power of the Almighty, all opposition is as nothing.—Head-stone with shoutings.—[He shall in due time place the top or finishing stone on the temple; while all the spectators shall joyfully ascribe their success to the grace and favour of God, and accompany it with their prayers that He would continue to favour and protect that Holy place so happily brought to perfection. It is supposed that the headstone mystically represents the Messiah, called the chief-stone, chap. iii. 9. and implies that God shall bring him into the world as the finishing ornament and perfection of the church. In this sense the Targumist interprets the words, "He shall reveal the Messiah, whose name was declared from everlasting, and he shall exercise dominion over all kingdoms."]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. With these seven—Namely, the eyes of the Lord, mentioned chap. iii. 9. See exposition.

12 And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive branches which [i] through the two golden pipes empty [j] the [k] golden oil out of themselves?

14 Then said he, These [l] are the two [m] anointed ones, that stand [n] by the LORD of the whole earth.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vision of the four chariots. 9 By the crowns of Joshua is showed the temple and kingdom of Christ the Branch.

AND I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass.

2 In the first chariot were red [a] horses; and in the second chariot black horses;

(John iii. 34.) He is the light of the church and of the world, (John i. 4, 9;) and by his union with the divine nature, possesses an inexhaustible fund or supply of every thing necessary to fulfil his different offices as "a priest upon his throne," as represented in chap. vi. 13.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—11. The flying roll, and the woman (wickedness) in an ephah.—The first vision, by the representation of a large flying roll, denotes that God's judgments against the wicked are great and swift. The vision seems to intimate farther, that the Babylonian captivity happened in consequence of the wickedness committed by the Jews before that period, and that a like calamity might befall them, if they relapsed into their former crimes; some of which are mentioned. The chapter may be considered altogether as a solemn admonition, that a multitude of curses, and particularly dispersion and captivity, should be the punishment of national depravity.

The woman in the ephah is wickedness personified, with a particular reference to idolatry, which had been hitherto their master sin. The cake of lead which covered the ephah, may denote the wrath of God against this sin; and the two women with wings powerful as those of storks, may represent (as the Chaldee Paraphrase seems to intimate) Israel and Judah, carrying back idolatry to the land of Shinar, which is Babylon, where it probably originated, and always reigned.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—15. A vision of four chariots, and a prophecy of the glory of Messiah.—The mountains of brass from which these chariots issued, are supposed to be indicative of the divine counsels and decrees, brass being the emblem both of strength and splendour. The first vision of this Prophet exhibited single horses, rode by spiritual beings: here they are yoked together in chariots, but they are said, like the former, to be sent forth into all the earth, in different directions, according to the orders of the great Supreme. These are usually explained in reference to the four great monarchies in Daniel. (See notes below, also chap. ii. and vii.) The red horses are supposed to represent the Assyrian Empire; but as this was now destroyed, these are named only and retire. "The black horses," says Abp. Newcome, "seem to denote the Persian Empire, which, by subduing the Chaldeans, and being about to inflict a second heavy chastisement on Babylon, quieted God's spirit with regard to Chaldea; a country always spoken of as lying to the north of the Jews. The white horses seem to be the Macedonian Empire; which, like the Persian, overcame Chaldea. The spotted bay (or brown) horses seem to be the Roman, "from the variety in its forms of government." These went into the south country, as far as Egypt and other parts of Africa.

The subsequent vision, in the close of this chapter, is evidently a typical prediction. The Prophet is directed to go with some of the principal persons who had returned from the captivity, and take from the sacred treasury sufficient gold and silver to make crowns or diadems, probably of different forms, the principal of which were to be placed on the head of Joshua the high priest, as a type of the Messiah, of whom it is said, "Behold the man whose name is the BRANCH; and he shall branch up out of his place; and he shall build the (true) temple of the Lord," that is, the Christian Church, and "he shall bear the glory." It is added, "he shall sit and rule upon his

Ver. 14. Two anointed ones.—See margin. Meaning, Zerubbabel and Joshua, who were appointed, qualified, and enabled to execute the arduous task.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. A flying roll—i. e. a large sheet of parchment, written on both sides with the curses of God's law against wickedness; alluding, probably, to the curses in Deut. xxvii. and xxviii., and to Ezekiel's scroll, chap. ii. 9, 10.

Ver. 2. The length twenty cubits, and the breadth ten; that is, on the lowest calculation, 30 feet by 15.

Ver. 3. For every one that stealeth, &c.—See margin. To us it appears, that on one side was written the curses against fraud and oppression; and on the other, those against perjury, profaneness, and idolatry, or swearing by false gods. We would therefore read the following clause, (omitting the particle as,) "Every one that stealeth shall be cut off, according to it (the writing) on this side; and every one that sweareth, according to it on that side."

Ver. 4. It shall consume it.—It shall be like the dry rot.

Ver. 6. An ephah.—A dry measure of about three pecks, so that the figure of wickedness must appear like a diminutive hag, or pigmy, covered over with a talent of lead in a three peck measure.—This is their resemblance.—Dr. Stonard renders it "their eye," "aspect," or appearance; but Newcome, guided by the ancient versions, reads, "This is their iniquity;" and Boothroyd "This (shows) their iniquity." We think, however, that there is no necessity for either alteration. ["The meaning of this vision," says Abp. Newcome, "seems to be, that the Babylonish captivity had happened on account of the wickedness of the Jews; and that a like dispersion would befall them, if they relapsed into like crimes." The woman who sat in the ephah was an emblem of the Jewish nation; the casting the weight of lead on the mouth of the ephah, seems to mean the condemnation of the Jews, after they had filled up the measure of their iniquities by crucifying the Messiah; the "two women, with wings like a stork, and the wind in their wings," seem emblematic of the Roman armies and the rapidity of their conquests; and their lifting up the ephah and carrying it through the air, to build it a house in Shinar, or Babylon, where it was fixed on its own basis, represents the taking of Jerusalem, the dispersion of the Jews, and the long continuance of that calamity, as a just punishment of their unbelief.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. A talent of lead.—3000 shekels, or 125 lb. We should call it a pig of lead. Dr. Stonard renders it "a cake."

Ver. 9. Came out.—Newcome, "Went forth."—Wings of a stork—whose wings are so strong that they will not only fly far, being birds of passage, but sometimes carry the parent birds (when old and infirm) upon their backs. Dr. Harris's Nat. Hist.

Ver. 11. In the land of Shinar—That is, Babylon. We are perfectly aware that Rome is, in the New Testament, called Babylon; but we are not aware it is so called in the Old, or during the existence of the ancient Babylon; nor can we persuade ourselves that the predictions of this chapter have any reference to Europe; much less that "the north country" (ch. vi. 6.) can possibly intend "the great western empire." Stonard's Comment.

Ver. 11. Upon her own base—That is, as we conceive, where it originated, or was founded.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. Four chariots.—[These four chariots are generally interpreted of the four great monarchies, the Chaldean, Persian, Grecian, and Roman, which successively executed God's purposes of mercy and justice; and the different colours of the horses, of the different complexions of those monarchies. But others understand by them angels, called the chariots of the Lord, (Ps. lxviii. 17.) by whom he executes his providential will on earth; and that the red horses denote war; the black horses, famine and pestilence; the white horses, the removal of these judgments; and the grizzled horses, it mingled dispensation of wrath and mercy.]—Bagster.

3 And in the third chariot white horses; and in the fourth chariot grizzled and [b] bay horses.
4 Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me, What are these, my lord?
5 And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four [c] spirits of the heavens, which go forth [d] from [e] standing before the Lord of all the earth.
6 The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country; and the white go forth after them; and the grizzled go forth toward the south country.
7 And the bay went forth, and sought to go that they might walk [f] to and fro through the earth: and he said, Get you hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth.
8 Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have [g] quieted my spirit in the north country.
9 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,
10 Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and of Jedaiah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah;
11 Then take silver and gold, and make [h] crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest;
12 And speak unto him, saying, Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is The [i] BRANCH; and he shall [j] grow up out of his place, and he shall build [k] the temple of the LORD:
13 Even he shall build the temple of the LORD; and he [l] shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest [m] upon his throne: and the counsel of peace [n] shall be between them both.
14 And the crowns shall be to Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial [o] in the temple of the LORD.
15 And they that are far off [p] shall come and build in the temple of the LORD, and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently [q] obey the voice of the LORD your God.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The captives inquire of fasting. 4 Zechariah reproveth their fasting. 8 Sin the cause of their captivity.

AND it came to pass in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chisleu;
2 When they had sent unto the house of God Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, to [a] pray before the LORD,
3 And to speak unto the priests which were in the house of the LORD of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so many years?
4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD of hosts unto me, saying,
5 Speak unto all the people of the land, and to the priests, saying, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh month, even those [b] seventy years, did ye at all fast unto [c] me, even to me?
6 And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, [d] did not ye eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves?
7 [e] Should ye not hear the words which the LORD hath cried [f] by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the south and the plain?
8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, saying,
9 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, [g] Execute true judgment, and show mercy and compassions every man to his brother:
10 And oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.
11 But they refused to hearken, and [h] pulled away the shoulder, and [i] stopped their ears, that they should not hear.
12 Yea, they made their hearts as an [j] adamant stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the LORD of hosts hath sent in his spirit [k] by the former prophets: therefore [l] came a great wrath from the LORD of hosts.
13 Therefore it is come to pass, that as he cried, and they would not hear; [m] so they cried, and I would not hear, saith the LORD of hosts:

throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne, and the counsel of peace shall be between them both." As applied to the type, this indicates the harmony between Joshua and Zerubbabel, the high priest and secular governor. As, however, the latter had no coercive power, and the influence of Joshua as high-priest must have been considerable, with him the authority must chiefly have rested, and on his head probably was a double crown. (See note.) In the antitype, however, we know that both the offices (the kingly and priestly) are harmoniously united. The Messiah, who is the foundation of his church, is also the top-stone thereof—(the Omega as well as Alpha)—and when the building shall be completed with shoutings of "Grace! Grace!" unto it,—then "He shall bear the glory."

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—14. Judgment and mercy far preferable to ritual observances.—A deputation being sent from the Jews who still remained at Babylon, to seek the Lord, and to inquire of the Priests and Prophets at Jerusalem, whether they were still bound to observe those fasts which had been appointed on occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem, and kept during the captivity, the Prophet is commanded to take this opportunity of enforcing upon them the weightier matters of the law, judgment and mercy; and to caution them that they might not incur such calamities as befell their fathers. He intimates withal, that in their former fasts they had re-

Ver. 5. Four spirits.—Marg. "winds;" so Blayney. But winds do not stand; besides, the like figure is elsewhere explained in reference to spiritual beings, as chap. i. 10. So Newcome, &c.

Ver. 8. Quieted my spirit.—[That is, the justice of God was satisfied, and his wrath appeased, by the judgments inflicted on the Babylonians.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Set them upon the head of Joshua.—This name, it is well known, means, in Hebrew, a Saviour, as Jesus does in Greek. [This was probably to signify, that He, of whom Joshua was a type, should be both priest and king.]—Bagster. It is evident our translators understood that more than one crown was placed on the head of Joshua, and we should surmise, that both the priestly mitre and the temporal diadem were placed on the head of the type; not only to signify the union of the two offices, but, as Bp. Chandler suggests, to avoid exciting the jealousy of the Pagan sovereigns, as Zerubbabel was then chief of the house of David.

Ver. 12. The branch.—See chap. iii. 8. and note also. Hag. ii. 21—23. Bp. Chandler shows, that the Rabbins, both in the Targum and elsewhere, ascribe this title to Messiah. [See in the person of Joshua the high priest, the type and representation of "the Man whose name is the Branch," or, as the Targumist correctly renders, mesheecha shemaiah athid deyithgelai, "whose name is the Messiah, who is to be revealed."]—Bagster.—He shall grow up out of his place.—See margin. Newcome, "Branch out from his place."

Ver. 13. Them both.—Newcome "These two:" some divines (as Witsius &c.) refer this to the Father and Son: but we think it rather refers to the union of these offices in Christ. So Calvin, Gill, Poole, &c.

Ver. 14. The crowns shall be to Helem, &c.—These crowns were not to be worn, but to be hung up in the temple, as memorials only.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 2. To pray before the Lord.—See margin. Doubtless by offering sacrifices on the altar.

Ver. 3, 5. Should I weep in the fifth month?—[This was a fast for the burning of the temple, (2 Kings xxv. 8—10.) as that of the seventh month was for the death of Gedaliah; and seeing that the city and temple were in part rebuilt, they wished to know whether they should continue the observance of them.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Seventh month.—When Gedaliah was murdered. 2 Kings xxv. 25, 26.—Seventy years.—[From the 11th year of Zedekiah to the 4th of Darius Hystaspes are just seventy years.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Did ye not eat, &c. for yourselves.—The last words, though not in the original, are evidently implied. When they fasted, they had not reformed, Isa. lviii. 5; and when they feasted, it was to regale themselves, and not to rejoice in the Lord.

Ver. 7. By the former prophets.—See margin. So ver. 12.—When men inhabited the south.—See Obad. 9. and note.

Ver. 11. They pulled away the shoulder.—See margin. Heb. "Gave a withdrawing shoulder;" like a refractory heifer, refusing the yoke.

14 But I scattered [n] them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom [o] they knew not. Thus the land was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned: for they laid the [p] pleasant land [q] desolate.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The restoration of Jerusalem. 9 They are encouraged to the building by God's favour to them. 16 Good works are required of them. 18 Joy and enlargement are promised.

AGAIN the word of the LORD of hosts came to me, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; I [a] was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous for her with great fury.

3 Thus saith the LORD; I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be [b] called a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD [c] of hosts the holy [d] mountain.

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; [e] There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for [f] very age.

5 And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof.

6 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; If it be [g] marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should [h] it also be marvellous in mine eyes? saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I [i] will save my people from the east country, and from the [j] west country;

8 And [k] I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: [l] and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in [m] truth and in righteousness.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Let your hands be [n] strong, ye that hear in these days these words by the mouth of the prophets, which were in the day [o] that the foundation of the house of the LORD of hosts was laid, that the temple might be built.

10 For before these days [p] there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in because of the affliction: for [q] I set all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But now [r] I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 For the seed shall be [s] prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and [t] the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause the remnant of this people to possess all [u] these things.

13 And it shall come to pass, that [v] as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing: fear not, but let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; [w] As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the LORD of hosts, and I repented not:

15 So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: fear ye [x] not.

16 ¶ These are the things that ye shall do; Speak [y] ye every man the truth to his neighbour; [z] execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates:

17 And let none of you imagine [a] evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath: for all these are things that I hate, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ And the word of the LORD of hosts came unto me, saying,

19 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; The fast of the fourth [b] month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the [c] seventh, and the fast of the [d] tenth, shall be to the house of Judah [e] joy and gladness, and [f] cheerful feasts; therefore love the truth and peace.

20 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

21 And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let [g] us go [h] speedily to [i] pray before the LORD, and to seek the LORD of hosts: I will go also.

22 Yea, many [j] people and strong nations shall come to seek the LORD of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the LORD.

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you.

garded themselves more than God; and that they rested too much on the performance of external rites, although all the Prophets had largely insisted on the superior excellence of moral duties:—duties, however, which must always be regarded in connexion with the authority by which they are enjoined—"Thou shalt delight thyself in the Lord!" (Isaiah lviii. 14.)

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—23. Prophetic assurances of the restoration of Israel, with great additions from the Gentiles.—God's zeal on the behalf of his people operates in two ways; first, in the reproof and punishment of enemies, who had taken advantage of their depressed situation under divine chastisement, (see chap. i. 14, 15;) and, secondly, as it respects his people, in promoting their interest and prosperity, so long as they live in obedience to his commands. In the chapter before us, the Lord promises increase of population; health, and length of days; success in all their labours; favourable treatment from the surrounding nations, who had formerly oppressed them; and, eventually, a large accession from them. The consequence of their prosperity should not be envy, (as often is the case,) but a desire of others to unite with them in their holy festivities and devotions. "In those days," as Archbishop Newcome renders the concluding verse, "ten men shall take hold, from all the languages of the nations; they shall even take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, 'We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you.'"—"To take hold of another's skirt," is a gesture naturally used to entreat assistance and protection. This and the three foregoing verses refer to the great accession of converts which the Jewish church received the whole of their divine knowledge, under God, from Jewish prophets, apostles, and teachers, and that the Saviour, "in whom all nations shall be blessed," sprang from that favoured race, emphatically explains what is meant by "ye shall be a blessing." The full accomplishment of this prediction, however, is probably reserved for the future restoration of the Jews.]—B.

Ver. 21. Let us go speedily.—See margin. Heb. "Let us going go;" i. e. let us go indeed, with all our heart, &c. We are here told how this future glorious advancement of the church of God should be introduced: by multitudes, in different towns and countries, coming into an express agreement, that they will, by united and extraordinary prayer, seek God, that he would fulfil his blessed predictions. Has not this passage received an obvious fulfilment in the MONTHLY CONCERT which is now established in all christian countries, and at every missionary station?

of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the LORD.

2 And Hamath also shall border thereby; [h] Tyrus, and Zidon, though it be very wise.

3 And Tyrus did build herself a strong hold, and heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets.

4 Behold, the LORD will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire.

5 Ashkelon shall see it, and fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful, and Ekron; for her expectation shall be ashamed; and the king shall perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.

6 And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And I will take away his [c] blood out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth: but he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God, and he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.

8 And I will encamp [d] about my house because of the army, because of him that passeth by, and because of him that returneth: and no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for now have I seen with mine eyes.

9 ¶ Rejoice [e] greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he [f] is just, and [g] having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.

10 And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth.

11 As for thee also, [h] by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners [i] out of the pit wherein is no water.

12 ¶ Turn you to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double [j] unto thee;

13 When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man.

14 And the LORD shall be seen over them, and his arrow [k] shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord GOD shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds [l] of the south.

15 The LORD of hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour, and subdue [m] with sling stones; and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they shall [n] be filled like bowls, and as [o] the corners of the altar.

16 And the LORD their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for [p] they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign [q] upon his land.

17 For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! corn shall make the young men [r] cheerful, and new wine the maids.

CHAPTER X.

1 God is to be sought unto, and not idols. 5 As he visited his flock for sin, so he will save and restore them.

ceived between the captivity and the coming of Christ; to the number of Christian disciples which the first preachers made, and to the future conversions, of which the restoration of the Jews will be an eminent mean. (See President Edwards' works, vol. iii. pages 345 and onwards, new edition.)

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—17. The Lord promises to defend his church, and to send them the Messiah.—In the Introduction to this book, we suggested a doubt which has arisen among the learned; not as to the divine authority of these last six chapters, (for that is unimpeachable,) but whether they were not written by Jeremiah, or, some of them, by a still earlier Prophet. After considering the arguments which have been advanced on both sides, we feel fully satisfied with the evidence produced by Hartwell Horne, and Prebend. Townsend, that they were written by Zechariah, though probably at a much later period than the rest, and near the close of his life. The original grounds of the suspicion will be seen in our note on Matt. xxvii. 9. (Horne's Crit. Introd. Townsend's O. Test. Arrang.)

This chapter contains prophetic burdens relative to Syria, Phenicia, and Palestine, which were conquered successively by Nebuchadnezzar and by Alexander the Great. Expositors differ as to which may be here intended, but perhaps both may be alluded to. The chief subject of this chapter is, however, the peaceful kingdom of Messiah, which being "not of this world," neither requires nor admits of military pomp, or secular force; but which is introduced by himself riding upon an humble ass, and thereby "pouring contempt on all earthly grandeur, and rejecting all human aid."

The address to Zion, or the daughter of Zion, (ver. 11—13,) may require elucidation. The prisoners out of the pit, must be the Jews returned from the captivity; this being effected by,

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. Burden of the word.—[That is, "The burden of the word of the LORD shall fall and rest on the land of Hadrach (probably Cœlo-Syria) and Damascus;" which was fulfilled by Alexander, who seized on immense treasures in that city.]—Bagster.——In (or on) the land of Hadrach—A place near, or in, the valley of Damascus. Newcome.——When the eyes, &c.—"I cannot conceive how these words can be made to signify 'the eyes of Jehovah over man,' as represented by Houbigant and the ancient versions. The order of the words leads plainly to our present English translation. And this implies that a time would come, when men, and the tribes of Israel in particular, should turn their eyes toward Jehovah, either in hope of deriving some blessings from him, or in gratitude for favours received." Dr. Blayney. These words should, however, be read in parenthesis, as in Newcome.

Ver. 2. Shall border thereby.—[That is, Hamath and Tyre, which border upon Hadrach and Damascus, shall share their burden; which was accomplished when Alexander conquered Tyre, Syria, and Phenicia.]—Bagster.——Abp. Newcome supplies the preposition on (from ver. 1.) to the other places named in this verse.——Though it (or she) be very wise.—See Eze. xxviii. 2—5.

Ver. 3. As the mire.—Many towns in the East are built with bricks dried only in the sun; and Maundrell says, that "upon a violent rain at Damascus, the whole city becomes, by the washing of the houses, as it were a quagmire."

Ver. 4 Power in the sea.—See Eze. xxvi. 17. "The Sidonians, (according to Diodorus Siculus,) on the approach of an army, sent against them by Ochus, king of Persia, first of all destroyed their shipping at sea; and then, retiring within the walls of their city, when they found they could hold out no longer, set fire to their houses, and burnt themselves and their effects together." Newcome.

Ver. 5. Ashkelon shall see, &c.—That is, the Philistines, their neighbours, shall be alarmed and tremble.

Ver. 6. A bastard shall dwell in Ashdod.—Heb. "A stranger," or foreigner; Boothroyd, "A spurious race" of different nations; Newcome, "strangers."

Ver. 7. His blood out of his mouth—That is, put an end to his idolatrous practices. "The metaphor (says Newcome) is taken from beasts of prey who gorge themselves with blood." The heathen offered "drink-offerings of blood," mixed with wine; but these were absolutely forbidden to the Jews, (Le. vii. 26. Ps. xvi. 4.,) and consequently to the heathen on their conversion. See Orient. Lit. No. 752.——He shall be for our God—That is, a convert to the God of Israel.——As a governor.—Meaning, that he shall be as a citizen of Jerusalem, entitled even to fill its magistracy; but the Ekronite, or natural born Philistine, should rank in Ashdod as a Jebusite did in Judah, that is, as an alien; so Blayney. Josephus mentions the conversion of many of the Philistines to Judaism. (Antiq. lib. xiii. xv. 4.

Ver. 8. Because of the army.—Newcome, "With an army, so that none shall pass there;" namely, no enemy.

Ver. 9. Thy king.—This term is never applied to Zerubbabel, who is only called governor.——Having salvation.—Margin, "Saving himself." All the ancient versions render the word as our translators do, or nearly: but the Jews object to it, and indeed it is not easy to defend the translation. Zion's King, as "saved" through his awful sufferings, and made triumphant over his numerous and powerful enemies, and exalted to the throne of glory in our nature, is "become the Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." Thus, without any forced rendering of the words, the same general meaning is established.

Ver. 10. I will cut off the chariot.—Israel was forbidden the employment of chariots and horses, (De. xvii. 16;) hence the Messiah came meekly riding upon an ass. Compare Ho. ii. 18.

Ver. 11. As for thee also.—The feminine pronoun limits this to the daughter of Zion; i. e. to the Jews, the covenant with whom, at Sinai, was ratified by blood. Ex. xxiv. 6—8.——Out of the pit, &c.—Pits, or caves, were commonly used for prisons, sometimes miry ones. Is xxiv. 22. Je. xxxviii. 6.

Ver. 12. Prisoners of hope.—"A beautiful address, as God, when he doomed his people to banishment, by no means totally rejected them." Bp. Newcome.

Ver. 13. When I have bent Judah, &c.—"A strong and sublime manner of expressing that God would use Judah and Ephraim as his instruments of destruction" against Greece. Newcome.

Ver. 15. Filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar.—Filled, namely, with blood, which some explain of the blood of their enemies slain, and others of the blood of the victims shed as thanksgiving-offerings. (Assembly's Ann. in loc.) If we adhere to the former, as most do, we must refer it to the ancient mode of fighting, (still retained in some parts of the world,) when armies attacked each other with shouts and yells, and tore one another to pieces like wild beasts. See Nu. xxiii. 24. If we adopt the marginal reading, "Shall fill both the bowls and the corners," &c. we may refer it to the blood of the sacrifices, received into bowls, and scattered over the corners of the altars, where the sacrifices were deposited.

Ver. 16. The stones of a crown.—Some suppose this of "crowned trophies;" but the stones of a crown are jewels, and such does the word consider his faithful people. (Mal. iii. 17.) Nor is this inconsistent with the following metaphor, since ensigns were often highly embellished; and perhaps the lifting them as ensigns, may refer to the exhibition of their good example.

Ver. 17. Cheerful.—See margin; i. e. to praise the God of harvest.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. Bright clouds.—See margin; which generally accompanied these heavy rains.

2 For the [c] idols have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie, and have told false dreams; they comfort in [d] vain: therefore they went their way as a flock, they [e] were troubled because there was no shepherd.

3 ¶ Mine anger was kindled against the [f] shepherds, and I [g] punished the goats: for the LORD of hosts hath visited his flock the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse [h] in the battle.

4 Out of him came forth the [i] corner, out of him the [j] nail, out of him the battle-bow, out of him every oppressor together.

5 And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down [k] their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the LORD is with them, and [l] the riders on horses shall be confounded.

6 And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for [m] I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the LORD their God, and will hear them.

7 And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall [n] rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the LORD.

8 I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased.

9 And I will sow [o] them among the people: and they shall remember [p] me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again.

10 I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and [q] place shall not be found for them.

11 And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up: and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away.

12 And I will strengthen them in the LORD; and they shall walk [r] up and down in his name, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XI.

1 The destruction of Jerusalem. 3 The elect being cared for, the rest are rejected. 10 The staves of Beauty and Bands broken by the rejection of Christ. 15 The type and curse of a foolish shepherd.

OPEN thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars.

2 Howl, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen; because the [a] mighty is spoiled: howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for the [b] forest of the vintage is come down.

3 There is a voice of the howling of the shepherds; for their glory is spoiled: a voice of the roaring of young lions; for the pride of Jordan is spoiled.

4 ¶ Thus saith the LORD my God; [c] Feed the flock of the slaughter;

5 Whose possessors slay them, and hold themselves not guilty: and they that sell them say, Blessed [d] be the LORD; for I am rich: and their own shepherds pity them not.

6 For I will no more pity the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD: but, lo, I will [e] deliver the men every one into his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of his king: and they shall smite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them.

7 And I will feed the flock of slaughter, [f] even you, O poor [g] of the flock. And I took unto me two staves; the one I called Beauty, and the other I called [h] Bands; and I fed the flock.

8 Three shepherds also I cut off in one [i] month; and my soul [j] loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me.

9 Then said I, I will not feed you: that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let the rest eat every one the flesh of [k] another.

or in accord with, the blood of their covenant, seems to imply that this deliverance from their second bondage was in consequence of their being God's covenanted people; and that they were thereby as much bound to gratitude and obedience as were their forefathers by their miraculous deliverance from Egypt: and farther, that every victory they obtained over their enemies, called upon them for obedience to his laws, and for sacrifices upon his altar.

In the close of the chapter, the God of Israel speaks of them as his sheep and his jewels, and intimates, if we mistake not, that their example may be singularly useful and ornamental, like a splendid ensign which shows from afar, and animates and encourages those who are entering upon the good fight of faith: their young men should rejoice as with the joy of harvest, (Isa. ix. 3;) and their maidens praise God with all the hilarity of the vintage.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—12. Israel reproved for seeking to idols and false prophets, and directed to look to the true God only.—The promise of prosperity and plenty in the close of the preceding chapter, leads the Prophet to suggest the means of obtaining them; supplication to Jehovah, and not to idols, whose worship had already proved a fertile source of calamities. The rest of the chapter (like the preceding one) promises to the Jews returning from captivity (for they came gradually and at different times) much increase and prosperity; and this in a manner so extraordinary, that it is described by allusions to the deliverance from Egypt. This may, however, as is generally thought, have a farther reference to their still future return from their dispersion, and final restoration.

In the promise of returning prosperity to the nation, it is particularly predicted, that they should have no need to recur to foreign aid: but, under the divine providence, should be able to furnish from themselves every kind of ruler, from the corner stone and the nail, (the chief magistrates,) on whom the weight of government rests, (and which terms are applied to the Messiah himself, Ps. cxviii. 22; Isa. xxii. 23.) to the military commander, (the battle-bow,) and even the exactor, or tax-gatherer, here called the oppressor—a word of extensive import, including those whose office was least respected or beloved—but speaking of whom it is promised to Jerusalem, "I will make thine officers peace, and thine exactors (the word here used) righteousness. (Isa. lx. 17.)

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—17. Farther prophecies with respect to Judea and Jerusalem.—The three first verses of this chapter have been thought to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, either by Nebuchadnezzar, or by the Romans; the destruction of the city and temple by the Romans; and such (he adds) was the application made by Rabbi Jonanan."

Ver. 2. The forest of the vintage.—See margin. Newcome remarks, "The original word is applied to cedars and vines." Eze. xvii. 8—23.

Ver. 3. The pride of Jordan:—The wood on its banks, the resort of lions. Je. xlix. 19.

Ver. 4. The flock of the slaughter—Or, of slaughter, as ver. 7: i. e. the Jewish church, now devoted to destruction by the hand of the Chaldeans. See 2 Kings xxiv. 14—16, and sequel.

Ver. 7. Two staves—That is, shepherds' staves; Newcome, "crooks."—The one I called BEAUTY—"To intimate how beautiful and pleasant the land would have been, if its inhabitants had kept their covenant with God."—The other I called BANDS—"To signify the union which ought to have subsisted between Judah and Israel." Newcome.

Ver. 8. Three shepherds also I cut off in one month.—It is, perhaps, best to confess we do not understand this. Neither Blayney, Newcome, nor Boothroyd, throw any light upon it, farther than the general remark, (often made,) that the prophets are in Scripture said to do what they are commanded only to predict. See Je. i. 10.

Ver. 9. The flesh of another.—See margin. The most dreadful feature of a famine. See De. xxviii. 53—57

Ver. 2. For the idols.—See margin; oracles.—False dreams.—Heb. "Dreams of falsehood."—Went their way as a flock—That is, followed one another in the same track.—They were troubled.—See margin. Perhaps the sense is, that they followed one another, under the excuse that there was no oracle at Jerusalem.

Ver. 3. Punished the goats.—"Visited (judgments) upon the he-goats;" i. e. arbitrary and wicked rulers.—As his goodly horse.—Literally, "His horse of glory;" or gorgeous horse, richly caparisoned, as the horse of a commander-in chief in the day of battle.

Ver. 4. Out of him (Judah) came forth the corner.—Newcome, "From him (shall be) the corner-stone." See exposition.

Ver. 8. I will hiss for them.—Compare Is. v. 26.

Ver. 9. I will sow them—So that they shall greatly increase, as in the verse preceding.—Shall live with their children.—Newcome, "Shall preserve their children."

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon.—[By Lebanon is meant the temple, built of cedars from that mountain, (1 Kings v. 13—18.) the destruction of which, along with Jerusalem, by the Romans, is here predicted. Josephus and other Jewish writers relate, that previous to its destruction, the eastern gate of the temple, which required 20 men to shut it, opened of its own accord.]—B.—Blayney is of opinion, that "These first three verses can relate only to 10 And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people.

11 And it was broken in that day: and [i] so the poor of the flock that waited upon me knew that it was the word of the LORD.

12 And I said unto them, If [m] ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty [n] pieces of silver.

13 And the LORD said unto me, Cast it unto the [o] potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORD.

14 Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even [p] Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.

16 For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be [q] cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor [r] feed that that standeth still: but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

17 Wo to the idol-shepherd that leaveth [s] the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.

CHAPTER XII.

Jerusalem a cup of trembling to herself, 3 and a burdensome stone to her adversaries. 6 The victorious restoring of Judah. 9 The repentance of Jerusalem.

THE burden of the word of the LORD for Israel, saith the LORD, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him.

2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of [t] trembling unto all the people round about, [u] when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem.

3 And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone [v] for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.

4 In that day, saith the LORD, I will smite every horse [w] with astonishment, and his rider with madness: I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness.

5 And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, [x] The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the LORD of hosts their God.

6 ¶ In that day will I make the governors of Judah like a hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem.

7 The LORD also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day shall the LORD defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is [y] feeble [z] among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as [a] God, as the angel of the LORD before them.

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to [b] destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 ¶ And I [c] will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of [d] grace and of [e] supplications: and but we confess we are not certain that it refers to either; it may predict the destruction of the forest itself, of whose mighty cedars scarcely any now remain. Or if it refers to Judea, in being blended with the destruction of the woods that grew on the banks of Jordan, it may metaphorically apply to laying waste the country at a future period, as we have seen it long since fulfilled. In the 14th verse, the disappointed Prophet, discouraged by the ill success of his labours, breaks the staves, or crooks, which must be considered as the badges of his pastoral office, to signify his resignation of it, and the disannulling of God's covenant with the nation; and he is ordered to take in their stead "the instruments of a foolish shepherd;" that is, weapons of violence and destruction; implying, that those who refused to submit to the divine government, should be subjugated to governments of a much severer character.

It is obvious, that the latter chapters of this book are highly symbolical. The Prophet himself appears as a type of the good Shepherd, the Messiah, and in the ungrateful treatment which himself received, strongly prefigures the treatment of his divine Master. On the resigning his prophetic office, he appeals to them for wages, as the means of ascertaining the estimation in which his services had been held; they then insult him by offering the price of a slave, and which he resents by casting it to the potter, as intimating that it was the price only of the lowest of labourers; those that tread the clay, or the morter, (Nahum iii. 14.) In this, however, he is chiefly to be considered as a type, the Evangelist Matthew comparing this with the far more criminal conduct of the Jews in the rejection of our Saviour. (See Matt. xxvii. 9, 10.)

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—14. A prophetic burden against Judah and Jerusalem.—If the siege referred to in verse 2, be that of Jerusalem by the Romans, it had a remarkable fulfilment in the effects which the scene had on the invading general (Titus) and his army, who were shocked at the madness and obstinacy of the Jews in destroying themselves and one another, as we shall hereafter more particularly remark. (See on Matt. xxiv.) Many commentators, however, consider this prediction as referring to an event at a far greater distance, (Rev. xx. 9.) when, indeed, it may be more signally accomplished. (See note.)

The tenth verse is quoted by St. Matthew as referring to our Saviour, who was pierced upon the cross; and such a lamentation no doubt took place, when, after St. Peter had charged the Jews with killing "the Prince of life," the Spirit of grace was poured out from on high, and many thousands were subsequently converted to Christianity. St. John, however, assures us, that another day is coming, when "every eye shall see" the Saviour, they especially "who pierced him"—meaning the descendants of his murderers—"and all the kindreds

Ver. 10. It was broken—That is, "His covenant of feeding the flock." Newcome.

Ver. 11. So the poor.—"The common people, who observed this action of the prophet, understood it to be symbolical, and to represent God's conduct toward them." Boothroyd.

Ver. 12. Give me my price—"Rate my labours as a true shepherd. And they rated them contemptuously; thirty pieces of silver being the price of a slave." Newcome. See Ex. xxi. 32.

Ver. 13. I have been prized.—"Jehovah calls the price of the prophet his own price, and commands that it should not be accepted." Newcome.——In the house of the Lord.—It is natural to suppose that the prophet met, in some part of the temple, the potter who made the vessels for sacred use.

Ver. 14. That I might break the brotherhood.—From this verse it has been inferred, that the chapter must have been written before the separation of the two kingdoms, or at least before the captivity of Israel. But this is not conclusive. These words might refer only to the disunion of the returned captives, and to the dissensions breaking out amongst them: and so they are understood by Dr. Boothroyd.

Ver. 15. The instruments of a foolish shepherd.—What could these be? Certainly what were unsuitable and improper; intimating, that the idolatrous teachers and rulers took wrong means to fulfil their duties, for which they would be called upon hereafter to give account.

Ver. 16. I will raise up—That is, I will permit such a one to come forward, whose character and fate is here described.

Ver. 17. Wo to the idol shepherd.—This will apply equally to king or priest, who may be an idolater. See Eze. xxxiv. 3, 4.——Their claws—Or "hoofs."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. The burden.—See note on Is. xvii. 1.

Ver. 2. A cup of trembling.—"An inebriating and stupifying potion . . Jerusalem shall strike the nations with dread and astonishment." Newcome. [Some consider this as predicting the victories of the Maccabees over Antiochus; but that persecutor never besieged Jerusalem; and the language is much too strong to denote their successes. It is probable that the accomplishment of it is still future; and will take place after the return of the Jews to their own land.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. A burdensome stone.—Heb. "A stone of burden." "Jerome has explained this, by informing us that it was an ancient custom, and then observed in the cities, towns, and villages, to have large round stones, which the young men took up, as an exercise of their strength; some raising them as high as the knee, some as high as the breast, and others above the head, with their arms." Dr. Boothroyd.——All that burden themselves with it shall be cut.—Newcome, "Wounded." Compare Mat. xxi. 44.

Ver. 4. Every horse with astonishment—Or "terror." We do not understand this prediction; and as it is generally reckoned among those yet unaccomplished, we shall not attempt to force a meaning on it.

Ver. 6. Like a hearth of fire.—This is supposed to refer to clearing the woods by fire; the common practice in some countries.

Ver. 8. He that is feeble.—This may imply either weakness of body, or dejection in mind.——As God, as the angel of the Lord.—Does not this imply, that the illustrious person usually styled "the Angel of the Lord," was also himself God? The language, however as applied to Judah, is hyperbolical.

they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn [m] for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

11 In that day shall there be a [n] great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of [o] Megiddon.

12 And the land shall mourn, [p] every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan [q] apart, and their wives apart;

13 The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of [r] Shimei apart, and their wives apart;

14 All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives [s] apart.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 The fountain of purgation for Jerusalem. 2 From idolatry, and false prophecy 7 The death of Christ, and the trial of a third part.

IN that day there shall be a [a] fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for [b] uncleanness.

2 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will cut off [c] the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more [d] be remembered: and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit [e] to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the LORD: and his father and his mother that begat him shall [f] thrust him through when he prophesieth.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every [g] one of his vision, when he hath prophesied; neither shall they wear a rough [h] garment to [i] deceive:

5 But he shall say, I am no prophet, I am a husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth

6 And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thy hands? Then he shall answer Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

7 ¶ Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my [j] fellow, saith the LORD of hosts: smite [k] the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered: and I will turn my hand upon the little ones.

8 And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the LORD, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein.

9 And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold [l] is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The LORD is my God.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 The destroyers of Jerusalem destroyed. 4 The coming of Christ, and the graces of his kingdom. 12 The plague of Jerusalem's enemies. 16 The remnant shall turn to the Lord, 20 and their spoils shall be holy.

BEHOLD, the day of the LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2 For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city [a] shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 ¶ Then shall the LORD go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

of the earth shall wail because of him." The text will then receive its complete accomplishment. (See Rev. i. 7.) When this mourning is said to be of every family apart, perhaps it must not be taken literally; but implies that it shall not be a general external mourning only; but private, distinct, and individual.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—9. Jerusalem's pardon and purification.—"In that day shall a fountain be opened." On this passage Dr. Blayney excellently remarks, "The blood of Christ which cleanseth from all sin (1 John i. 7.) is manifestly here intended, the Jews being, upon their repentance and conversion, to be admitted to all the privileges of the Christian covenant. Sin and uncleanness are legal terms; the former denotes sin generally, or any transgression of the law which required atonement; the latter is used for that uncleanness which secluded man from all intercourse with God and holy things. Whatever efficacy legal sacrifices had in purifying the people, the same is ascribed to the blood of Christ in the gospel dispensation."

What follows relates to the destruction of idols, and to the expulsion from Judea of necromancy, and false pretensions to the spirit of prophecy; insomuch, that men, instead of wearing a rough garment to deceive, should renounce all pretensions of that nature, and pass only for field slaves, or labourers in agriculture. And even if any person should observe on them the marks of the idol they had been accustomed to serve, he should be ready to excuse himself, by pretending it was only the mark of his master, or received in the house of mourning—certain scars being considered as tokens of mourning: nay, so great should become the zeal against idolatry, that if any should persist in their idolatrous profession, their own parents should be ready to execute the law against them in its utmost severity. (See Deut. xviii. 20.)

The latter part of the chapter adverts to the character and sufferings of Messiah; or rather, as is remarked by Bp. Chandler, there is an obvious connexion between this and the two preceding chapters, the intervening passages being of the nature of parentheses. In the 11th chapter, we have an allusion to the betrayment of our Saviour by Judas—in the twelfth, to his crucifixion by the Jews, and their subsequent penitence—and in this, to his high and mysterious relation to the Deity, and to his death, considered as a satisfaction to the divine justice. The 7th verse is an appeal to that justice, as if it had slept during the former dispensations, and the time was now come for it to awake against "the good Shepherd," who had engaged to "lay down his life for his sheep." He was slain, and the sheep were scattered, but not destroyed. And even now, after all the calamities which the children of Abraham have suffered, "a remnant, according to the election of grace," is preserved, and shall eventually be restored to greater privileges than ever.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—21. Predictions of judgment, and promises of perpetual peace and holiness.—The first verses of this chapter are usually applied to the destruction of Jerusalem by the

Ver. 10. They shall look upon ME.—[That this relates to the crucifixion of Jesus of Nazareth, and to his being pierced by the soldier's spear, we have the authority of the inspired apostle John in affirming; and this application agrees with the opinion of some of the ancient Jews, who interpret it of Messiah the son of David, as Moses Hadarson, on Gen. xxviii. though Jarchi and Abarbanel refer it to the death of Messiah the son of Joseph, whom they say was to be the suffering Messiah, while the former is to be the triumphant Messiah.]—Bagster. Newcome says, 36 MSS. and two editions read (with John xix. 34.) "Upon HIM:" the difference only half a letter. So Dr. Boothroyd. Dr. Pye Smith, however, remarks, that the majority of MSS. and those of the highest antiquity, and all the ancient versions, consent in the common reading, "upon ME."

Ver. 11. As the mourning of Hadadrimmon.—Probably for king Josiah.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 2. The prophets—That is, the false prophets.

Ver. 6. What are these wounds.—Dr. Blayney says, "Two ancient customs are clearly alluded to here; that of the idolatrous prophets, who sought to engage the attention of their god by cutting of themselves, 1 Kings xviii. 28. The other, that of those who cut themselves as a token of their grief and mourning for their deceased relations and friends, Jer. xvi. 6. It appears also from Jer. xlviii. 37, that these cuttings were performed on the hands in particular." See our note on Isa. xliv. 5.

Ver. 7. Against the man that is my fellow.—The word for man implies strength, or power; that rendered my fellow, implies nearness: so Blayney renders it, "The man who is next to me in power and authority." Dr. Pye Smith renders it, "The man near to me," meaning, personally united. Dr. Boothroyd adheres to the common version; "Because (says he) I think there is the same ambiguity (in it) as in the original. It may mean, (my) intimate friend or associate; . . . . my equal, as enjoying the same nature." Phil. ii. 5. ——Smite.—Newcome, (following the Arabic,) supplies "I will," as in Mat. xxvi. 31.——Turn my hand upon the little ones—That is, upon Christ's "little flock," Luke xii. 32. The apostles were all preserved, except Judas.

Ver. 8. Two parts . . . . cut off.—This, it is probable, was literally the case in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

Ver. 9. The third part through the fire.—This was the "remnant" of which Isaiah and St. Paul speaks, Rom. ix. 27. This passing through the fire seems to allude to those fiery ordeals which were common among the heathen and some of which were acts of dedication to their idols: these were utterly prohibited to the Jews; but they appear to be alluded to, Isa. xliii. 2, where the trials of God's people are compared to "walking through the fire." See also our exposition of 2 Kings xvi. and note on Ezek. xvi. 21.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 2. I will gather all nations.—Newcome, "Ah the nations:" if this verse be understood of the Romans, this must refer to the nations confederate with them.

Ver. 3. Then shall, &c.—That is, after the heathen nations have been made use of to correct the vices of the Jews, those nations shall also be punished according to their demerits This is the language of all the prophets. —In

4 And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

5 And ye shall flee to the valley of [b] the mountains; for [c] the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the [d] earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah: and [e] the LORD my God shall come, and all the saints with thee.

6 And it shall come to pass in that day, [f] that the light shall not be [g] clear, nor [h] dark:

7 But [i] it shall be one day which shall be known to the LORD, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light.

8 And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the [j] former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be.

9 And the LORD shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one LORD, and his name one.

10 All the land shall be [k] turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem: and it shall be lifted up, and [l] inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's winepresses.

11 And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more [m] utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall [n] be safely inhabited.

12 ¶ And this shall be the plague wherewith the LORD will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult [o] from the LORD shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and [p] his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.

14 And [q] Judah also shall fight [r] at Jerusalem; and the wealth [s] of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.

15 And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

16 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even [t] go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of [u] tabernacles.

17 And [v] it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, [w] that have no [x] rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the LORD will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

19 This shall be the [y] punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

20 ¶ In that day shall there be upon the [z] bells of the horses, [a] HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the LORD's house shall be like the bowls before the altar.

21 Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the LORD of hosts: and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein: and [b] in that day there shall be no more the [c] Canaanite in the house [d] of the LORD of hosts.

Romans; but as the rest of the chapter is generally referred to a far distant period, namely, that of the Millennium, probably these also may have a farther accomplishment in either the commencement or close of that period. As to the miraculous event alluded to in verse 4, it would be presumptuous, as well as vain, to attempt its explanation. Many have grounded hereon a confident expectation of a personal appearance of the Messiah, for which we do not find sufficient warrant. The subsequent parts of the chapter, so far as they relate to God's people, appear to describe,—1. A period of remarkable light and knowledge: a day without night, illumined by a sun that never sets—namely, the Sun of righteousness. 2. An unprecedented effusion of the Holy Spirit, in a full tide of spiritual influence, which shall convey holiness and purity wherever it shall flow. And, 3. A period of uncommon sanctity and devotion, when all the common concerns of life shall be marked with "holiness unto Jehovah;" for "in that day shall Jehovah be king over all the earth."

As to the judgments denounced against the incorrigible and impenitent, we may confidently leave them in the hands of God,—for, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

the day of battle.—The Chaldee refers this to the destruction of Pharaoh and his host at the Red sea; but it seems a general allusion to God's manifold appearance on the behalf of his people Israel.

Ver. 4. Upon the mount of Olives, &c.—"Josephus informs us, that by the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, (Amos i. 1,) one half of the mountain was broken off from the western side, and having rolled four furlongs towards the eastern side, stopped, so that the roads were choked up. In a similar manner, either by an earthquake, or some other means, the valley of the mountains (i. e. between the mountains on which Jerusalem stood) should be choked up." Boothroyd.

Ver. 5. Unto Azal.—A place so called because near Jerusalem.—All the saints (Heb. "holy ones") with thee—Or "with him." So the versions, Chaldee, and many MSS. Newcome.

Ver. 6. The light shall not be clear, nor dark.—Newcome, "Not a bright light and darkness." This is very obscure; we should explain, "not sometimes light and sometimes dark, but all brightness, so that at even-tide it shall be light."

Ver. 7. It shall be one day.—See margin.—Not day nor night.—Heb. "Not day and not night;" which is generally understood to mean a cloudy day, neither clear, nor very dark; while some, on the contrary, understand it of a bright and perpetual day. See Assembly's Annot. In this view, it is parallel with Isa. lx. 19, 20; and the words, "at even-tide it shall be light," are synonymous with Isaiah's, "Thy sun shall no more go down."

Ver. 8. Living waters.—See Ezek. xlvii. 1, &c.

Ver. 10. Turned (see margin) as a plain—That is, "the valleys shall be exalted, and the hills made low;" Isa. xl. 4. By which we understand, that not only should all impediments to the spread of truth and righteousness be removed; but also that the whole land should become alike fertile; even the Dead sea healed. See Ezek. xlvii. 8, 9.

Ver. 12. The Lord will smite.—Compare ver. 3.—Flesh shall consume.—[The predictions contained in this chapter, seem to relate to events which gradually extend from the death of Christ to the glorious days of the millennium: The destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, whose armies were composed of many nations, which was 'the day of the Lord," in which he came "to destroy those who would not that he should reign over them," (ver. 1, 2;) the subversion of the Roman empire, after being the executioners of the Divine vengeance on the Jews, by God's stirring up the barbarous nations to invade them, (ver. 3;) the effusion of Divine knowledge from Jerusalem, by the promulgation of the Gospel, (ver. 4—9;) the rebuilding and replenishing of Jerusalem, (ver. 10, 11;) the destruction of the nations who shall fight against her, (ver. 12—15;) the conversion of the remnant of those nations to the Lord (ver. 16—19;) and the peace and purity of the universal church in the latter days. (ver. 20, 21.)]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. That have no rain.—See margin. "In Lower Egypt, it rains often; in Middle, seldom; in Upper, not at all." See Newcome.

Ver. 20. Upon the bells of the horses, &c.—"God's name shall be honoured in every circumstance." Newcome. In the East, both horses and camels are richly caparisoned, with bells about their necks. Harmer.

Ver. 21. All they that sacrifice.—This seems to indicate a period when, as in the first days of Christianity, all things shall be enjoyed in common.—There shall be no more the Canaanite, &c.—Taking this literally, it means, that the house of the Lord shall be no more profaned by unholy persons; or if by Canaanite, we understand (as the word means) a merchant, or trafficker, it means, there shall be no trading there. See John ii. 13—16

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH.

"THE style of Zechariah is so remarkably similar to that of Jeremiah, that the Jews were accustomed to observe, that the spirit of Jeremiah had passed into him. The whole book is beautifully connected by easy transitions, and present and future scenes are blended with the most delicate contexture. Epiphanius attributes some predictions to Zechariah, which were delivered according to his account by the prophet at Babylon, and on the journey in his return from thence, but these are not extant in Scripture, and are of very questionable authority. The Zechariah to whom an apocryphal book is attributed by some writers, is supposed to have been a different person from the prophet and according to Fabricius, he was the father of John the Baptist."—Gray.

THE BOOK OF MALACHI.

Of Malachi, the last of the prophets, so little is known, that it has been doubted whether his name be a proper name, or only a generic name, signifying My angel or messenger. Origen entertained the extravagant notion, that he was an angel incarnate sent from GOD; and Calmet, after Jerome and other ancient writers, is of opinion that he was the same as Ezra. Epiphanius, Dorotheus, and the Chronicon Alexandrinum, say that Malachi was of the tribe of Zebulun, and a native of the town of Sapha; and that the name Malachi was given him because of his angelic mildness, and because an angel used to appear visibly to the people to confirm what he had said. It is, however, certain, that he prophesied some time after Haggai and Zechariah, for in his time the temple was rebuilt, and the worship re-established, (chap. i. 7, 10, 12. iii. 10;) and consequently his ministry must have coincided with, or succeeded, that of Nehemiah. Dr. Blair and Archbishop Newcome suppose him to have flourished about B. C. 436; and Archbishop Usher about B. C. 416; but Dr. Kennicot places him about B. C. 420; which date is adopted by Dr. Hales, as sufficiently agreeing with the description of Josephus, and the varying dates of chronologers. The book of Malachi consists of four chapters; in which the prophet reminds the Jews of the special favours which God had bestowed upon them; reproves them for not showing due reverence to God; threatening their rejection, and announcing the calling of the Gentiles; denounces the Divine judgments both upon people and priests for their disrespect to God in their sacrifices; and for their unlawful intermarriages with idolatresses, and for divorcing their legitimate wives; foretels the coming of Christ and his harbinger John the Baptist, to purify the sons of Levi, and to smite the land with a curse, unless they all repented: reproving them for withholding their tithes and other oblations, and also for blasphemy; predicting the reward of the good, and the punishment of the wicked, and enjoining the strict observance of the law, till the forerunner already promised should appear, in the spirit and power of Elijah, to introduce the Messiah, and commence a new and everlasting dispensation.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

t Malachi complaineth of Israel's unkindness. 6 Of their irreligiousness, 12 and profaneness.

A. M. 3584. B. C. 420.

THE burden of the word of the LORD to Israel [a] by Malachi.

2 I have loved [b] you, saith the LORD. Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the LORD: yet I loved [c] Jacob,

3 And I hated Esau, and laid [d] his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness.

4 Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the LORD of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and, The people against whom the LORD hath indignation for ever.

5 And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, The LORD will be magnified from [e] the border of Israel.

6 ¶ A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master: if [f] then I be a father, where is my honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the LORD of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, Wherein [g] have we despised thy name?

7 [h] Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, The [i] table of the LORD is contemptible.

8 And if [j] ye offer the blind [k] for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the LORD of hosts.

9 And now, I pray you, beseech [l] God that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been [m] by your means: will [n] he regard your persons? saith the LORD of hosts.

10 Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? [o] neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the LORD of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand.

11 For [p] from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the [q] Gentiles; and in every [r] place incense [s] shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for [t] my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, The table of the LORD is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible.

13 Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! [u] and ye have snuffed at it, saith the LORD of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this of your hand? saith the LORD.

14 ¶ But cursed be the deceiver, [v] which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the LORD a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—14. Malachi reproves the ingratitude and profaneness of the Jews.—The opening verses of this chapter have occasioned much controversy. In an absolute sense, God hateth nothing but sin, and sinners only on account of sin. (Hos. ix. 15.) Yet was it said of Esau and Jacob, "The elder shall serve the younger, before they had done either good or evil;" and here again, respecting the same brothers, it is added, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Cruden remarks, "To hate is not always to be understood rigorously. It frequently signifies no more than a lesser degree of love." He instances in the case of a man having two wives, the one of which he prefers to the other, as was plainly the case with Jacob himself, who is said to have hated Leah, which, in the context, is explained to mean only, that "he loved Rachel more than Leah." (See Gen. xxix. 30, 31. Compare Deut. xxi. 15.) The same writer refers to our Lord's precept, that a man must "hate his father and mother," before he can follow him, which, in a parallel passage, is explained in the same way. (Compare Luke xiv. 26, with Matt. x. 37.)

The only instance of hatred here stated, is, the preference given to Jacob in respect to his temporal heritage, in which we may surely say that Esau had no right to dictate to his Maker; and even if we carry the matter farther, and apply the passage to spiritual favours, surely no man can have claims upon the grace of God: for then, as the Apostle says in another case, "grace is no more grace." (Rom. xi. 6.) But of the Lord's indignation against Esau, or rather Edom his posterity, see our exposition of Ezek. xxv.

Not to dwell longer on this subject, we may remark, that the Prophet claims for his divine Master the honour due to a father, and the obedience owing to a master: on the contrary, we here find God was not only neglected, but insulted, by both priests and people, by the offer of polluted bread and faulty sacrifices. Such as the temporal governor would reject with contempt and scorn, brought they to offer to the Almighty; and when they attended the services of his temple, they were ready to complain, "What a weariness it is!" He therefore threatens to disinherit Israel, and call in the Gentiles; "For my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the LORD of hosts."

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. By Malachi.—"By the hand of Malachi." This name signifies, "My messenger," or "angel."

Ver. 2. I have loved you.—[The prophet shows in these verses, (ver. 2—5.) how much Jacob and the Israelites were favoured by Jehovah, more than Esau and the Edomites. Through every period of the history of Jacob's posterity, they could not deny that God had remarkably appeared on their behalf; but he had rendered the heritage of Esau's descendants, by wars and various other means, barren and waste for ever.]—Bagster.——Was not Esau.—These are the words of Jehovah.

Ver. 3. I hated Esau.—"I comparatively hated him, by giving him an inferior lot." Newcome.

Ver. 4. Return and build.—Newcome, "Build again."——I will throw down.—Namely, by Judas Maccabeus, (1 Macc. v. 65.) and John Hyrcanus. (Jos. Antiq. xiii. ix. 1.)——And they shall call them.—Or shall be called, &c.

Ver 6 If I be a father.—[From this verse to chap. ii. 9 the prophet reproves the priests and people for sacrificing the refuse of beasts; and denounces punishment against the former for not teaching the people their duty in this respect.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Who is there.—[Instead of mi, "who," one MS. (30 K.) with the LXX. reads ki, "surely," which is adopted by Houbigant and Archbishop Newcome, who renders, "Surely the doors shall be closed against you, neither shall ye kindle the fire of my altar in vain."]—Bagster.——Shut the doors—That is, attend them.

Ver. 11. Rising of the sun.—[As the preceding verse was a prediction of the abolition of the Levitical priesthood, so this is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles, and the spiritual priesthood of the Gospel times. As none but priests of Aaron's race might burn incense before Jehovah, a total change of the external administration of the sacred ordinances is evidently predicted.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. A corrupt thing.—See Levit. xxii. 19.

CHAPTER II.

1 He sharply reproveth the priests for neglecting their covenant, 11 and the people for idolatry, 14 for adultery, 17 and for infidelity.

AND now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 If [a] ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, I will [b] corrupt your seed, and [c] spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts; and [d] one shall take you away with it.

4 And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

5 My [e] covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, [f] and did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For [g] the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the [h] messenger of the LORD of hosts.

8 But ye are departed out of the way; ye [i] have caused many to [j] stumble at the law; ye have corrupted [k] the covenant of Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but [l] have been partial in the law.

10 ¶ Have [m] we not all one father? hath not one God created us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers?

11 Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the LORD which he [n] loved, [o] and hath married the daughter of a strange god.

13 ¶ And [r] this have ye done again, covering the altar of the LORD with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand.

14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the LORD hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—17. Farther reproofs to priests and people.—This chapter continues to reprove the priests for their unfaithfulness in their office, for which they are threatened with curses instead of blessings, and to be rewarded only with ignominy and contempt. The great degeneracy of the order is then complained of, and they are again threatened. The rest of the chapter reproves the people for marrying strange and idolatrous women, and multiplying divorces with all their consequent distress, in order to make way for such illicit alliances. (See Neh. x. 30, and xiii. 33, &c.) This part of the chapter is very obscure. Perhaps the sense of verse 16 may be, The man who puts away one wife, merely for the purpose of marrying another, and thus covers his sin under the cloak of law, is like a thief, who hides what he has violently taken under his garment, to conceal it. There are no sins so offensive to God, as those which are covered with the mantle of hypocrisy.

CHAP. II. Ver. 3. I will corrupt.—See margin. Or rebuke "your seed;" i. e. offspring.——And spread (Heb. "scatter") dung, &c.——And one shall take you away with it.—Newcome. "And one shall carry (or ye shall be carried) to the same place therewith."

Ver. 9. Have been partial.—See margin. Newcome, "Have respect to persons in the law."

Ver. 11. Which he loved.—Newcome, "Loveth;" i. e. which Jehovah loveth. ——Daughter of a strange god—That is, "the worshipper," says Newcome. [That is, a woman addicted to the worship of a strange god. The prophet here censures intermarriages with women of the surrounding idolatrous nations: and also divorces, which seem to have been multiplied for the purpose of contracting these prohibited marriages.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. The master and scholar.—See margin. Bp. Lowth, "The watchman and the answerer." See Ps. cxxxiv. and Isa. lxii. 6.

Ver. 13. Covering the altar of the Lord with tears, &c.—That is, the tears and groans of divorced wives, referred to the priests for decision.

Ver. 14. The wife of thy covenant—That is, thy covenanted wife.

Ver. 15. And did not he make one?—Did not God make one wife for Adam? ——and wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed.—See margin. That is, monogamy (having one wife) is more favourable to a religious education. Bishop Newcome quotes, from Madan's Thelyphthora, another rendering; "Did not one (God) make us? and hath he the residue of the Spirit? And what doth the one (God) seek? a godly seed," &c. But the prelate himself leads (by transposition) "And did not he (God) make one flesh? And (is there not) one spirit thereto? And what doth he seek?" &c. The text is certainly perplexed and obscure, and we dare not give a decided opinion.

Ver. 16. Saith that he hateth putting away.—Newcome, "Saith, I hate him that putteth away," viz. his wife, to marry another.——For one covereth violence with his garment—Or, "what he hath taken by violence under his garment."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. The messenger of the covenant—Whom Jews as well as Christians understand to be the Messiah. The ancient Jewish book Zohar says, "It is the angel of whom it is written, Gen. xlviii. 16. That angel is the Shechina, the Redeemer and Guardian of men."—[Aben Ezra acknowledges that the Lord whom they sought and the Angel of the covenant are the same, the same thing being intended under a double expression: and Kimchi says, "He is the King Messiah. He is the Angel of the Covenant."

Ver. 2. Like fullers' soap.—Heb. "Like the borith of the fullers." Mons. Goguet says, "With respect to the herb borith, I imagine it is sal-soort; a plant very common in Syria, Judea, Egypt, and Arabia: they burn it, and pour water on the ashes, which become impregnated with a very strong lixivial salt, proper for taking stains out of wool or cloth."

Ver. 3. Shall sit as a refiner.—A band of pious females were accustomed to meet weekly to read and converse upon the scriptures. This text came under consideration: one remarked, that a peculiar emphasis seemed to rest on the verb sit; and as she was acquainted with a refiner of metals, she would make inquiries of him. She inquired of him on her return home, "if it was customary to sit whilst purifying silver."—"O yes, madam, we always sit." "But why do you sit?" "Because it is necessary to watch the metal with great care; for if it is suffered to remain beyond a certain point, the silver itself is materially injured; so that whilst we blow the coals to increase the heat, we must sit and carefully watch for the moment when it is purified." "But how do you may offer [e] unto the LORD an offering in righteousness.

4 Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the LORD, as in the days of old, and as in [f] former years.

5 And I will come near to you to judgment: and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the [g] adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that [h] oppress the hireling [i] in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the LORD of hosts.

6 For I am the LORD, I change not; therefore [j] ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

7 ¶ Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return [k] unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. But [l] ye said, Wherein shall we return?

8 ¶ Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In [m] tithes and offerings.

9 Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

10 Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and [n] pour you out a blessing, that [o] there shall not be room enough to receive it.

11 And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not [p] destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the LORD of hosts.

13 ¶ Your words [q] have been stout against me, saith the LORD. Yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee?

14 Ye have said, It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his [r] ordinance, and that we have walked [s] mournfully before the LORD of hosts?

15 And now we call the proud happy; yea they that work wickedness are [t] set up; yea they that tempt [u] God are even delivered.

16 ¶ Then they that feared the LORD spake [v] often one to another: and the LORD hearkened, and heard it, and a book [w] of remembrance was [x] written before him for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name.

17 And they shall be [x] mine, saith the LORD of hosts, in that day when I make up my [y] [z] jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

18 Then shall ye return, and [a] discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not.

CHAPTER IV.

1 God's judgment on the wicked, 2 and his blessing on the good. 4 He exhorteth to the study of the law, 5 and telleth of Elijah's coming and office.

FOR, behold, the day [a] cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn [b] them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

2 ¶ But unto you [c] that fear my name shall the Sun [d] of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow [e] up as calves of the stall.

3 And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 ¶ Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments.

5 ¶ Behold, I will send you Elijah [f] the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD:

6 And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

preaching, he thus pointedly warns them against indifference or hypocrisy; "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" He tells them that now "the axe is laid to the root of the trees," and (alluding to another popular figure) that the great Person, whose forerunner he was, would "thoroughly purge his floor, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." (Matt. iii. 7—12.)

The following verses, (in the very spirit and power of Elias,) severely reprehend the crimes of all ranks of society among the Jews at this period; some being guilty of oppressing the poor and fatherless, with many other vices; and others even robbing God their Maker, by neglecting the commanded "tithes and offerings." This had already subjected them to the curse of God, withholding from them the usual fertility of their country. For this they had even dared to reproach the Lord, though it was the consequence of their own transgression.

In the conclusion of this chapter, however, a broad line of distinction is drawn between the righteous and the wicked—between those that fear God and those that fear him not. For the former "a book of remembrance was written;" the divine Being had entered, as it were, a record of their piety—he had marked with pleasure their associations for purposes of devotion—he calls them his jewels, and promises to spare them "as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—14. God's judgments on the wicked. Predictions of Messiah and his forerunner.—Those judgments which are in the preceding chapter compared to a refiner's fire, in their operation upon true Israelites, are here compared to a consuming oven, in their effects on hypocrites and unbelievers. The incarnation of Messiah is then promised under the beautiful image of the rising sun—"the Sun of righteousness"—when he arises "with healing under his wings," dissipating the shades and damps of night, and spreading light and joy and health around. But the late Mr. Robinson of Cambridge, has thrown a farther beauty on the metaphor from the following circumstance: Every morning, he was told, about sun-rise, in the Levant (particularly at Smyrna) a fresh gale of wind blows from the sea across the land, which, from its utility in clearing the infected air is called the Doctor. "Now (says Mr. R.) it strikes me that the Prophet Malachi, who lived in that quarter of the world, might allude to this circumstance, when he says, the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." (Oriental Customs, No. 367.

The chapter, and indeed the Old Testament, closes with a know when it is purified?" "That, madam, is very easy—it is the moment that the silver clearly and perfectly reflects the image of my face." Let the christian remember, that in all his afflictions and trials, Christ is blowing the coals; is making the furnace hotter; that he sits and watches his saints until his own blessed image is reflected in them; then are they purified.

Ver. 5. Swift witness.—[The coming of the Messiah would be followed by the condemnation and punishment of the Jewish nation. He would come near unto them in judgment, and be a swift witness to testify that their works were evil; and thus he would speedily convict the sorcerers, and other notorious criminals, of which the bulk of the nation at that time principally consisted, and bring them to condign punishment. Indeed the prevalence of the sins here enumerated, and of similar crimes, caused the Jews to reject Jesus the true Messiah, and his holy Gospel, and thus brought on the ruin of the whole nation.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. A book of remembrance.—An allusion to the records kept by kings. See Esth. vi. 1.

Ver 17. My jewels.—Newcome, "My peculiar treasure."

CHAP. IV Ver. 1. All that do wickedly—That is, all the impenitent and unbelieving. Rev. xxi. 8.

Ver. 2. Grow up—That is, thrive like stalled calves.

Ver. 5. Elijah the prophet—That is, a prophet in the spirit and power of Elijah. See exposition. So Messiah himself was often promised under the name of David.

Ver. 6. The heart of the fathers to the children, &c.—That is, to reconcile the people to each other. So the author of Ecclesiasticus seems to have understood it, Ecclus. xlviii. 10, 11. But Newcome and Chandler render it "The heart of the fathers with the children, and the heart of the children with the fathers," which denotes that family discipline is the foundation of all government. This passage looks very hard on the general complexion of society, as though by a master-stroke of the prophetic pencil, he wished to predict wherein the greatest demoralization of a nation consists—the dissolution of the family compact. It also points out the only way in which the tone of society may be restored. The right government of the family effectually embraces the whole body of a nation. See Anderson on the Domestic Constitution; also Luke i. 17.—Smite the earth.—Newcome. "The land." So Chandler, &c farther prediction respecting John the Baptist under the name Elijah, because, as an angelic interpreter explains it, he was to go before Messiah in the spirit and power of Elijah, (Luke i. 17.) His mission was to prepare the way of Messiah, as we read in the preceding chapter; to put an end to their dissensions and sectarian quarrels, which John endeavoured to do, by showing the people that they were all sinners before God, and stood equally in need of the grace of repentance, (Luke iii. 7—14.;) and, instrumentally, to convert both old and young, fathers and children, to the obedience of the just. Many individuals were converted, and were remarkably protected from the threatened curse; but the nation—the great mass of the people of all classes—remained obdurate and impenitent. The curse came and swept them all away.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF MALACHI.

[THE Book of Malachi, says Bishop Lowth, is written in a kind of middle style, which seems to indicate that the Hebrew Poetry, from the time of the Babylonish captivity, was in a declining state, and having passed its prime and vigour, was then fast verging towards the debility of age. The writings of this prophet, however, are by no means devoid of force and elegance; and he reproves the wickedness of his countrymen with vehemence, and exhorts them to repentance and reformation with the utmost earnestness. It is no mean recommendation of Malachi, as well as a sanction of his prophetic mission that his Book, though short, is often referred to in the inspired writings of the New Testament; and that his claim to the character of a prophet is recognized by the Evangelists, and is admitted by our Lord himself. (Mat. xi. 10.; xvii. 10—12. Mar. i. 2.; ix. 11, 12. Luke i. 16, 17.; vii. 27. Rom. ix. 13. He terminated the illustrious succession of the prophets, and sealed up the volume of prophecy, by proclaiming the sudden appearance of the Lord, whom they sought, in his temple, preceded by that messenger, who, like a harbinger, should prepare his way before him; the fulfilment of which prediction, by the preaching of John the Baptist, and the advent of Jesus of Nazareth, the true Messiah, and the Lord of life and glory, during the existence of the second temple, fully attests the divinity of his mission, and the Divine inspiration of his prophecy.]—Bagster.

END OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

HISTORICAL CONNEXION

BETWEEN THE

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Having arrived at the end of the History of the Old Testament, we find a blank of somewhat more than four hundred years, before the New Testament History commences. Knowing that those years were full of interesting events, we judge it will be acceptable to our readers, if we present them with a brief account of those events, so far as they relate to the affairs of the Jewish Church. Those who wish for a fuller narrative, will find all the information that history can furnish, in the valuable "Connexion" of the learned Dean Prideaux; or in Mr. Stackhouse's well known "History of the Bible," of which an improved edition has lately been published in quarto, by Bishop Gleig. The materials of both works, however, (as well as ours,) are confined to the two first Books of the Maccabees; and to the writings of Philo Judæus and Josephus, with some fragments of Greek and Latin authors.

We left Nehemiah in the government of Judea, to which he had been permitted to return, but how long he there continued, we are not able to ascertain, though we think it probable, as we have stated, that it might be to the utmost limit of our Old Testament History.

The events which seem most to have grieved Nehemiah, were the mixed marriages of the priests, the gross profanation of the Holy Sabbath, and the neglect of a necessary provision for public worship. But Nehemiah being a servant of Artaxerxes, if we even suppose him to have survived the above limit, his authority must of course have terminated with the government under which he acted.

About 335 years before Christ, Philip, king of Macedonia, being treacherously murdered by Pausanias, his son, Alexander the Great, succeeded him, at not more than twenty years of age, and had the command of all the Greek forces. His first object was the subjugation of the Persian empire, which he speedily attained. Soon after, he besieged Tyre, which detaining him some time, in the mean while he sent to demand both submission and supplies from the Jews, and other neighbouring provinces; but the former excused themselves, by pleading their oath of allegiance to Darius. At this, Alexander, always impatient of contradiction, was offended; and, after having subdued Tyre, immediately marched toward Jerusalem, B. C. 332.

Upon hearing of his approach, the High Priest Jaddua, who had previously offered prayers and sacrifices for the divine protection; and, as it was said, had been so directed by a divine vision, went out to meet him in his full robes, and with his sacred mitre, followed in solemn procession by the other priests, and by many of the inhabitants, in white. When they met the Conqueror, to the great astonishment of all, he bowed with reverence to the High Priest, and saluted him with a religious veneration. His favourite, Parmenio, ventured to inquire how it was, that he whom all men adored, should thus reverence a Jewish Priest; when he received for answer, that some time since, while in Macedonia, he had seen in a dream the same person so arrayed, who had encouraged him to come into Asia, and promised him, in the name of his God, success: that, therefore, he did not bow to the priest himself, but to the God whose sacred name he bore upon his mitre.

After this, turning again to Jaddua, Alexander embraced him very kindly, and going with him to the temple, he offered sacrifices to Jehovah; and the High Priest showed him the prophecies of Daniel, wherein had been predicted the overthrow of the Persian empire by a Grecian king, from which Alexander immediately concluded that he should be the person. (See Dan. viii. 20, 21, with our Exposition.)

The next day, calling the Jewish elders again around him, he bid them ask what they pleased; whereupon the High Priest only requested that they might enjoy the laws of their forefathers; that their brethren in Babylon and Media might be permitted to do the same; and that they might be excused from paying tribute on the seventh, or Sabbatic year. (Jos. Ant. b. xi. ch. 8.)

Alexander having left Jerusalem, was soon after met by the Samaritans, whose capital was then Shechem, or Sychar, near Mount Gerizim; when Sanballat, who had taken with him 7000 men to join his army, requested permission to build a temple on Mount Gerizim, and to make his son-in-law, Manasseh, the high priest, who had been driven from the temple of Jerusalem for marrying a heathen wife. To these requests there seems to have been no objection; but when they desired an exemption from taxes every seventh year, on the pretence of their being Jews, Alexander demurred, promising to consider farther of the subject on his return. In the mean time, he took the troops which Sanballat had brought with him into Egypt, and settled them in Thebais.

On going into Egypt, Alexander made Andromachus, one of his favourite captains, governor of Syria and Palestine, who going to Samaria on public business, was burnt by the Samaritans in his own house. This so enraged Alexander, when he heard of it, that after executing the murderers, he drove out the Samaritans, and planted in their city a colony of Macedonians, while the exiles fled to Shechem, and made it their future capital.

The reign of Alexander was, however, but of short duration, being only twelve years in all; one half of which he reigned as king of Macedon, and the other as Conqueror of the World; and yet this mighty conqueror could not subdue his lust of liquor, but died, as is now generally believed, in consequence of a fit of drunkenness. After his death (B. C. 323) the commanders of his army quarrelled among themselves, until they were all destroyed except four, who agreed to partition the whole of his dominions into separate kingdoms among themselves. (Jos. Antiq. b. xii. ch. 1.)

In this division, Ptolemy, the son of Lagus, whom the Greeks call Soter, (or the Deliverer,) obtained Egypt for his territory; and thinking that the provinces of Syria, Phœnicia, and Judea, would afford him a convenient barrier, sent Nicanor, one of his captains, with an army into Syria, while he invaded Phœnicia with a fleet, and thereby made himself master of those provinces. The Jews, however, as in the case of Alexander, made a difficulty in transferring their allegiance to a stranger; and would, perhaps, have effectually withstood him, had he not learned their rigid adherence to the Sabbath, which led him to storm the city on that day, very unexpectedly, when none of the inhabitants would defend its walls.

At first, Ptolemy Soter treated the Jews with rigour, and carried above 100,000 of them into Egypt; but reflecting on their fidelity to their former masters, he afterwards employed them in his garrisons and army; and confirmed to them all their former privileges and immunities, on which the whole nation cheerfully submitted to his government.

In this reign, Simon the Just, so called from the integrity of his character, (Eccles. i. 1—12,) succeeded to the High Priesthood, in which he continued nine years, and by his whole conduct much endeared his memory to this nation: but what has chiefly handed down his name to posterity, is the completion of the sacred canon of the Old Testament, by adding thereto the books of Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and the prophet Malachi, and others of the later prophets; some of which containing allusions to the time of Alexander, it is agreed, could be added by no person so probably as by this good priest. The fact, however, rests chiefly on tradition.

Ptolemy Soter was succeeded by Ptolemy Philadelphus, about 277 years before Christ. He is chiefly celebrated as the founder of the Alexandrian Library, and for the pains he took to adorn it with the Old Testament in Greek, which is said to have been the work of 70 (or 72) translators, taken from the different tribes of Israel; but this narrative has been mixed up with so much fable, that it is very difficult to ascertain the truth exactly. Such a translation was certainly made, under the name of the Septuagint, for it still exists; but how much of it was done at this time, or by how many hands, we presume not to decide. (See Joseph. Antiq. b. xii. ch. 2.) This Ptolemy had also the honour of setting at liberty many of the Jews whom his predecessor had enslaved. (Jos. b. xii. ch. 2.)

The next Ptolemy was surnamed Euergetes, or the Benefactor; and better answered to his name than is often the case; but his son, Philopater, who was, indeed, suspected of poisoning his father, was rash enough, after offering sacrifices at Jerusalem, to attempt to press into the Holy Place, and even the most Holy; and being prevented by the Jews, on his return he published a decree, forbidding any person from having access to him who refused to worship his idol; and another, enjoining every Jew, under penalty of death, to receive (by a hot iron) the impression of an ivy leaf, which was the badge of his god Bacchus. He even went so far as to collect a great number of Jews in the Hippodrome of Alexandria, with the avowed design of letting loose his elephants to destroy them: the elephants, however, by a special providence, avoided them, and turning their rage upon the spectators, destroyed great numbers. This circumstance had such an effect upon the king, that he set the Jews at liberty, and restored to them their privileges. (Jos. Antiq. b. xii. ch. 14.)

This tyrant (B. C. 204) was succeeded by Ptolemy Epiphanes, a child of only five years old; and this circumstance induced Antiochus the Great to march an army into Cœlo-Syria and Palestine, both which readily submitted to him, to get rid of the Egyptian yoke, and he granted them many privileges. Finding it now convenient to make peace with Ptolemy, to whom he gave his daughter Cleopatra in marriage, these provinces again reverted to the Egyptian crown; but were recovered by Seleucus Philopater, his successor, who at first behaved kindly to the Jews; but being informed that there were great riches in the temple at Jerusalem, he sent his treasurer, Heliodorus, to seize and bring them to Antioch; he was so terrified, however, by a vision of angels (as he thought it) in the temple, that he fainted, and was carried home in a litter, B. C. 176. (2 Mac. iii. 24, &c.)

Not long after this, the same Heliodorus, aspiring to the crown, poisoned his master Seleucus, in hopes of succeeding him, but was disappointed. Antiochus Epiphanes (a son of Antiochus the Great) being placed upon the Syrian throne, who afterwards proved a terrible scourge, both to the Jews and to the world. No sooner was he settled in the kingdom, than, having a heavy tribute to pay to the Romans, he deposed Onias, a singularly good man, from the high priesthood, which he sold for 360 talents to his brother Jason; and, not long after, to Menelaus, another brother, for 300 more.

While Antiochus was engaged in war with Egypt, a report was spread in Palestine that he was dead; and Jason thinking this a fit opportunity to recover the office he had bought over his brother's head, marched to Jerusalem with 1000 men; and having, by the assistance of his party, got possession of the city, he drove his brother Menelaus into the castle, and perpetrated all manner of cruelties upon those who appeared to be his enemies.

Antiochus supposing that the whole Jewish nation had revolted, and hearing of their rejoicings on the report of his decease, was so provoked, that laying siege to Jerusalem, and taking it by storm, there were in three days' time 40,000 persons slain, and as many more taken captive and sold to the surrounding nations. After this, he plundered the temple of its most valuable vessels and utensils, and sacrificed a sow upon the altar of burnt-offerings! B. C. 170. (1 Mac. i. 21, &c. 2 Mac. v. 11—16. Jos. Antiq. b. xii. ch. 7.) The same year, Antiochus sent an army of 22,000 men, with orders to put to death all the men they found, and carry off the women and children into captivity. Nor was this all: for shortly after, Antiochus made a decree, requiring all the king's subjects to conform to his religion; in consequence of which, the Jewish rites were suppressed, and the temple itself dedicated to Jupiter Olympius, whose image was erected upon the altar of burnt-offerings. (Compare with this history our Exposition of Daniel, chap. xi.)

This system was not confined to the metropolis. In every city Grecian idols were erected, with chapels, groves, and altars, for their worship. The eating of swine's flesh, and other unclean meats, was forced upon the Jews; nor was any violence omitted that might compel them to abandon their religion, or renounce their laws. Many, of course, yielded to these severe measures; the Samaritans, in particular, denied now that they were Jews; yet there were many also who refused to yield, and sacrificed their lives rather than their religion.

Among the latter, the most distinguished were the aged Eleazar, a chief doctor of the Jewish law; and the venerable matron, Solomona, and her seven sons. The former is supposed by some to have been the president of the Septuagint translators. The account given of his sufferings in the second book of Maccabees, is highly interesting, and bears the marks of authenticity. On a piece of swine's flesh being forced into his mouth, he spate it out, and then offered himself to the tormentors. And when some, in respect of his age and character, wished him to practice a deception, by swallowing other meat instead, which they were willing to connive at, he spurned at the idea. "It becometh not our age (said he) in any wise to dissemble, whereby many young persons might think that Eleazar, being fourscore years old and ten, were now gone to a strange religion; and so, through my hypocrisy, and desire to live a little time, a moment longer, should be deceived by me, and I get a stain to my old age, and make it abominable. For though, for the present time, I should be delivered from the punishment of men, yet should I not escape the hand of the Almighty, neither alive nor dead. Wherefore now manfully changing this life, I will show myself such a one as my age requireth; and leave a notable example to such as be young, to die willingly and courageously for the honourable and holy laws." And when he had said these words, immediately he went to the torment. . . . . But when he was ready to die with stripes, he groaned and said, "It is manifest to the Lord . . . . that I (now, endu some pains of body by being beaten; but in soul am well content to suffer these things, because I fear him." And thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue, not only unto young men, but unto all his nation. 2 Mac. vi. 18—31.

More heroical still, if possible, was the conduct of the pious matron and her seven sons, who suffered martyrdom soon after. She not only bore the sight of their unparalleled sufferings with fortitude, but exhorted them individually, as it came to their turn to suffer, to be faithful to the death. And when it came to the turn of the youngest son, to whom the King offered not only his life, but great promotion and rewards, and entreated his mother to counsel him to accept them; she promised to counsel him, and "bowing herself toward him, laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language (i. e. the Hebrew) on this manner:—'O my son, have pity on me, that bare thee nine months in my womb, and gave thee suck three years, and nourished thee, and brought thee up unto this age, and endured the troubles of education. . . . . Fear not this tormentor; but, being worthy of thy brethren, take thy death, that I may receive thee again in mercy with thy brethren.' While she was yet speaking these words, 'the young man offered himself to death before the tyrant,' saying, 'I, as my brethren, offer up my body and life for the laws of our fathers, beseeching God that he would speedily be merciful unto our nation; and that thou, by torments and plagues, mayest confess that he alone is God; and that in me and my brethren the wrath of the Almighty, which is justly brought upon our nation, may cease.' Then the king, being in a rage, handled him worse than all the rest, and took it grievously that he was mocked. So this man died undefiled, and put his whole trust in the Lord. Last of all, after the sons, the mother died." (2 Mac. vii.) And to these, it is thought, alludes the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, (ch. xi. 35.) when he speaks of some "who were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection." (See our Exposition of Hebrews xi. 31—40.)

While this persecution was going on at Jerusalem, Mattathias and his sons (who were afterwards known by the name of the Maccabees) retired to Modin, in the tribe of Dan, to lament over the fate of their country, and the miseries of their brethren, when the King sent one of his military officers, named Apelles, to carry the persecution into that quarter; and while he was addressing the people who had been collected together, and particularly Mattathias, to whom he promised great promotion and rewards, the latter declared his determination to obey God rather than man; and seeing at this time an apostate Jew presenting himself before a heathen altar, fired with the zeal of Phineas of old, he slew him, and afterwards those who had been sent to enforce the King's commands. (1 Mac. ii. 2 Mac. v. 27. Jos. Antiq. b. ii. ch. 10.)

Mattathias next fell upon the idols, and, with the assistance of his brethren, overturned the altars; and having for the present suppressed idolatry, retired to the mountains, where he collected all the strength he could, to meet future exigencies; but some of them hiding themselves in the caves of Judea, were there suffocated, refusing, as before, to defend themselves on the Sabbath day. Mattathias, reflecting on these circumstances, and consulting with the priests and elders, they now agreed that it was lawful to defend themselves upon that sacred day, whenever they should be attacked. The venerable man, now bending under the weight of extreme age and infirmities, (for he was aged 146,) called his five sons around him, counselled them to fight valiantly for their religion and their country, appointing Judas (commonly called Maccabeus) to be their leader, and Simon to be their counsellor. Having so done, he died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his fathers, in Modin, and was universally lamented by all who were faithful to their God. (1 Mac. iii.—2 Mac. vii.; Jos. Antiq. b. xii. ch. 9.)

Judas Maccabeus, so soon as he had taken upon him the command of this little band of heroes, (that is, about 166 years before Christ,) went round the cities of Judea, destroying every vestige of idolatry, and taking vengeance upon idolaters and apostate Jews. Soon afterwards, the cruel Antiochus returning home from an unsuccessful expedition against the Persians, was thrown into a rage, at finding the Jews had recovered their liberty, re-established their religion, and defeated all his generals. Upon this he vowed the complete destruction of the nation, and for that purpose ordered his charioteer immediately to drive him to Judea as fast as possible. In the very moment, however, of giving these orders, he was seized with a dreadful disorder in his bowels, soon after which, in a paroxysm of pain and of rage, he fell from his carriage, and was so bruised, that he was obliged to exchange his war chariot for a litter, and halt at a small town on the confines of Persia and Babylonia, where he soon after died in extreme torments, both of body and mind. (1 Mac. iii. 27; iv. vi.; Jos. Antiq. b. xii. ch. 13.)

Notwithstanding, however, the death of their great and inveterate enemy, the war was still carried on under his successor, Antiochus Eupator, then an infant. Judas, alike fired by religious zeal and military ardour, performed prodigies of valour. The Syrian generals, with armies vastly more numerous, were defeated in five successive battles; but in the sixth, in which was collected the flower of their armies, the Jews were so intimidated, that they urged Judas to retreat. To this the Jewish commander heroically replied, "God forbid that the sun should ever see me turn my back upon my enemies. If Providence has ordained that we should die, let us die manfully in fighting for our brethren." His army, which was only 3000, opposed to above 100,000, were so panic-struck, that more than two thirds of them deserted. Still Judas, with his little band of 800 men, attacked them with his usual ardour, and broke the right wing, commanded by Bacchides himself; but having so small a force to support him, the enemy's left wing closed upon and surrounded him: thus was he slain, and his heroic companions either killed or scattered, B. C. 161. (1 Mac. ix.; Jos. b. xii. ch. 18,19.)

Before this battle, it may be remarked, Judas had taken the precaution to send ambassadors to Rome, who were well received by the Senate, which sent orders that they should be no more molested, as being now the friends and allies of the Romans; but before these orders could arrive, Judas was, unhappily, no more. This was the first treaty entered into between the Jews and Romans, B. C. 144.

Bacchides, the victorious general, now becoming master of the country, pursued with severity all the adherents of the Maccabees; Jonathan, therefore, took upon him to collect together the scattered few who remained faithful to their cause, and taking his brother Simon also with him, they retired to the wilderness of Tekoa, where they encamped, with a morass on one side, and the Jordan on the other. Bacchides pursued them to their retreat, and attacked them on the Sabbath day, expecting no resistance. He was, however, disappointed, for they fought bravely, till they had slain about 1000 of their assailants, and then casting themselves into the Jordan, swam safely to the other side.

Bacchides, it is thought, might about this time receive from his master, Demetrius, the letter of the Roman Senate; and, therefore, after fortifying Mount Acra, and some neighbouring towns, he returned to Syria. Jonathan employed this interval of peace to so good advantage, that when Bacchides returned again in about two years after, he was glad to listen to proposals of peace, and took an oath to molest the Jews no more, to which he faithfully adhered, though his resolution was probably much strengthened by the vote of the Roman Senate above referred to.

At this time there were two claimants to the throne of Syria; namely, Demetrius, whose general was Bacchides, just mentioned, and Alexander Balas, who pretended to be the son of Antiochus Epiphanes, but who turned out to be an impostor, who had been artful enough to deceive the Roman Senate, and obtain their sanction. Jonathan had now acquired so much celebrity by his military skill and prudence, that both parties courted his alliance, and he took part with the latter, not only because the former had been hitherto his enemy, but also, probably, because he thought it safest to take the same side with the Romans. Alexander (the late High Priest, Alcimus, having been some years deceased) appointed Jonathan to that office, and enrolled him (as his letter expressed it) "among the King's friends." He accordingly officiated in his pontifical robes on the succeeding feast of tabernacles, B. C. anno 152, being the first High Priest of the Asmonæan family. (1 Mac. x. 21, &c.; Jos. Antiq. b. xiii. ch. 5.)

Demetrius and Alexander now coming to an open battle, the former was slain; and the latter obtaining peaceable possession of the kingdom, married the daughter of Ptolemy Philometer, and honoured Jonathan, by inviting him to his nuptials, and introducing him to his father-in-law, Ptolemy, who also treated him with great respect. Alexander, however, did not long enjoy this state of peace and comfort, for Demetrius Nicanor, son of the late King Demetrius, entered Cilicia with an army which he had collected, to revenge his father's death. Finding means to gain over to his interest Apollonius, governor of Cœlo-Syria, he sent him with an army, and in order to compel Jonathan to desert Alexander, had made with Demetrius, challenged him to fight. Jonathan accepted the challenge; and not only defeated him, but pursued him to Azotus, (or Ashdod,) where he burnt the famous temple of Dagon, whither the Syrians had fled for shelter.

Ptolemy Philometer, King of Egypt, coming to the relief of Alexander, his son-in-law, the latter basely set Ammonius to lie in ambush to destroy him. Ptolemy discovering the treachery, took from him his daughter, and married her to Demetrius. Alexander soon after returning with a great army, Ptolemy and Demetrius united their forces to oppose him, and obtained the victory. Ptolemy, however, soon after died of his wounds received in the engagement; but not before he had enjoyed the satisfaction of receiving the head of Alexander, from an Arabian prince, into whose hands the wretch had fallen. (1 Mac. xi. 1, &c.)

During these transactions, Jonathan laid siege to the fortress at Jerusalem; but some of the garrison escaping by night, informed Demetrius, who in consequence marched from Antioch with an army for its relief. Jonathan, however, meeting the King at Ptolemais, so softened him by his address and by his presents, that he was not only pacified, but bestowed on him new favours, particularly an exemption from tolls and tributes.

Jonathan returned to the siege of Jerusalem; but finding he made little progress, entreated Demetrius to withdraw his garrison, to which he readily agreed, on condition that Jonathan would assist him against his own subjects, who, wearied with his tyranny and oppression, had conspired against him. Jonathan did so, and effected such a slaughter among the rebels, that they were obliged to sue for mercy. Tyrants, however, have no gratitude; for, after all his promises, Demetrius threatened to enforce the taxation which he had promised to remit; and would doubtless have done so, but that Tryphon found employment for his army in another quarter.

This Tryphon had formerly served King Alexander, as governor of Antioch, but not having been employed during the present reign, and knowing both the army and the people to be highly discontented, he thought this a proper time to aim at the crown himself, which had long been the object of his ambition. He, therefore, went into Arabia, and getting into his hands Antiochus, son of the late Alexander, brought him into Syria, and claimed for him the kingdom. Upon this, all the soldiers which Demetrius had disbanded, and many others, flocked around his standard, by which means he raised a powerful army, and placed Antiochus upon the throne, with the surname of Theos, or divine.

Tryphon also secured the interest of Jonathan, which was not difficult, after the ungrateful treatment he had received from Demetrius; and artfully persuaded him, with only 1000 of his own men, to accompany him to Ptolemais, where, upon entering, the garrison gates immediately were shut, Jonathan made a prisoner, and the men who accompanied him put to death: yet, after all this, he had the hypocrisy to send word to Simon, who had succeeded his brother Jonathan in the command, that he detained Jonathan only for 100 talents, which he owed the King; and that upon being paid this sum, and receiving Jonathan's two sons as hostages for his loyalty, he should be set at liberty. The money was sent, together with the lads; but when he had got them in his power, he murdered both the father and his sons; and, to conclude the tragedy, the young King Antiochus also, declaring himself King of Syria, as doubtless was his original intention. Simon, having procured the body of his brother, gave it honourable interment in his father's sepulchre, and erected over it a stately monument of white marble. (1 Mac. xii.; Jos. Antiq. b. xiii. ch. 9, 10.)

Simon, when settled in his government, sent to treat with Demetrius, who confirmed to him both the government and priesthood, with a release of all taxes, tolls, and tributes, upon the condition of aiding him against the usurper Tryphon. The Romans and Lacedemonians also renewed their treaties with him. Having thus obtained the independent government of Judea, Simon set himself upon measures of defence; but pulled down the fortress of Jerusalem, that it might no longer be the retreat of faction and sedition. He also took the city of Zion, drove out all the idolaters, and destroyed their idols. In every thing, we are told, "he sought the good of his nation," so that "his authority and honour always pleased them well;" for "he was honourable in all his actions." (1 Mac. xiv. 4, 5.)

Simon, however, had a son-in-law of a most abandoned character, Ptolemy, the son of Abubus, who being in league with his enemies, (as is believed,) when Simon came to Jericho, of which this man was governor, invited him and his sons to a feast, and murdered them in the midst of their festivities. Not only so, but he sent a party of assassins to Gazara, where resided Simon's son John, surnamed Hyrcanus; but he, having heard what passed at Jericho, was prepared to receive them, and after giving them their due reward, set off immediately for Jerusalem, whither he understood the traitor had also sent persons to take possession of the city. (1 Mac. xvi.; Jos. Ant. b. xiii. ch. 12.)

John Hyrcanus succeeded his father Simon in all his honours, B. C. 135, but what became of the wretch who murdered him, is unknown. Antiochus having received from him an account of his too successful treason, thought this a favourable opportunity to reduce Judea again under the Syrian yoke; and, therefore, sent a large army thither, which, having driven Hyrcanus out of the field, shut him up, with all his forces, within the walls of Jerusalem, and there besieged them so closely, that they were obliged to surrender for want of food: then, to procure their personal liberty, they were compelled also to give up their arms, and to pay a heavy tribute.

Hyrcanus was, however, so far reconciled to the conqueror, that he accompanied him to the Parthian war; and returned home, at the end of the year, loaded with military honours; while the immense army of Antiochus, which stopped the winter, and filled the country, was in one fatal night destroyed by the inhabitants, whom he had grievously oppressed. In the mean time, Demetrius recovered his liberty, and afterwards, at his brother's death, his kingdom: but pursuing the same tyrannical course, he became involved in fresh troubles, by the insurrection of his subjects under Alexander Sabrina, the pretended son of Alexander Balus, supported by Ptolemy Physcon, who set him on the Syrian throne, and soon after, upon receiving offence, was as active to pull him down again. (Jos. b. xii. ch. 16.)

During these commotions, Hyrcanus seized the opportunity to recover his independence, and even to enlarge his territories. He built the tower of Baris, fifty cubits high, and accessible only from the temple. He took several cities that had been left without garrisons, owing to the drain of soldiers for the war. B. C. 130, he subdued Shechem, the chief town of the Samaritans, and destroyed their temple, which Sanballat had built about 200 years before, on mount Gerizim. He conquered the Idumeans, (or Edomites,) and compelled them to become proselytes to the Jewish religion; he renewed his alliance with the Romans, and obtained a decree of compensation to be granted from the Syrians. And lastly, growing into years himself, he sent his two sons, Aristobulus and Antigonus, to besiege Samaria, which stood a year's siege before it could be taken; and when taken, Hyrcanus ordered it to be so destroyed, that it should never be rebuilt; and yet it was rebuilt before the birth of Christ, and Herod restored it to its ancient splendour.

After the capture of Samaria, Hyrcanus engaged in no foreign wars, but towards the close of his life he was drawn into an unpleasant altercation with the Pharisees, who accused him of being the son of a strange woman, and not eligible to the priesthood; which, as it appeared to arise from personal enmity, and was not founded in fact, so provoked him, that he renounced the sect, and went over to the Sadducees. This was certainly a measure unworthy of his character, who was considered, not only as a hero, but as a wise and good governor, during the twenty-nine years he held the administration of public affairs. It does not follow, however, that he changed his religious principles; persons often change sides in religion, as well as politics, from motives of resentment or personal pique, which should have no effect upon the judgment.

* This term, Maccabee, is generally supposed to be derived from the Hebrew of Ex. xv. 11, which is Mi Camo-ka Bælim Jehovah, of which the initial letters form Maccabi; but others think it derived from Mak-ke Baiah, "a conqueror in the Lord." Prideaux's Conn. Anno 167, B. C.

John Hyrcanus was succeeded both in his civil and ecclesiastical government by his eldest son Judas, otherwise called Aristobulus, the first Jew who wore a crown after the Babylonish captivity, whereby he changed the state into a monarchy, B. C. 107. He was a man of a sanguinary disposition, as appeared in his conduct toward his own mother and brethren; and in going to war with the Iturians, (descendants of Ishmael,) in order to convert them to the law of Moses. Vice, however, as well as virtue, is its own reward, for he died miserably under the pangs of bodily pain, augmented by the stings of a guilty conscience, after a short and miserable reign of one year only. (Joseph. Jew. War, book i. chap. 3; Antiq. book xiii. chap. 19; book xx. chap. 8.)

He was succeeded by his brother Alexander Jannæus, who "out of prison came to reign." Being possessed with the military mania of the age, he engaged in a variety of wars, not only with the neighbouring states, but his own subjects; and thus he filled up a miserable and inglorious reign of twenty-six years, and died at the age of forty-nine. His Queen, Alexandra, succeeded him, and gaining the Pharisees to her side, reigned nine years; but in the latter part of her reign, and during her last illness, her son, Aristobulus II., becoming dissatisfied with the conduct of the Pharisees, under whose advice she acted, took possession of the chief places of Judea. Upon her death, (B. C. 69,) her eldest son, Hyrcanus, succeeded to the throne, and retained it peaceably two years, when he was opposed by his brother Aristobulus, to whom, after reigning a year and a half longer, he resigned the government, which he enjoyed about the same period; when, withdrawing into Jerusalem he was besieged therein by Pompey, and taken prisoner. Hyrcanus was then again made High Priest and Prince of the Jews, but not allowed to wear the diadem. Judea was reduced to its ancient limits, and made tributary to Rome. Pompey, though now master of Jerusalem, meddled not with any of its sacred treasures.

B. C. 50. War broke out between Cæsar and Pompey; and in the following year, the decisive battle was fought upon the plains of Pharsalia, when the latter being defeated, and soon after slain, the former became master of the world. Two years after, when Alexandria was besieged and taken by Cæsar, the celebrated Alexandrian library, above mentioned, was set on fire, and great part of it was consumed; but whether designedly or by accident, seems uncertain.

After various changes of fortune between Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, in the year B. C. 47, Julius Cæsar coming into Syria, confirmed the former in the Priesthood; and upon the death of Julius Cæsar, the ambassadors of the Jews were introduced into the Roman Senate, and obtained many privileges for their nation. In the year 41 B. C., Herod and Phasael, the sons of Antipater, were made Tetrarchs of Judea. In the following year, the latter committed suicide; but the former, flying to Rome for assistance, (B. C. 40,) obtained a grant of the kingdom of Judea from the Senate, with orders from Mark Antony, addressed to the governors of Syria, to assist him in obtaining it. Herod accordingly, assisted by Socius, the Roman general, laid siege to Jerusalem, which was taken with much bloodshed. Antigonus, Prince and High Priest, was beheaded, by order of Mark Antony, and Herod put in full possession of the kingdom, B. C. 37.

Ananel was about this time appointed High Priest; but, in the year 35 B. C., was superseded by Aristobulus, who, in one year afterwards, was drowned by order of Herod, who thereupon re-appointed Ananel. In the war which now broke out between Augustus and Mark Antony, Herod took part with the latter; but the former obtaining the victory, Herod went to Rome, to pay his court to Augustus, who confirmed him in the kingdom of Judea; and next year, passing through Palestine, visited him, and was sumptuously entertained.

B. C. 28. Cæsar Octavianus, (nephew to Julius Cæsar,) with the consent of the Senate and people of Rome, assumed the title of Emperor, whereby the Roman government was changed from a Republic to a Monarchy, and he was the following year surnamed Augustus. The same year Herod put to death his beautiful wife Mariamne, the daughter of Alexandra, in a fit of jealousy, which it afterwards appeared was without foundation; and about twenty years later, to pass over his intermediate cruelties, Herod condemned and put to death two of his sons also.

In the intermediate space, however, Herod more commendably employed himself in rebuilding, or in repairing and embellishing the temple, forty-six years before the first passover of our Lord. (See our exposition of John ii. 12—25.) But all Herod's erections were not of this religious character, for many years before this, he built both a theatre and an amphitheatre, and introduced shows and games of heathen origin, and very inconsistent with the laws of God, as well as the customs of the Jews.

We now arrive at the threshold of the Christian dispensation. In the 6th year B. C., or rather before the common era called Anno Domini, an angel appeared to Zachariah, as he was officiating in the temple, promising him a son, named John, who was to be the forerunner of the Messiah; and about six months afterwards, the same angel appeared to the Virgin Mary, promising to her, that she should be the mother of Christ himself, who should be circumcised by the name of JESUS. (See Luke i. 11, 26, 57.)

§ III. OF THE JEWISH SECTS, &c.

The religious controversies of the Old Testament were confined almost entirely to the question of Idolatry; and, indeed, while there were living prophets to be consulted, who held communion with the Deity, there was little room for disputation; but when inspiration ceased, and revelation was completed, there then lay no appeal but "to the law and to the testimony."—if any spake not according to this word, it was because they were devoid of the true light. (Isaiah viii. 20.)

The Scriptures of the Old Testament, which were completed by, or in the time of Ezra, became now the study of the Jewish Scribes and Lawyers; and the difference of interpretations, to which the weakness of human judgment always exposes men who dare to think for themselves, naturally led to the formation of different sects and parties. Josephus mentions three principal sects as existing in his time, and leads us to their origin.

Of these sects, the Pharisees may be considered as the most numerous, and as constituting the orthodox party in the Jewish church. They believed in the existence of angels and separate spirits; in the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the dead, as we shall see when we come to Mat. xvi. 12, &c. In the mean time, we may notice the account which Josephus gives of them. He says—but we must remember that he was himself a Pharisee—he says, "The Pharisees are those which are esteemed most skilful in the exact explication of their laws. These ascribe all to fate, [or Providence,] and to God; and yet allow, that to act what is right, or the contrary, is principally in the power of men, although fate does not co-operate in every action." (Jewish Was. book ii. chap. 8.) So in his Antiquities (book xvii. chap. 1.) he says, "When they determine that all things are done by Fate, they do not take from men the freedom of acting as they think fit; since their notion is, that it hath pleased God to make a temperament, whereby what he wills is done; yet so that the will of man can act virtuously or viciously." By this we understand the Jewish Historian to mean, that this sect believed in the overruling providence of God, and yet admitted the free agency and accountability of men, which, indeed, we consider as the uniform doctrine of the Bible.—He proceeds—"They (the Pharisees) say, that all souls are incorruptible, but that the souls of good men only are removed into other (human bodies:" and here he seems to explain the immortality of the soul on the Pythagorean system—not as going, at death, into a separate state of purity and happiness, but as passing from one body to another, till, by degrees, they become perfectly pure, and fit to return to the Supreme Spirit from whom they came; that is, to Him who was the universal soul of all nature. (See Dict. of Religions, in Pythagoreans.) But this is very far from the doctrine either of the Old Testament or the New; and if adopted by the Pharisees, must, we think, have been at a much later period. As to the state of mankind after death, the Pharisees teach, according to the Jewish historian, "that the souls of good men only are removed into other bodies; but that the souls of bad men are subject to eternal punishment." (Jew. War, as above cited.) He describes the Pharisees also as very friendly and sociable, but temperate in their diet, and regular in their habits.

The Sadducees were less numerous, but found chiefly among the higher orders. According to Prideaux, they were so called from one Sodock, (or Sadock,) the disciple of Antigonus Socho, supposed to have lived about three centuries before Christ; and who often used to inculcate upon his disciples, that they ought to serve God disinterestedly, and independent of the hopes of reward, or fear of punishment; from hence it is supposed this Sadock and others hastily inferred, that neither rewards nor punishments were to be expected—a mistake which could be made only by minds exceedingly depraved. Such, however, we know from authority far superior to Josephus, was the doctrine of the Sadducees in the time of our Lord. The Sadducees (according to St. Luke, Acts xxiii. 8.) teach, "that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit:" but how they who are universally admitted to have received and reverenced the writings of Moses, could deny the existence of angels, so often mentioned in the Pentateuch, has been matter of much difficulty. Our conception is, that they did not deny that such appearances had been seen in the early ages of the world, but supposed them to be now discontinued, and probably persuaded themselves that they were but the phantoms of imagination. Certain it is, that by our Lord's time, they were generally tainted with infidelity, though probably in very different degrees. So Reland, Lightfoot, Doddridge, and many other divines, are of opinion, that the Sadducees did not universally reject the writings of the prophets, but only considered them of authority inferior to those of Moses; but they utterly rejected the traditions of the Rabbins. This we consider to be the truth as to many of them, though the far greater part were probably deeply sunk both in infidelity and vice. In fact, it does not appear from the Gospel, that the Sadducees were more hostile to our Saviour and his doctrines, than were the Pharisees: nor were "publicans and sinners," of the worst class, farther from the kingdom of heaven, than those who sought, by their own merits, to justify and save themselves.

There was a third sect, however, called Essens, of which Josephus gives a much fuller account than of the other two. He describes them as a plain, simple, and virtuous people, full of devotion and good works; but they were recluse, and lived in separate communities. Their devotion was, however, mingled with superstition, and their faith with some mystical notions, at this distance of time hard to be understood. They admitted no members into their society, but on a long probation and trial: and those which approved of marriage, (which many did not,) took even their wives first upon that principle. This sect appears not to be mentioned or alluded to in the Scriptures: though some think that John the Baptist was probably educated amongst them in the wilderness.

In the New Testament, we read also of two Greek Philosophic sects, namely, the Epicureans and Stoics, both mentioned in Acts xvii. 18, where their distinguished principles will be noticed; as also who the Grecians or Hellenists, and Libertines were, (which were not properly sects,) on Acts vi. 1, 9.

There are several other denominations of persons which have been taken for sects, but without sufficient ground. The Scribes were, in the first instance, only Transcribers of the sacred Books; but from their being peculiarly conversant with them, they were considered as men of learning; they became teachers and professors of the Mosaic law, and were therefore called Lawyers, though the latter term probably included the students, as well as the professors. The Herodians were the political adherents and flatterers of Herod the Great; the Gaulonites, or Galileans, were, on the other hand, among his bitterest enemies, as protesting against all subjection to any foreign power. (See exposition of Luke xiii. 1, &c.) Some of these were also called Zealots, from their affected zeal for their rights and liberties; and these, indeed, rendered themselves particularly conspicuous in the last destruction of Jerusalem. The Rechabites, and Nazarites, were persons under particular vows, as will be found explained where those terms occur.

The Samaritans were, properly, the inhabitants of Samaria. This city was built by Omri, King of Israel, about 925 B. C. (1 Kings xvi. 23, 24;) though it is probable that the district might be called by that name before. (1 Kings xiii. 32.) In the reign of Hoshea, (B. C. 725,) it was reduced to a heap of ruins. Esar-haddon repeopled it with idolatrous Cuthites, from Media or Persia; but these were driven out by Alexander the Great, and a colony of Macedonians planted in their stead: so that, though situated but a small distance from Jerusalem, it was always, more or less, the seat of idolatry. When the Jews were in prosperity, the Samaritans claimed relation to them, calling themselves Hebrews, and said they were descended from the tribe of Joseph; but when they were in trouble they disowned them, and called themselves Phœnicians: at all times, however, they preferred their own temple at Mount Gerizim to the temple of Jerusalem, and the Jews would have no dealings with the Samaritans. (John iv. 9, 20.) There are still some remains of this people in the East, particularly at Shechem; and they have a copy of the Books of Moses in the Samaritan character, which they pretend to be the original Hebrew, and many learned men admit the claim; but there are various verbal differences between them, of which the most material are in the Chronology, which agrees much nearer to the Septuagint than to the Hebrew.

But there are two sects often named, (though not in Scripture,) in relation both to the ancient and modern Jews, namely, Rabbinists (Talmudists, or Cabbalists,) and Karaites; the explanation of which will necessarily lead us back to the Jewish Schools, in the period which we have been considering.

The Jews, as every ancient nation, had a great number of traditions handed down from time immemorial, under the name of Moses, and supposed to contain unwritten revelations of the divine will, delivered verbally to him in the mount, and therefore called the oral law, which is considered by many of equal, and even of superior authority to the Scriptures. These are supposed to have been carefully collected by Ezra, or the Rabbins (or Rabbies) who succeeded him, and by them handed down to Rabbi Jehudah, surnamed Hakkadosh, or the Holy, who formed them into a volume, called the Mishna, about the close of the second century of the Christian era. But the fertile imaginations of the Rabbis could not rest here: they wrote commentaries on these traditions, which were called Gemara; and these, together with the Mishna above named, formed the Talmud, in which the modern Jews so much glory, and are therefore called Talmudists. Some of these, however, from the first, rejected both these traditions and the comments on them, and were therefore called Karaites, (or Caraites,) that is men who adhered to the text of Moses, and its literal interpretation; whereas the comments of the Gemara were almost wholly mystical and allegorical. The Gemaras of Jerusalem and of Babylon are, however, different and as either became connected with the Mishna, it formed the Jerusalem, or the Babylonish Talmud; of which the latter is most generally in esteem with the Jews, as containing most of the marvellous and absurd. These latter form what the modern Jews call their Caballa, and its professors and admirers are called Caballists; who carried their speculations from grammatical niceties into the regions of metaphysics, astrology, and magic. (See Allen's Modern Judaism, chap. v.)

The distinction between the Rabbinists and Karaites may be traced up to the ancient Jewish schools of Hillel and Shammai; or, as Josephus calls them, Pollio and Simeas. The former, according to the Rabbinists, was born in Babylonia, and came to Jerusalem at forty years of age, where, after a close application to the study of the Jewish laws, &c., at eighty he was chosen President of the Sanhedrim, or great council of the Jews, and lived to make him a second Moses) to the venerable age of 120 years. The origin of this Sanhedrim the Rabbins carry up to the times of Ezra, and even Moses, but without any sufficient authority; for though it is certain Moses had a council of elders, or magistrates, to assist him (Num. xi. 16, &c.) we have every reason to believe it was not regularly continued; nor have we any trace of it in the times of Ezra and Nehemiah; but the most judicious writers, both Jewish and Christian, date its origin under the government of the Maccabees. The celebrated Hillel, above-mentioned, is known to have been contemporary with Herod the Great; as was also Shammai, who at one time took an active part against him. The latter is said to have been at first a scholar to Hillel, and afterwards Vice-President under him. The Jews consider him as next to his master in point of sacred learning, though they differed materially in their opinions; the former being considered as the head of the Mishnical doctors, and the latter as the chief of the Karaites. The latter were reduced to insignificance and obscurity, by a pretended voice from heaven in favour of the former: the Karaites, however, a few centuries after Christ, revived, upon the publication of the Talmuds, which, by their absurdities, led many to protest against them: they still exist as a sect among the Jews in the East, and are by many considered, not only as the more rational, but also the more learned part of the Jewish nation.

The Masorets were a body of Jewish Scribes, which existed from about 450 years before Christ, to 1000 after. Their professed object was, to preserve the sacred Hebrew text from loss, by counting the words, and even letters. They are also supposed to have invented both the vowel-points, and accents, in order to preserve as much as possible the pronunciation, to distinguish the same word, when used in different senses, and for sundry other important purposes. Their work is called the Masorah, which signifies "tradition."

Christian writers, as well as Jewish, often make reference to the Targums on the Old Testament: it may be, therefore, acceptable to some of our readers to explain their nature, especially as we have referred to them ourselves in some instances. The existing Targums are ten in number, containing paraphrases and expositions of different parts of the Old Testament. The principal of these are—1. The Targum of Onkelos, confined to the five books of Moses, and supposed to have been written by a disciple of the celebrated Hillel, above-mentioned: it is preferred to all the others for the purity of its style, and its adherence to the true meaning of the text.—2. The Targum of the Pseudo Jonathan, is also on the Pentateuch, but much inferior to the former, of little esteem, and certainly not written by Jonathan Ben Uzziel, as the title imports.—3. The Jerusalem Targum is also confined to the books of Moses—is much inferior in style, and full of fables.—4. The Targum of Jonathan Ben Uzziel on the Prophets: this is a genuine work, and ranks next to Onkelos, with whom he is reported to have been a fellow student. This work includes both the former and latter prophets. The other Targums are confined to particular books, and are of less note, and lower antiquity. (For a fuller account of these, see Horne's Critical Introduction, 4th edition, vol. ii. page 163—170.)

There are two other ancient Jewish authors frequently referred to by Christian writers, one of whom has furnished much of this Connecting Essay, namely, Flavius Josephus, who was born about A. D. 37, and early distinguished by his learning and zeal as a Pharisee. He had a command in the Jewish army against the Romans, and was taken prisoner by them; but he had the address so to ingratiate himself with Titus, the Roman general, that he became his friend and protector; under whose patronage he wrote the History of the Jewish War, Jewish Antiquities, &c. which have been well translated into English by Mr. Whiston.

Philo-Judæus, a Jew of Alexandria, of an illustrious and sacerdotal family, was sent by his countrymen to plead their cause before Caligula against Appion, about A. D. 40, or soon after, and wrote an account of their mission, and also of the sect of Essens, above-mentioned, and became a zealous disciple of Plato, the philosopher.

INTRODUCTION TO THE NEW TESTAMENT.

"WHOEVER would attain to a true knowledge of the Christian Religion, in the full and just extent of it," says Locke, "let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament, wherein are contained 'the words of eternal life.' It has God for its author, salvation for its end, and truth, without any mixture of error, for its matter."

In calling the latter part of our Scriptures the New Testament, reference was undoubtedly had to Heb. ix. 16, 17, wherein the death of Christ is represented as sealing to believers all the blessings of the Gospel: and yet the original term (Diatheke) is so much oftener rendered Covenant than it is Testament, that we cannot but agree with Doddridge, Campbell, and most modern commentators, that our Scriptures would be more accurately defined, "The Old and New Covenants;" as containing the history and doctrine of the Two Covenants, legal and evangelical: the former ratified by the Mosaical sacrifices; the latter, by the atonement of Jesus Christ.

The first part of the New Testament contains the history of Jesus Christ, as recorded by the four Evangelists, whose memoirs are therefore usually called the four Gospels,* as containing the good tidings of our salvation. These we consider as distinct and independent narratives, compiled partly perhaps from recollection, but reduced to their present form under the influence of the same Spirit by which the authors preached the gospel, and wrought miracles in its defence. It is questioned whether either of these Evangelists had seen the writings of the other.

It is natural to suppose, that four persons, writing contemporary narratives, might relate different incidents relative to the same facts; one being more impressed by one circumstance, and another by a different one. It must also be recollected, that the apostles were not always together, being sent forth on different missions; (Mark vi. 7.;) consequently they did not all witness the same miracles, nor all hear the same discourses. Our Lord might work many similar miracles, and deliver the same parables, with some variety of imagery or expression, on different occasions. Matthew or Mark might record the one, and Luke or John the other; and this would account for discrepancies which have, without reason, been magnified into contradictions. There is also a great latitude and variety in the Greek, as well as English particles of time and place; these, differently rendered, may occasion seeming inconsistencies, where real ones have not existed. Examples in illustration of all these remarks, we defer to their proper places in the several narratives.

In illustrating the several Gospels, different methods have been pursued; some have considered each singly and detached; others have interwoven them into one narrative, or placed the different accounts in opposite columns, in the form of a harmony, or diatesseron, in order the better to compare them, and reconcile their apparent differences. Our plan will partly combine these methods. We shall go through Matthew first, examining all the facts he has recorded, and compare them with the other Evangelists, who appear to record the same, or others very similar. On Mark, we shall pass lightly over what corresponds with Matthew, and so with Luke and John, which will prevent much repetition. We see little like chronological arrangement in either of the Evangelists. Events were recorded as they recurred, or were brought to mind by the Holy Spirit who directed them, their great object not being to form a well digested history, but to collect such facts and discourses as were adapted to direct their faith to the true Messiah. Thus St. John says, "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his name." John xx. 31.

The Old and New Dispensations (or Testaments) compared.

I. But there is another point of view in which the harmony of the New Testament may be considered, namely, as it corresponds with the Old Testament in several interesting points of view, two or three of which we shall just mention.

1. Considered historically, we may observe, that the Mosaic revelation is not only admitted but confirmed by that of Christ. The former may lead a dispassionate inquirer to embrace the latter; but the latter so necessarily supposes the former, that we find it difficult to conceive of any man as a believer in Christ, who rejects Moses and the Prophets. Indeed our Saviour himself places this in the strongest point of view, when he says, "If men hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rise from the dead." (Luke xvi. 31.)

2. The New Testament corresponds with the Old, as it contains the fulfilment of many of its prophecies; those particularly which relate to the Messiah. To him "gave all the Prophets witness." From the first promise, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, we have a long series of predictions, pointing to the character and works, the life and death, resurrection and future triumphs of the Messiah, the fulfilment of which is distinctly pointed out in various parts of the New Testament, and particularly in the Gospels. Some passages of the Old Testament may be cited only by way of accommodation, or illustration; but others, quoted by way of argument, have stood the test of the most rigorous examination.

Typical institutions are a species of prophecy, by means of emblems and figurative action, which, though not so well understood in our western world, were in the East equally intelligible and satisfactory with the clearest verbal prophecies. Travellers into these countries are surprised to find the frequency of figurative action, and the ease with which it is understood. Among the Old Testament types, the sacrifices are the most interesting and important. The scapegoat, the paschal lamb, and the whole burnt-offering, all, though in different points of view, direct us to the one offering of Messiah. But the New Testament, while it clears away the obscurity of former prophecies, presents us with a new series, extending no less distance into futurity than those of Abraham and Jacob, and terminating only with the church and with the world. Our Lord himself foretold the past calamities and present dispersion of the Jews. St. Paul has drawn the character of the Man of Sin, and marked his progress and final overthrow; but St. John, in his Revelations, presents us with the most extensive prophecies ever exhibited. They are indeed enveloped in the same obscurity as those of former ages; but Time has already partially withdrawn the veil, and, as he passes on, will still roll back the remaining clouds.

3. Another point of view in which these dispensations may be compared, regards their peculiar temper and spirit. That of the Old Testament was partial and severe. It was confined to the children of circumcision; yea, with some exceptions, to a single nation, and that one of the smallest, and which, as their own Scriptures assure us, had as little to boast in respect of merit as of numbers. (Deut. vii. 7, 8. Dan. ix. 8, 16.) But the gospel has in it nothing peculiar to any nation, or country. We have the clearest proofs in matter of fact, that it suits equally with the climates of England, of India, and of Labrador. It is calculated, therefore, for universal use, and its universal spread is promised.

If we advert also to the miracles with which each dispensation was introduced, we find those of Moses were miracles of judgment, inflicting punishment upon sinners (not, indeed, undeserved,) but of a very different character from those by which our Redeemer introduced the gospel: these were, almost without exception, miracles of mercy.

4. Another point of view in which we may advantageously compare the Old and New Testaments, relates to the gradual development of divine truth, which is like that of light, "shining more and more unto the perfect day." The gospel dispensation dawned on Adam, and gradually opened during the Patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations: the Sun of righteousness arose under the clearer revelations of David and Solomon; but attained not its zenith until the day of Pentecost, when the shadows of the Old Testament types were all withdrawn, and the whole scheme of redemption by Jesus Christ exhibited.

During the middle ages, indeed, darkness, even "such as might be felt," again covered Christendom, but the Reformation in a great measure cleared away the gloom; and that mighty engine, Printing, has diffused its truths more extensively than ten thousand Missionaries could have done. Nor has it rested there. By the invention of stereotype and steam printing, a new impulse has been given to this vast machine. Steam navigation is another important discovery, which will facilitate the rapid dispersion both of Bibles and of Missionaries throughout the world.

The revival of zeal and energy in the propagation of the Christian religion among almost all denominations of Christians, promises a speedy accomplishment of the divine predictions. Christianity is planted in every quarter of the globe, and is spreading on every hand. Savages of Africa, and in every part of the Pacific Ocean, hitherto considered as the most untameable, are stretching out their hands to welcome it; Hindoos have begun to throw away their caste; and the bigoted Chinese are studying in their own language, the printed word of God. There is "a shaking" even "among the dry bones" of the house of Israel; and Scripture and facts equally assure us, that the time is coming, when "the knowledge and the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters do the bottom of the sea."

The Evidences of Christianity.

II. In our Introduction to the Old Testament, we touched upon several points relative to the authenticity and inspiration of the Old Testament Scriptures; but whatever argument may be named in defence of the Jewish Scriptures, applies with two-fold, yea, with seven-fold, force in favour of the Christian revelation, while there are others peculiar to itself, one only of which we can here mention, referring our readers, who wish to examine for themselves, to Mr. Horne and other able writers.

The argument here presented to our readers, is from one who boldly assumed the character of "a free-thinker," and scorned the shackles of a creed: we refer to ROUSSEAU.

"I will confess to you, that the majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with admiration, as the purity of the gospel hath its influence on my heart. Peruse the works of our Philosophers with all their pomp of diction: how mean, how contemptible are they, compared with the Scriptures! Is it possible that a book, at once so simple and sublime, should be merely the work of man? Is it possible that the sacred personage, whose history it contains, should be himself a mere man? Do we find that he assumed the tone of an enthusiast, or an ambitious sectary? What sweetness, what purity in his manners! What an affecting gracefulness in his delivery! What sublimity in his maxims! What profound wisdom in his discourses! What presence of mind, what subtlety, what truth in his replies! How great the command over his passions! Where is the man, where the philosopher, who could so live, and so die, without weakness, and without ostentation? When Plato described his imaginary good man, loaded with all the shame of guilt, yet meriting the highest rewards of virtue, he described exactly the character of Jesus Christ: the resemblance was so striking, that all the Fathers perceived it.

"What prepossession, what blindness must it be, to compare the son of Sophroniscus (Socrates) to the son of Mary! What an infinite disproportion there is between them! Socrates, dying without pain or ignominy, easily supported his character to the last; and if his death, however easy, had not crowned his life, it might have been doubted whether Socrates, with all his wisdom, was any thing more than a vain sophist. He invented, it is said, the theory of morals. Others, however, had put them in practice; he had only to say, therefore, what they had done, and to reduce their examples to precepts. Aristides had been just before Socrates defined justice. Leonidas had given up his life for his country before Socrates declared patriotism to be a duty; the Spartans were a sober people before Socrates recommended sobriety; before he had even defined virtue, Greece abounded in virtuous men. But where could Jesus learn, among his competitors, that pure and sublime morality, of which he only hath given us both precept and example? The greatest wisdom was made known amidst the most bigotted fanaticism, and the simplicity of the most heroic virtues did honour to the vilest people upon earth. The death of Socrates, peaceably philosophizing with his friends, appears the most agreeable that could be wished for; that of Jesus, expiring in the midst of agonizing pains; abused, insulted, and accused by a whole nation; is the most horrible that could be feared. Socrates, on receiving the cup of poison, blessed indeed the weeping executioner who administered it; but Jesus, in the midst of excruciating tortures, prayed for his merciless tormentors. Yes, if the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage, the life and death of Jesus are those of a God. Shall we suppose the Evangelical History a mere fiction? Indeed, my friend, it bears not the marks of fiction; on the contrary, the history of Socrates, which nobody presumes to doubt, is not so well attested as that of Jesus Christ. Such a supposition, in fact, only shifts the difficulty, without obviating it: it is more inconceivable that a number of persons should agree to write such a history, than that one only should furnish the subject of it. The Jewish authors were incapable of the diction, and strangers to the morality contained in the gospel, the marks of whose truth are so striking and inimitable, that the inventor would be a more astonishing character than the hero."† (Letter to the Archbishop of Paris.)

How lamentable is it to add, that a man who saw thus clearly the beauty of the gospel, was prevented, by the depravity of his own heart, from embracing it. He at once admired and hated it.

The Authenticity of the four Gospels.

III. Of the authority of the four Gospels already named, we shall quote only the concluding remarks of Dr. Lardner.

"In the first part of this work (his 'Credibility') it was shown," says the Doctor, "that there is not any thing in the books of the New Testament, however strictly canvassed, inconsistent with their supposed time and authors. . . . . In this second part we have had express and positive evidence, that these books were written by those whose names they bear, even the Apostles of Jesus Christ, who was crucified at Jerusalem in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, when Pontius Pilate was governor in Judea; and their well known companions and fellow-labourers. It is the concurring testimony of early and later ages, and of writers in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and of men of different sentiments in divers respects. For we have had before us the testimony of those called heretics, . . . as well as Catholics. These books were received from the beginning with the greatest respect, and have been publicly and solemnly read in the assemblies of

* The Greek term euangelium (gospel) signifies "good news" in general; in the New Testament, it is confined to the "good news of salvation by Jesus Christ." The word gospel is derived from the Anglo-Saxon god, good, and spell, message, or news.

† A judicious writer has remarked, that few Deists have ventured to attack the moral character of Christ. Even Thomas Paine, in the midst of his virulence against Christianity, observes, "Nothing that is here said can apply, even with the most distant disrespect, to the real character of Jesus Christ. He was a virtuous and amiable man. The morality that he preached and practised was of the most benevolent kind."

Nothing, however, is too daring for some writers. A French infidel of the name of Volney undertook to prove, in spite of all history, sacred and profane, that Christ (or Chrestus, as he calls him) was an allegorical personage—the Sun. In answer to which ridiculous notion, we need only refer to Grotius' work "On the Truth of the Christian Religion."

Gronus says, "That Jesus of Nazareth formerly lived in Judea, in the reign of Tiberius, the Roman emperor, is constantly acknowleged, not only by Christians dispersed all over the world, but also by all the Jews which now are, or have ever wrote since that time; the same is also testified by heathens, that is, such as did not write either on the Jewish or Christian religion; Suetonius, Tacitus, Pliny the younger, and many after these."

Appeal may also be made, not only to the received, but the apocryphal gospels; not only to Josephus, but to Trypho and Celsus, the great Jewish and Pagan antagonists of Christianity. In short, there is no great character of equal antiquity—neither Julius nor Augustus Cæsar; neither Cato nor Cicero; neither Virgil nor Horace—whose existence and character is better attested.

Christians throughout the world, in every age from that time to this. They were early translated into the languages of divers countries and people. They were quoted by way of proof in all arguments of a religious nature: and were appealed to, on both sides, in all points of controversy that arose among Christians themselves. They were likewise recommended to the perusal of others as containing the authentic account of the Christian doctrine. And many commentaries have been writ to explain and illustrate them. All which afford full assurance of their genuineness and integrity. If these books had not been writ by those to whom they are ascribed, and if the things related in them had not been true, they could not have been received from the beginning. If they contain a true account of things, the Christian religion is from God, and cannot but be embraced by serious and attentive men, who impartially examine, and are willing to be determined by evidence."

Of these four Gospels, the first and last (Matthew and John) were written by two of our Lord's Apostles; the other two by the travelling companions of Apostles, Mark with Peter, and Luke with Paul: so that, independent of their own inspiration, the writers had the best possible means of correct information.

NEW TESTAMENT.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW.

MATTHEW, surnamed Levi, was the son of Alpheus; but not of that Alpheus who was the father of James. (Matt. x. 3.) Matthew was a native of Galilee; but of what city, or from what tribe, is unknown. Before his conversion, he was a publican, or tax-gatherer; and is understood to have collected the customs on all imports or exports at Capernaum, and a tribute from all passengers who went by water. While thus employed, Jesus called him to be a disciple, and when the apostles were chosen, he was numbered among the twelve. He was one of the most constant attendants upon our Lord during his life, and after his resurrection, was, on the day of Pentecost, endowed with the Holy Spirit from on high. But how long he remained in Judea after this event, is unknown, as are also the time and circumstances of his decease.

The Gospel of Matthew is uniformly placed first among the Gospels and among all the books of the New Testament. It has always had the same precedence given it. When, however, it was written, is a question that has been much disputed. Of the modern critics, Dr. Townson, Dr. H. Owen, and Bp. Tomline, date it in A. D. 37 or 38; but Dr. Lardner, Michaelis, and Dr. Hales, between 61 and 65. The only way to reconcile them is, with Eusebius, (an Ecclesiastical historian of the third century,) to admit two original copies, one in Hebrew, and the other in Greek; the former written for the Jews, about A. D. 38, and the latter written, or translated by the author into Greek, about A. D. 61; thus Josephus is said to have written his Jewish war both in Hebrew and in Greek. And we think the arguments adduced by Horne, in his Critical Introduction, on this subject, very powerful, though the Greek is the only original now remaining. We know that several sects of Jewish Christians boasted the possession of a Hebrew Gospel, which we suppose some of them might corrupt, to favour their peculiarities; and this was the more easy, as very few of the Christian Fathers understood Hebrew. Lardner and Jones, however, consider the Greek as the original, and the Hebrew as a translation.

CHAPTER I.

1 The genealogy of Christ from Abraham to Joseph. 18 He was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary when she was espoused to Joseph. 19 The angel satisfieth the misdeeming thoughts of Joseph, and interpreteth the names of Christ.

A. M. 4000. B. C. 5.

THE book of the generation [a] of Jesus Christ, the son of [b] David, [c] the son of Abraham.

2 Abraham [d] begat Isaac; and [e] Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob [f] begat Judas and his brethren;

3 And Judas begat [g] Phares and Zara of Thamar; and Phares begat [h] Esrom; and Esrom begat [i] Aram;

4 And Aram begat Aminadab; and Aminadab begat [j] Naasson; and Naasson begat [k] Salmon;

5 And Salmon begat Booz of [l] Rachab; and Booz begat Obed of [m] Ruth; and Obed begat Jesse;

6 And Jesse begat [n] David the king; and David the king begat [o] Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias;

7 And Solomon begat [p] Roboam; and Roboam begat Abia; and Abia begat Asa;

8 And Asa begat Josaphat; and Josaphat begat Joram; and Joram begat Ozias;

9 And Ozias begat Joatham; and Joatham begat Achaz; and Achaz begat Ezekias;

10 And Ezekias begat [q] Manasses; and Manasses begat Amon; and Amon begat Josias;

11 And [r] Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon:

12 And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat [s] Salathiel; and Salathiel begat [t] Zorobabel;

13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud; and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

14 And Azor begat Sadoc; and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

15 And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

16 And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

18 ¶ Now the birth [u] of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, [v] before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded [w] to put her away privily.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—25. The genealogy of Christ; his miraculous conception, and birth.—The first verse of this chapter is generally considered as the title only of the subsequent genealogy; but, from a circumstance before alluded to, (Isa. liii. 8.) it appears that the term generation is sometimes used in the larger sense of history. When the Rajah of Tanjore spake to the late Bp. Middleton of the History of England, he called it "the book of the generations of the kings of England." (Bonny's Life of Middleton.) So that this verse may be considered as the title of the whole gospel, as it is by Hammond, Vitringa, and others. It is, however, used in a more contracted sense in verse 17, and elsewhere.

It is clear (from ver. 16.) that this was not the genealogy of Mary, but of Joseph, her husband, and therefore describes rather the legal than the natural descent of Jesus.

What is said of the miraculous conception of our Lord, must be taken on the authority of the inspired writers; as must, in fact, every thing relative to divine mysteries. But this was predicted by Isaiah; and the event was ordered by Providence to correspond with that prediction.—It has been objected, that they do not agree; it was predicted that his name should be Emmanuel, and it was called JESUS. Emmanuel means "God with us," or, God incarnate for our salvation; JESUS, is "JAH the Saviour," implying his intimate relation to Jehovah. (See note on ver. 21.)

The miraculous conception of Jesus was not only predicted by Isaiah, but implied in the first promise of "the seed of the woman;" a term applied, as we believe, to no other child of Adam. And when Mary is said to be pregnant by the Holy Ghost, (or Spirit,) we are simply to understand that it was a miraculous event. And if the ordinary course of nature be mysterious and inscrutable, (Eccles. xi. 5,) much more those events which are confessedly extraneous to that course: and if we cannot fully comprehend the common motions of the CHAP. I. Ver. 1. The book of the generation.—This term is here generally understood in the sense of genealogy, and so applied to the verses following; but it is equally applicable to the whole book in the sense of history. So it is used, Gen. xxvii. 2.——The son of David, the son of Abraham.—The Arabs generally derive their descent from some few well-known illustrious persons.

Ver. 2. Abraham, &c.—The genealogy which here follows, appears to be that of Joseph, the reputed father of Jesus, and that in Luke, chap. iii., the genealogy of Mary, his real mother. We shall more particularly compare them when we come to that evangelist.

Ver. 7. Solomon begat Roboam, &c.—In this verse Roboam is the same as Rehoboam, and Abia, as Abijah.

Ver. 8. Josaphat is Jehoshaphat; Ozias, Uzziah.

Ver. 9. Joatham is Jotham; Achaz, Ahaz; and Ezekias, Hezekiah.

Ver. 11. Josias begat Jechonias.—[The marginal reading is found in many MSS., and should probably be received into the text; for Josiah was the immediate father of Joiachim and his brethren, (1 Ch. iii. 15.;) and Joiakim was the father of Jechoniah about the time of the first Babylonian captivity; and it also completes the number of fourteen in this second class of generations, and forty-two in the whole.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Jechonias begat Salathiel.—Wintle is of opinion that there were two persons of the name of Jechonias, or Jehoiakim; one before, and the other after the captivity.

Ver. 16. Called Christ—That is, the Messias, or, the anointed.—[The design of St. Matthew was to prove that Christ was the heir of the throne of David by legal descent.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Fourteen generations.—In order to reduce this list of Joseph's progenitors to three fourteens, several names must be omitted, as will be evident from comparing it with Luke; it was probably a family genealogy, reduced for the purpose of being retained in the memory. The late Editor of Calmet has suggested, that the term generation may be here taken for a certain period of time, between thirty and forty years, and that each branch of the genealogy might amount to fourteen such periods.

Ver. 18. Espoused—or betrothed, De. xxii. 23.—Before they came together.—It is well known that the Jews espoused very young, but it was often several months, and even years, before the parties came together, according as it was settled by their parents.

Ver. 19. To put her away privily—That is, by a private divorce, in which no reason is required to be assigned nor is the dowry forfeited, or the character defamed. Selden and Lightfoot, in Doddridge.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a [x] dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is [y] conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name [z] JESUS: for he shall save [a] his people from their sins.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the [b] prophet, saying,

23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and [c] they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God [d] with us.

24 Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born [e] son: and he called his name [f] JESUS.

CHAPTER II.

1 The wise men out of the east are directed to Christ by a star. 11 They worship him, and offer their presents. 14 Joseph fleeth into Egypt, with Jesus and his mother. 16 Herod slayeth the children: 20 himself dieth. 23 Christ is brought back again into Galilee to Nazareth.

NOW when Jesus was born [a] in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

2 Saying, Where is he that is [b] born King of the Jews? for we have seen his [c] star in the east, and are come to [d] worship him.

3 ¶ When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

4 And when he had gathered [e] all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written [f] by the prophet,

6 And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall [g] rule [h] my people Israel.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come [i] and worship him also.

9 ¶ When they had heard the king, they departed; and, lo, the star, which they saw [j] in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

10 When they saw the star, they [k] rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

11 ¶ And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they [l] presented unto him [m] gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.

12 And being warned of God [n] in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

air in wind, how shall we trace the mysterious actions of that Spirit who "worketh all in all?" See 1 Cor. xii. 6.)

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—12. The wise men of the east led by a star to Bethlehem, to worship Jesus.—There is abundant evidence of a general expectation, both in Judea and the surrounding countries, that about this time some illustrious person should be born there, and obtain the government of the world. Lardner cites on this subject Josephus, Tacitus, and Celsus in Origen. The first two, like time-serving historians, apply the oracle (as they call it) to the government of Vespasian, the Roman emperor; though he had no claim to this distinction, but by the judgments he inflicted on the Jews. Celsus tells us, that "he who is to come is great, and a prince, and Lord of all the earth, and of all nations, and of armies." See also John iv. 25, 26.

With respect to the "wise men," or Magi, here referred to, there are different opinions, as well as of the country from which they came. The learned Rosenmuller says, "That the Magi mentioned by the Evangelist, came from Arabia, is an opinion which arose in the first ages of Christianity, and is rendered probable by the fact that .... gold, frankincense, and myrrh (ver. 11.) were productions of southern Arabia. This was also the country of Job, who was the greatest man of all the East, (see note on Job i. 3.,) and lay south-east of Jerusalem and Judea.

The original Magi were the priests and philosophers of Persia; but in process of time, the term was applied to the priests and philosophers of other countries, and particularly of Arabia, (so that Arabi and Magi became terms synonomous,) and as things degenerated, the name was degraded to mean Magicians, or those who practised necromancy, and other forbidden arts. These men of the East saw an extraordinary star, or meteor, not in the east to them, but in the north, or it could not have guided them to Jerusalem, or to Bethlehem, which lay about six miles south of the metropolis. The presents which these Magi brought to the young Messiah were an acknowledgment of devotion from the Gentiles, and the gold, while it evinced, that they were persons of some consequence, (perhaps Arabian princes, Ps. lxxii. 10.) might, at the same time, be of essential service to the holy family, in their flight into Egypt.

It was undoubtedly by a peculiar providence that the star led them first to Jerusalem, in order to excite the public attention; and that, possibly at one of the great feasts, when the whole nation was there assembled. As to Herod, it is plain that he acted a part as hypocritical as cruel. "There is no villany so great (says Bp. Hall) but it will mask itself under a show of piety. Herod will also worship the babe! The courtesy of a false tyrant is death. A crafty hypocrite never means so ill as when he speaks the fairest." Herod, no doubt, designed to murder the holy infant from the first.

The inquiries of Herod produced from the chief priests and scribes this testimony, that, according to ancient prophecy, Christ was to be born in Bethlehem, where these pious philosophers afterwards found and worshipped him.

It has been thought strange, that neither priests nor scribes accompanied the Magi in their way to Bethlehem; but it seems clear that Herod wished to keep the matter as private as possible, for when he heard of it, he inquired of these wise men privately; and probably as privately dismissed them on their errand, thinking from his rank and authority, he could depend on their return. The star which guided them to Jerusalem had

Ver. 20. In a dream.—In the times of inspiration, this was one medium of communicating the will of God to man: as, for instance, the dreams of Joseph and Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel; but when a written revelation was established, such means became less necessary, and were gradually withdrawn.

Ver. 21. Thou shalt call his name JESUS.—It was one mark of divine favour, when God added a letter from his own name to that of any of his servants. Jah, it is well known, is an epitome of Jehovah, and when the son of Nun was taken into the service of Moses, with a view, no doubt, of being ultimately his successor, this name was prefixed to his former name of Oseа, and made it Jehoshua, or Jshua, which in Greek is Jesus; and means Jah, or "Jehovah the Saviour."

Ver. 22. That it might be fulfilled;—or, as Boothroyd, "So that it was fulfilled." The Greek term (ina) often expressing, not the cause, but the consequent event. See Luke xi. 50. John v. 20; xii. 38, &c.——Spoken of the Lord.—That is, of Christ: or "spoken (apo) from the Lord;" that is, by inspiration. Many have supposed this passage quoted merely by way of accommodation, as some texts confessedly are; but Bp. Chandler, at great length, and with much ability, contends that it is decidedly a typical prophecy of Messiah. Dr. John Pye Smith adopts nearly the same hypothesis, and defends it with no less ability.

Ver. 24. When he was raised.—Hammond, "Being risen."

Ver. 25. Her first-born son.—Doddridge, "Her son, the first-born." See Rom. viii. 29.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Bethlehem—i. e. House of bread.—A town about six miles S. by W. of Jerusalem. The birth place also of David, and hence called the city of David. It still retains its ancient name, and contains about 200 houses, inhabited by Christians and Turks.——Wise men (Gr. Magi) from the east—But the country here meant is much disputed; Chaldea and Persia have both been named; but we follow Grotius and Doddridge, in fixing on Arabia.——King Herod—That is, "Herod the Great," called Great by reason of his crimes. Mosheim.

Ver. 2. We have seen his star in the east;—or, "We (while) in the east, have seen his star;" i. e. an extraordinary meteor which they thought indicated the birth of King Messiah. The star seen by these Magi, must evidently have been a meteor, at no great height in the atmosphere, or it could not have marked a particular house, or even town. So we call those meteors frequently shooting through our atmosphere, falling stars.——To worship him.—Literally, "To fall prostrate before him."

Ver. 3. He was troubled.—It was natural for Herod to be alarmed for the safety of his throne; but why should all Israel be troubled? Meteors have always been alarming to the superstitious and ignorant. Indeed, Justin Martyr supposed this to be a comet, which it probably resembled in form.

Ver. 4. The chief priests.—"Not only the high priest and his deputy, with all who formerly had borne that office, but also the heads of the twenty-four courses, as well as any other persons of peculiar eminence in the priesthood." So "Josephus uses the word."—Doddridge.——And scribes.—See note on chap. v. 20.

Ver. 7. Inquired of them diligently—or exactly. Doddridge reads, "Having got exact information from them."

Ver. 8. I may come and worship him also.—Herod would cover his malice with a cloak of religion. Hypocrisy is double wickedness.

Ver. 11. Presented unto him gifts.—In the East, no visits are made to persons of rank without a present.

Ver. 12. Another way—Literally, "they turned back their course" to Arabia, without going again to Jerusalem, as Herod had desired.

13 And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod [o] will seek the young child to destroy him.

14 When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt:

15 And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, [p] Out of Egypt have I called my son.

16 ¶ Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired [q] of the wise men.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy [r] the prophet, saying,

18 In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

19 ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, 20 Saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead [s] which sought the young child's life.

21 And he arose, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel.

22 But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts [t] of Galilee:

23 And he came and dwelt in a city called [u] Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a [v] Nazarene.

withdrawn; but, to their great joy, it again appeared when they got without the city, and lowering its elevated course, took its station over the very house where the child lay, till the pious strangers came within, and worshipped, and then finally disappeared.

Herod had enjoined upon them, that when they found the infant, they should immediately bring him word, which probably they would have done, had they not been warned in a dream to return another way, whereby Herod was disappointed of his object, which was doubtless to destroy "the holy child, Jesus." Thus the Providence of God overrules the wickedness of man.

Ver. 13—23. The escape of the holy family, and Herod's massacre of the infants.—As the divine providence had, in a dream, admonished the Magi to return home another way, whereby they escaped the rage of Herod; so, by the same means, Joseph is warned no longer to remain in Bethlehem, but to fly immediately into Egypt, where many thousands of Jews resided, some of whose hearts the Lord probably opened to receive them.

The admonitions given to the Magi, by way of dream, and to Joseph himself in three several instances, and that, in all probability, by the vision of angels in their sleep, seem to indicate a temporary return of the patriarchal dispensation, when angels were the usual messengers of the divine will to men: but this, we may observe, was on the approach of that period of which it was predicted, "Your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." (Acts ii. 17.) Indeed, the ministry of angels, if we can believe the New Testament, was evidently continued to the close of the sacred canon. From that period we have a more sure word of Prophecy, and should be extremely cautious of trusting to visionary appearances; at the same time, we have no authority to conclude that the Almighty has deprived himself of any means formerly employed, of communicating his will to men, when he shall see an occasion worthy of his interference. Angels are still ministering spirits to the church. (Heb. i. 14.)

That Herod should feel indignant, mortified, enraged, by this conduct of the eastern strangers, is not to be wondered at; and the means he took to avenge himself were in perfect consistence with his former character, in which pride and cruelty were predominating qualities. The measure of his vengeance, however, furnishes us with a note of time, relative to our Saviour's age at this period. Herod was by no means tender of human life; and as, when the decree came to be executed, mothers would be tempted to represent their children as older than they really were, in order to save their lives; it is natural to suppose that he might extend the age prescribed to at least double the age of the infant whose life he sought: we cannot therefore consider the Holy infant at this time as more than a year old, perhaps not more than half so much, when he was visited by the eastern sages. And as it does not appear that he was certain as to the infant's age, we may rather wonder that he did not extend the murderous decree farther, than that it should extend so far.

The scene here delineated is sufficiently cruel, without exaggeration. On the passage quoted from Micah, (ch. v. 2,) we have already remarked, that Bethlehem was but a small city, and with few inhabitants; it therefore, probably, did not contain more than about fifty male infants; this was, however, a scene of sufficient horror to excite the pathetic lamentation here made. Rachel lay buried near this spot. On a former occasion, when her children were about to go into captivity, she is poetically represented as rising from her tomb to wail over them; but these innocents were gone to "that country from whose bourn no traveller returns." The manner of lamentation among the eastern women was also most violent, of which we shall give the following example, quoted by the late Editor of Calmet, from M. Le Bruyn's Voyage in Syria. That celebrated traveller says, "When I was at Rama, (near Lydda; not this Rama near Bethlehem,) I saw a great company of these weeping women, (namely, those who go to weep over the graves of their relations,) who went out of the town. I followed them, and after having observed the place they visited, adjacent to their sepulchres, I seated myself on an elevated spot. . . . .They first placed themselves on the sepulchres, and wept there; after having remained there about half an hour, some of them rose up, and formed a ring, holding each other by the hands. . . . . Quickly two of them quited the others, and placed themselves in the centre of the ring, where they made so much noise, in screaming and clapping the hands, as, together with their various contortions, might have subjected them to the suspicion of madness. After that, they returned and seated themselves to weep again, till they gradually withdrew to their homes." (See Jer. xxxi. 15. John xi. 31, and note on ver. 18. below.)

But it may be remarked, that this, and two or three other passages quoted in this chapter, seem cited in a sense that appears to have little or no connexion with the original import; though it is expressly said, that these things happened that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. On this subject we beg leave to introduce a very candid and judicious remark of J. P. Smith; "It is admitted, (he observes,) that the Apostles and Evangelists have sometimes cited sentences and phrases from the Old Testament, in the way of accommodation to subjects not contemplated in the original design of those passages. To deny this, would be to refuse them that liberty of observing striking coincidences, and of making useful applications, which writers of all ages have exercised; and the scriptural books were almost the only literature of the Jews. We should, however, be slow and cautious to admit this solution; and well consider the probability that, in such cases, there may be a ground of appropriation, the inobservance of which is solely owing to our ignorance of some circumstance, in the original intent of the passage."

On the principles just mentioned, we should be far from saying, that any of the passages cited in this chapter are quoted in a sense foreign to their original design. The first passage above quoted is applied to Messiah by the Jewish Sanhedrim, and to this certainly no Christian can object; but the others appear to us quoted rather by way of illustration than argument. If God called Israel his son, when he brought them out of Egypt, it might be a typical allusion to his own Son being brought from the same country. If Rachel wept for her

Ver. 13. Flee into Egypt.—Bethlehem was in that part of Judea nearest Egypt.

Ver. 15. Out of Egypt, &c.—Whitby and others consider this as a typical prophecy.

Ver. 16. All the children—Doddridge and Campbell, "male children." At present, Dr. Richardson says, Bethlehem contains but about 300 inhabitants, and perhaps never contained many more; out of these it is probable the male infants might not exceed 50, though Voltaire puts them down at 14,000! Richardson was shown a small chamber, excavated from a rock, in which they were all said to be entombed.

Ver. 18. Rama—A city in the tribe of Benjamin, situated a few miles north of Jerusalem, between Gibeah and Bethel.—In Rama was there a voice heard—i. e. a cry was heard even to Ramah; quoted from Je. xxxi. 15, where the prophet introduces Rachel bewailing the exile of her posterity, i. e. Ephraim; by quoting which language, Matthew in a similar manner introduces her as bemoaning the fate of the children slain in Bethlehem. Robinson's Wahl.

Ver. 20. They are dead.—That is, Herod and his son Antipater, who was equally cruel with his father.

Ver. 22. Archelaus—another son, also rivalled the cruelties of his father, massacring 3,000 Jews in the temple, near the beginning of his government.

Ver. 23. A Nazarene—i. e. an inhabitant of Nazareth. The names of places are sometimes used reproachfully. Nazarene, among the Jews at Jerusalem, was a term of contempt. The words here apparently quoted are not found in the Old Testament. The sense is, there was a fulfilment of what the prophets foretold, (Ps. xxii. 6, &c. Isa liii.) that it should be treated with reproach and contempt. Robinson's Wahl

CHAPTER III.

1 John preacheth: his office, life, and baptism. 7 He reprehendeth the Pharisees, 13 and baptizeth Christ in Jordan.

A. M. 4030. A. D. 26.

IN those days came [a] John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea,

2 And saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

3 For this is he that was spoken of [b] by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 And the same John had his [c] raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts [d] and wild honey.

5 ¶ Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing [e] their sins.

7 ¶ But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation [f] of vipers, who hath warned you to [g] flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits [h] meet for repentance:

9 And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit [i] is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

11 I indeed baptize you with [j] water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you [k] with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge [l] his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff [m] with unquenchable fire.

13 ¶ Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized [n] of him.

14 But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

16 And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God [o] descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved [p] Son, in whom I am well pleased.

children when carried into captivity, much more might she mourn her slaughtered innocents on the occasion here named. Nor will the common expression, "that it might be fulfilled," prove it any thing more than an allusion, since the highest critical authorities admit that it must not be taken literally. Hammond renders it, "So it was accomplished;"—Campbell, "So it was verified;"—Newcome, "Then was fulfilled," &c. —Doddridge, though he preserves the common translation, with the expletive anew, in his note on ver. 15, says, "I choose to take them, as Grotius, Heinsius, and many of the best critics do, for a mere allusion; and the rather, as I am fully convinced that the next quotation (ver. 17) must necessarily be taken in this sense." And even, as Newcome remarks, where there is a direct prophecy in the Old Testament, the event did not take place for the mere purpose of fulfilling it; but God predetermined a fit event, and foretold it by his prophets.

As to the last prediction cited in this chapter, it is remarkable that no single prophecy is referred to, but a popular tradition, perhaps, that it had been foretold by different prophets, that the Messiah should reside at Nazareth. So Dr. John Edwards; but others think, that the predictions of his being poor, despised, and reproached, were tantamount to saying that he should be of Nazareth. (John i. 46.) So Wesley.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—17. John's preaching and baptism: Christ baptized by him.—The last of the Old Testament prophets (Malachi) concludes with the promise of another Prophet, under the name of Elijah, i. e. one endowed with the spirit and power of Elijah. Such an one we now behold upon the banks of Jordan. A man of the simplest manners and appearance; his food and dress upon a level with the poorest inhabitant of the desert; nor does he make any attempt to elevate his own character; but he is the pioneer, the forerunner of one whom it is his great delight to honour. He is a "voice," and a voice only; but he proclaims, with all the powers of his voice, One who was to come after him, but who existed and who ranked before him. His extraordinary appearance, and the energy of his language, collects many around him. They spread the news in all the surrounding towns and villages, till all the population of the country is alarmed, and gathers round him. He announces the approach of Messiah's kingdom, and calls upon them to repent. At length the higher classes are alarmed. Even the Pharisees and the Sadducees come to see this phenomenon of the desert.

John no sooner sees them approaching, whom he might easily know by their dress and appearance, than he turns the artillery of his rustic eloquence full upon them. Before, however, we examine his address, it may be necessary, in a few words, to sketch their respective characters: for characters, they were very different and even opposite to each other, though we shall find them, as we proceed, constantly uniting to oppose the kingdom of our Lord. The Pharisees, it is well known, pretended great zeal for Moses and the prophets, and reverenced all the traditions of the elders; while the Sadducees, though they attended the temple worship, were no better than sceptics, denying, not only the resurrection of the body, but a future state, and consequently a future judgment altogether. (Acts xxiii. 8.) The one believed too much, and the others too little; but they united to reject the doctrines of the Gospel. Seeing members of both these sects come, though probably as they afterwards attended John's Master, hypocritically, and as spies only, he addresses them, as Jesus himself afterwards did, (chap. xxiii. 33,) as the brood of the old serpent, equally insidious and mischievous, whose object it was to deceive and to destroy. "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? If you are indeed penitent, as you would appear to be, then bring forth

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. In those days—That is, while Jesus resided with his parents in Nazareth.—John the Baptist—or the Baptizer.—Preaching—That is, proclaiming, as a herald, or public crier. Campbell.—In the wilderness of Judea—mentioned Ju. i. 16, and in the title of Ps. lxiii. It lay east from Jerusalem, along the Jordan and the Dead sea. Not a region uninhabited, but woody, mountainous, and thinly inhabited. The name seems to be of much the same import with our word Highlands.—Campbell.

Ver. 3. The voice of one crying, Prepare, &c.—See Is. xl. 3. Diodorus Siculus says of Semiramis, that "in her march to Ecbatane she came to the Zarcean Mountain, which, extending many furlongs, and being full of craggy precipices and deep hollows, could not be passed without making a great compass about. Being, therefore, desirous of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as of shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down, and the hollows to be filled up; and, at a great expense, she made a shorter and more expeditious road, which to this day is called the road of Semiramis." She did the same afterwards in Persia, and other countries.

Ver. 4. His raiment of camel's hair.—Not of the fine hair of that animal, as Camlet is; "but of the long and shaggy hair of camels, which in the East is manufactured into a coarse stuff, anciently worn by monks and anchorites."—Campbell. Locusts—which were allowed food by the Mosaic law, and are eaten by the poorer Arabs to this day. See Le. xi. 22.—And wild honey—which is deposited by the wild bees in the woods of Judea in great abundance. See 1 Sa. xiv. 25, &c. Pr. xxv. 16. Is. vii. 16.

Ver. 5. All the region round about Jordan—That is, in the vicinity of Jordan, on both sides the river. All must be taken here, as in some other places, for many—great multitudes.

Ver. 6. Jordan.—This river rises in Anti-libanus, passes through the Lake of Gennesareth, and runs into the Dead sea.

Ver. 7. O generation of vipers.—Compare John viii. 40, 44.

Ver. 8. Fruits meet for repentance—i. e. Manifest your repentance by a corresponding course of life.

Ver. 11. Whose shoes (or "sandals") I am unworthy, &c.—Rosenmuller quotes a Rabbinical saying, that whatever services a servant does for his master, a disciple may do for his teacher, only not to unloose the latchet of his shoes. Compare Ma. i. 8.—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire—i. e. He shall impart to his followers a searching and purifying influence, that shall lead them to understand and embrace the doctrines of the Gospel.

Ver. 12. Whose fan.—The original word is agreed to signify "a winnowing instrument," probably "a shovel," as Campbell renders it, by which the corn being thrown upward against the wind, the chaff was separated from it thereby. —Unquenchable fire.—Inextinguishable fire, and by implication, eternal fire.

Ver. 15. It becometh us to fulfil all righteousness—i. e. We should submit to every precept, or institution.

Ver. 16. And Jesus, when (Dodd. "after") he was baptized, went up straightway.—Campbell applies the term straightway, or "immediately," not to Jesus coming out of the water, but to the Spirit's descending "immediately after." Doddridge renders it, "And after Jesus was baptized, as soon as he ascended out of the water, the heavens were opened," &c. Campbell's translation is to the same effect.—Descending like a dove—That is, in a slow, hovering motion; but St. Luke adds, "in a bodily shape, like a dove," that is, probably, in a white, lucid flame, parted like the wings of a dove. So when the Holy Spirit descended on the Apostles, it was in a parted flame, like "cloven tongues." Acts ii. 3. The rite of baptism was in use among the Jews, before the time of Christ, in the admission of proselytes to the Jewish community. Robinson's Walil. In the opinion of many, the Saviour, when baptized by John, was inducted into the priest's office. When Aaron was consecrated to the office of priest, Moses washed him with water, and poured the anointing oil upon his head. Lev. viii. 6, 12. But Jesus, when consecrated, was baptized and anointed with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. Does not the Saviour (Mat. xxi. 25.) by directing the chief priests and elders to the baptism of John, really, among other things, answer their question, "by what authority doest thou these things?"

CHAPTER IV.

1 Christ fasteth and is tempted. 11 The angels minister unto him. 13 He dwelleth in Capernaum, 17 he beginneth to preach, 18 calleth Peter, and Andrew, 21 James, and John, 23 and healeth all the diseased.

THEN was Jesus led up of [a] the spirit into the wilderness to be [b] tempted of the devil.

2 And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward a hungered.

3 And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

4 But he answered and said, It is written, [c] Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

5 Then the devil taketh him up into the holy [d] city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple,

6 And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, [e] He shall give his angels charge concerning thee and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

7 Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou [f] shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

8 Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;

9 And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.

10 Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, [g] Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

11 Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels [h] came and ministered unto him.

fruits meet for repentance: fruits that shall prove the sincerity of your profession." He then warns them against trusting to the religion of their forefathers, as being Abraham's children, an error very prevalent among the Jews, and no less fatal; since Abraham's true children are not the offspring of his body, but the inheritors of his faith. (Rom. ix. 8.) So far was their being Jews a proof of their being God's people, that God would rather raise up children from the stones, (pointing, probably, to some fragments of rock, which lay before him,) than acknowledge them to be his children. He then assures them, that "the axe of God's judgments was laid to the root of the trees," and that every fruitless tree should shortly be cut down.

The Prophet now states the object of his baptism, which, as a symbol of repentance and a new life, was to initiate them into the new dispensation, the kingdom of his Lord and Master. His was an external rite only, by submission to which, they were prepared, as penitents, to receive the spiritual baptism of the Holy Spirit and celestial fire, by which they must be either purified or destroyed. Such is the Gospel ordeal: it is either "a savour of life unto life, or of death unto death." (2 Cor. ii. 16.) Or, to express it by another metaphor, it is like the winnowing of the husbandman, who thus separates his wheat from the chaff; and while he stores the former in his garner, consigns the latter to the flames.

At length Jesus himself comes to be baptized; and here it is worthy of remark, that, though John and Jesus were so nearly related, they were brought up, after the days of infancy, at a distance from each other, the one with his parents in the town of Nazareth, the other in a solitary and secluded life among the woods, where he continued till he entered upon his public life, and even afterwards. (Luke i. 80.)

The Evangelical Historians, any more than others, do not relate every incident occurring in the lives that they record, or each gospel might be a folio volume. But it is probable, that when Jesus approached, John received a prophetic intimation that this was He whom he was to serve, and of whom he spake in this humble language; "whose shoes I am not worthy to bear," and on whom the Spirit should visibly descend. (John i. 32.)

John at first demurred on the propriety of baptizing one so superior to himself; but on being assured it was a matter of duty, he immediately complied, and walking down into the water, baptized Jesus. We are not particularly informed of the manner in which the ordinance was administered; and as the best scholars and the best Christians are divided upon the point, we shall not here obtrude our opinion; but advert rather to the baptism of Jesus, as a testimony to his divine character and mission. Bp. Horne remarks, "Jesus Christ, as condescending to stand charged with our sins, and for that end being made under the law, was to fulfil the righteousness of the law, as it consisted in an obedience to ceremonial rites, as well as moral precepts. In the character and capacity of our substitute, He who knew no sin, but was to take away the sins of all other men, presented himself in the crowd of sinners, as one of them, and solicited 'the baptism of repentance;' not that water might sanctify him, but that he might sanctify water, to the mystical washing away of sin." (Bp. Horne's Life of John the Baptist.)

But this is not all. This was the appointed time for God the Father to bear witness of his Son before both men and angels. Jesus prays, and the heavens are opened; for prayer is the true key to open heaven. In prospect of his arduous undertaking, the Son of God calls upon his Father for every needful support and aid; and the petition is answered by a voice from heaven, not addressed immediately to him, but to John and the multitude around him: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And in the same moment, the Holy Spirit descends in the manner, and perhaps in the form of a celestial dove; rests for a moment on him, and consecrates him to his office as Messiah. Thus was John miraculously confirmed in the identity of the Messiah's person, and ever after declared: "This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me was preferred before me: Behold the Lamb of God!"

"O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us!"

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—11. Jesus tempted by the devil.—We have just seen Jesus honoured by a voice from heaven, as the Son of God; but he came not down to earth to receive any accession of honour; but, on the contrary, "humbled himself," and "being found in fashion as a man," he stooped to every degree of degradation and suffering that spotless innocence could endure; and, among the rest, it was a part of his humiliation to "be tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin." (Heb. iv. 15.) Accordingly, no sooner had he withdrawn from the banks of the Jordan, than he was carried, under a strong impulse of the divine Spirit into the wilderness; and here scenes present themselves that would seem incredible, were not his life made up of miracle and wonder.

The wilderness here referred to, is thus described by Maundrell, one of our most respectable modern travellers in that country: "After some hours' travel, ... you arrive at the mountainous desert into which our blessed Saviour was led by the Spirit, to be tempted of the devil. A most miserable, dry, barren place it is, consisting of high, rocky mountains, so torn and disordered, as if the earth had here suffered some great convulsion, in which its very bowels had been turned outward. On the left hand, looking down into a deep valley, as we passed along, we saw some ruins of small cells and cottages, which they told us were formerly the habitations of hermits, retiring thither for penance and mortification; and certainly there could not be found in the whole earth a more comfortless and abandoned place for that purpose."

Here, as Matthew states, Jesus resided forty days, and was so supported, like Moses in Mount Sinai, as to subsist, not only without food, but also without hunger: and his time was doubtless spent, like that of Moses, in communion with the Deity; a communion, however, as it appears, repeatedly interrupted by the temptations of Satan. Of the nature and extent of these temptations, we have no particulars till we come to the close of the period of forty days, when we are told that Jesus was an hungered, which doubtless suggested to the devil the ground of his first temptation.

In what form the arch-enemy of mankind now made his appearance, we are not told. The painters who have drawn him with a negro complexion, and armed with claws and hoofs, seem to have had as strange ideas of propriety as of theology. Satan, we are told, is sometimes "transformed into an angel of light;" (2 Cor. xi. 14;) and if ever he could have occasion for such disguise, it must have been in this instance. But as here are three distinct grounds of temptation, it is possible he might assume different forms. In the first instance, Milton (than whom no modern seems to have penetrated deeper into intellectual nature) introduces him as a poor, aged, and weary traveller, fatigued and faint with hunger; perhaps as one of those who had visited the baptism of John, and heard Jesus announced to be "the Son of God:"—"If thou be such, (says he,) and thou appearest, like me, an hungered and fatigued, exert thy power, and turn some of these useless stones into loaves of bread, for the relief both of thyself and me; in the one case a work of necessity, in the other of benevolence;

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. Led up of the Spirit.—Campbell, "conducted by the Spirit."——Into the wilderness—That is, of Judea, near Jordan.——To be tempted of the Devil—Greek, Diabolos, which means a calumniator, and answers to Satan in the Old Testament, which means an adversary. He is described as the chief of the fallen angels; the prince of the power of the air, under whom those demons are arranged, which are active in introducing every evil among mankind.

Ver. 3. The tempter—That is, the devil, just before named.——Be made bread.—Campbell and Doddridge, "Be made loaves (of bread.")

Ver. 4. By every word—[That is, as Dr. Campbell renders, "by every thing which God is pleased to appoint:" for rema, which generally signifies a word, is, by a Hebraism, here taken for a thing, like davar, in Hebrew.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Taketh him—That is, "Along with him," says Doddridge. An intelligent child being asked, "How did the devil take Christ to the temple?" replied, "As you (father) would take me to St. Paul's."——The holy city—namely, Jerusalem.——On a pinnacle—Gr. "The wing," which Eusebius explains of the battlement round the top of the temple. See Hammond here, and on chap. x. 27. This was probably at the time of evening service, which might from this part be visible; and some think that Satan meant to intimate that by such a miracle, the priests and people would be at once convinced of his mission.

12 ¶ Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee;
13 And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:
14 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the [j] prophet, saying,
15 The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles;
16 The people which sat in [k] darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.
17 ¶ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: [l] for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.
18 ¶ And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon [m] called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.
19 And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you [n] fishers of men.

and in both well calculated to display thy power and authority, as the Son of God!"

Jesus immediately answers, by a pertinent text of Scripture, to this effect: that if the God of Israel could feed his people of old by miracle in the wilderness, so now could he support all who had faith to trust in him. The life of man, therefore, does not depend merely upon external circumstances, but upon the providence of God, in whatever he shall appoint for the preservation of human life. (See Deut. viii. 3.)

Whether the next temptation followed this immediately, or at some interval, is uncertain; supposing the former, the enemy might conduct our Lord, who did not yet disclose that he knew who he was, to the temple of Jerusalem, (which according to Mr. Maundrell, was at the distance of about five hours' march,) and leading him to the highest part of it, suggest the throwing himself down unhurt, probably before many witnesses, as a proof of his divine mission, and at the same time of his implicit confidence in God. "If, as thou Messiah hast said, man lives by 'every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God,' remember, it is written, 'He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.'" Here we may remark, by the way, that the great enemy of mankind himself can quote Scripture; but he always does it perversely, and contrary to its true intent. So here, he would persuade our Saviour to tempt God himself, by unnecessarily running into danger, and by an unwarranted presumption on his protecting power.

The third scene of temptation is again in the wilderness, but in a different part of it, "an exceeding high mountain," from which Satan showed him "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them," which must be taken with the same latitude as the expression is elsewhere used. Speaking of this mountain, the Abbé Mariti (in his Travels through Cyprus) says, "Here we enjoyed the most beautiful prospect imaginable. This mountain . . . . overlooks the mountains of Arabia, the country of Gilead, the country of the Ammonites, the plains of Moab, the plain of Jericho, the river Jordan, and the whole extent of the Red Sea;" which is confirmed by Mr. Maundrell also. But if the reader thinks that the expression, "all the kingdoms of the world" implies a more extensive exhibition, he may recollect that it is "the prince of the power of the air," now perhaps assuming the character of an angel of light, who might, to the natural beauty of the scenery, add a visionary representation of all terrestrial glory—armies, and courts, and royal splendour; for an Eastern army, as in the case of Xerxes, is accompanied with all the wealth and splendour of the empire. And it is the more probable that this might be now the case, as on this exhibition the enemy grounded the daring temptation which immediately follows: as if he had said, "See now, illustrious stranger, to what honour I, as an angel of light, have been advanced. All this glory 'is delivered unto me, and to whomsoever I will, I give it.' Prostrate thyself, therefore, before me, and do me homage, and all shall instantly be thine."

To this daring and impudent assertion, Jesus indignantly replies, "Get thee behind me, Satan;" giving the tempter to understand that he well knew who he was, and that he would (as man) receive no power but from God, the only legitimate source of it, and to him only render homage, as Satan himself was bound to do; for it is written, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (See Deut. vi. 13; x. 20.)

Satan now finding himself defeated and discovered, retreats from the unequal contest, having, as St. Luke says, "ended all his temptation" for the present; and waiting angels hasten to administer 'unto him, at once temporal refreshment and spiritual consolation; for angels no less rejoiced in the triumph of our Saviour, than Satan would have done in his defeat.

Though Satan now withdrew, all these temptations were again exhibited, with many others, through his faithful emissaries, the Scribes and Pharisees. They frequently tempted our Lord to the performance of miracles which they were determined to resist. Others were weak enough to tempt with an earthly diadem, One who had been accustomed to wear a heavenly crown; and others were base enough to represent him as aiming at those temporal honours which he utterly contemned.

Ver. 12—25. Jesus enters upon his ministry, works miracles, and casts out demons.—As the sun arises, the morning star withdraws. John represented himself as only the harbinger of Jesus, and the close of the former's ministry made an opening for the latter. Jesus, in leaving the scene of his retirement, hears of the imprisonment of John, and now commences at once his public work—both preaching and working miracles. John had declared "the kingdom of heaven at hand," and on that ground urged the necessity of national and personal repentance: Jesus takes up the all-important theme, and confirms his doctrine by the most stupendous miracles. Hereby he speedily draws a number of disciples round him, among the first of whom we find Simon Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and his brother John. These were all fishermen, and Jesus invites them to follow him, with the promise of making them "fishers of men;" a description of the ministerial office which is not, perhaps, sufficiently attended to. It intimates that the object of preaching is proselytism: it is not to amuse, nor is it merely to instruct; it is to make converts, and this not to a petty sect or party, but to Christianity itself—here called "the gospel of the kingdom," the good news of salvation by Christ. Hereby the prophecies of the Old Testament were again fulfilled. The people of Galilee, where Jesus began his ministry, "saw a great light;" and to those who sat in darkness and the shadow of death, did the "light of truth arise."

Ver. 12. Into Galilee.—It appears, by the other Evangelists, that Jesus, on leaving the wilderness passed through Samaria to Nazareth, where he preached and wrought miracles, and was at first cordially received; but one of his discourses giving them offence, they threatened his life; he then came and dwelt at Capernaum, whereby another prediction was fulfilled; and he itinerated in the same way throughout Galilee. See John iv. and Luke iv. 16.

Ver. 15. By the way, &c.—Campbell, "Situate on the Jordan, near the sea." —Galilee of the Gentiles.—So called from the number of Gentiles there settled. 1 Kings ix. 11.

Ver. 24. Possessed with devils—Greek, "Demons," and so rendered by Doddridge, Campbell, and other modern translators; and Dr. C. has particularly noted, that the terms Diabolos (or devil) and demon are, in the New Testament, never confounded with each other. See John viii. 44. Acts xiii. 10. 1 Pet. v. 8.

That insanity arose from such possessions, "was the prevailing opinion, not only among the Jews, . . but also among the Greeks and Romans. Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Herodotus, Lucian, and others, speak of demoniacs." Herodotus speaks of the mental alienation of Cleomenes as extraordinary, because it was not "occasioned by a demon, but by excessive drinking."—Rosenmuller. Some have endeavoured to explain what is said of demons, and possession by them, of corporeal diseases only, and especially of insanity. Campbell remarks on this hypothesis, "When I find mention made of the number of demons in particular possessions, their actions so expressly distinguished from those of the man possessed, conversations held with the former in regard to the disposal of them after their expulsion, and accounts given how they were actually disposed of; when I find desires and passions ascribed peculiarly to them, and similitudes taken from the conduct which they usually observe; it is impossible for me to deny their existence, without admitting that the sacred historians were either deceived themselves in regard to them, or intended to deceive their readers. Nay, if they were faithful historians, this reflection, I am afraid, will strike still deeper." Campbell's Gospels.

Ver. 25. Decapolis.—[Decapolis was a district of Syria, east of Jordan, so called from deka, ten, and polis, a city, because it contained ten cities; which were, according to Pliny, Scythopolis, Philadelphia, Raphanæ, Gadara Hippos

q 1 Pe. 2. 12

On the miracles of Jesus, we have already remarked, that they were wrought, almost without exception, for the relief of human misery; but never for his own. Cold, hungry, thirsty, or faint, he never wrought a miracle for his own relief; but he fed the poor, and he "healed the sick with divers diseases and torments; and those that were possessed with devils, (or demons,) and those which were lunatic, (or epileptic,) and those that had the palsy," or were paralytic. This passage leads us next to inquire into the case of these demoniacs, on which we shall now offer a few brief remarks.

1. It is evident that these demoniacs must be distinguished from those whom our translators call lunatic, as well as from the paralytic. The term lunatic simply means, persons under the influence of the moon, (Luna,) though in the modern use of it, we have no regard to that circumstance. Among the ancients, according to Dr. Mead, the term was chiefly applied to epileptics, or persons with the falling sickness, which, according to that celebrated physician, and his still more celebrated predecessor, Galen, is governed by the changes of the moon; and to such it must especially refer in Matt. xvii. 15.

2. It was the opinion of the Hebrews, from the days of Moses, that Satan and his emissaries were active instruments in the inflictions of disease, both bodily and mental; but especially of madness, as in the case of Saul. (See exposition on Job i. and ii., and 1 Sam. xvi. and notes.) Nor was such opinion peculiar to the Jews, but is found in many of the ancient Greek writers; who, however, generally (if not always) used the word demon in a good sense, and considered those possessed by such as inspired, if not deified.

3. From these facts, many modern writers of great learning and ingenuity, have inferred, that the demoniacs, or possessed persons, were so called by our Lord and by the Evangelists, in conformity with the popular prejudices, or vulgar errors, of the times. On the other hand, the great majority of commentators, unwilling to admit what they consider a reflection upon the sacred writers, have supposed that the powers of darkness were on this occasion let loose for the express purpose of exhibiting the superior power of the Messiah; a position which appears to us no less unworthy of the divine character. But there seems another alternative, and we confess ourselves of the opinion.

4. That from the fall of Adam, those spirits connected with the tempter that seduced him, have been permitted, and in some cases even employed, to afflict mankind, while it is a part of the duty and employment of holy angels to defeat and counteract their malevolent designs: it being decidedly the doctrine of Scripture, that both are alike under the complete control of the Almighty. (See, besides the preceding references, 1 Kings xxii. 19—23. Zech. iii. 1, &c. Passages in the New Testament will be quoted as they occur.) Admitting this doctrine of spiritual agency, we account for things otherwise inexplicable: as, for instance, disorder or defect in our natural organs, may account for the defect or perversity of reason; but not for that peculiar acuteness in some subjects of derangement, which can hardly be equalled by persons in the full possession of their senses. But the admitting this agency accounts for every phenomenon, and gives full propriety to our Lord's language on this subject, which no other hypothesis can justify.

It may, indeed, be thought a reflection on the divine being, to allow an enemy thus to interfere with, or interrupt the moral government of God. But the same objection lies against the very existence of moral evil: and so strong does it appear, that some modern sceptics have attempted to demonstrate, not only the non-existence of moral evil, but the very impossibility that it should exist, thus proving that there could be no moral evil in any violence that could be inflicted on themselves; though at the same time no men are more ready to murmur against God, or to complain of human governments.

Why an infinitely wise and powerful Being suffers creatures to interfere, and apparently derange his plans, is a question which himself only can answer; and probably cannot be answered so as to be comprehended by creatures of our contracted powers. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Isa. lv. 8, 9.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—16. The sermon on the Mount: the beatitudes.—Dr. Boothroyd and others connect this chapter with the preceding, thus: Great multitudes following our Lord, in consequence of being attracted by his miracles, he was constrained to ascend a mountain, that he might have the opportunity of addressing his disciples the more conveniently, and where, possibly, the multitude themselves might have the better opportunity of hearing. We pretend not, however, to decide either the particular time or place of its delivery.

The object of this discourse of our Lord, is evidently to point out the grand difference between his doctrine and that of the Scribes and Pharisees. They "counted the proud happy," and aimed at the possession of power, rank, and riches; he recommended humility, with all its kindred virtues. The first in the list, is "poverty of spirit," by which is not to be understood that meanness which is connected with avarice; but "By poorness of spirit (says Soame Jenyns) is to be understood, a disposition of mind, meek, humble, submissive to power, void of ambition, patient of injuries, and free from all resentment. This was so new, and so opposite to the ideas of all Pagan (and, we may add, Rabbinical) moralists, that they thought this temper of mind a criminal and contemptible meanness, ... a shameful pusillanimity; and such it appears to almost all who are called Christians, even at this day, who not only reject it in practice, but disavow it in principle, notwithstanding this explicit declaration of their master. We see them revenging the smallest affronts by premeditated murder, as individuals, on principles of honour; and, in their national capacities, destroying each other with fire and sword, for the low considerations of commercial interests, the balance

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Into a mountain.—A hill, called "The Mountain of Beatitudes," is still pointed out to travellers, though the tradition is of no authority. ——When he was set.—It was customary among the Jews for the teacher to sit, and for his pupils to stand, or sit in a semicircle around him.

Ver. 2. He opened his mouth.—A Hebraism for "he began to speak."

Ver. 3. Blessed.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Happy the poor;" and so in the verses following. ——Poor in spirit—i. e. the humble and lowly in mind.

Ver. 4. They that mourn—i. e. that are "habitually serious."

Ver. 5 Inherit the earth—or "land;" i. e. the land of promise. See He. xi. 9—16.

Ver. 6. Hunger and thirst.—Xenophon in like manner applies these appetites to the mind. He says, "Some tempers hunger after praise, no less than others after meat and drink."

Ver. 8. Pure in heart—Ps. xv. 1; xxiv. 4, 5, and compare Acts xv. 9. 1 Pe. i. 22. 1 Jn. iii. 8.

Ver. 13. Ye are the salt of the world—i. e. by your influence you are to make men better, as salt preserves and renders food more savoury and acceptable. —— If the salt have lost his savour.—Maundrell mentions, that in the valley of salt (four hours journey from Aleppo) he broke off a piece of salt, which, from its being long exposed to the sun, rain, and air, had lost its savour, though the part which adhered to the rock retained it. But Townsend quotes from Schoetgen a different illustration. He says, that an inferior kind of salt was collected from the Asphaltic lake, with which the sacrifices were salted; but which, on being exposed to sun and air, soon lost its flavour, and was then sprinkled over the pavement of the temple, like sand. ——Wherewith shall it be salted?—Dr. Good quotes a learned Swede, who gives to this clause a different translation. "How can we salt with it, which he prefers.

Ver. 15. A candlestick.—Campbell, "Lamp-stand."

17 ¶ Think not that I am come to destroy [r] the law, or [s] the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to [t] fulfil.

18 For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle [u] shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

19 Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great [v] in the kingdom of heaven.

20 For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed [w] the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

21 ¶ Ye have heard that it was said [x] by them of old time, [y] Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment:

22 But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a [z] cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, [a] Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.

of rival powers, or the ambition of princes. . . . . And, what is still worse, we hear all these barbarisms celebrated by historians, flattered by poets, applauded in theatres, approved in senates, and even sanctified in pulpits. But universal practice cannot alter the nature of things. . . . . Pride was not made for man; but humility, meekness, resignation; that is, "poorness of spirit," was made for man, and properly belongs to his dependent situation, and is the only disposition of mind which can enable him to enjoy ease and quiet here, and happiness hereafter." (Jenyn's Int. Evid.)

The other dispositions here recommended, are perfectly in harmony with the preceding. Those who are "poor in spirit," are indeed very liable to be oppressed, and therefore often subject to injuries, to grief, and mourning. But there is a blessedness in this, when it is occasioned, not by our crimes, but by our virtues. Hunger and thirst are painful feelings, but there is a blessedness attending them when their object is purely spiritual; when men hunger not after worldly riches, nor thirst after carnal pleasures, or human applause, but after those "durable riches," that true "righteousness" which is provided for us in the Gospel.

"The merciful man doeth good to his own soul," (Prov. xi. 17,) but not to himself alone. Benevolence is an expansive virtue. "There is, (says Mr. Jay,) a blessedness attending this administration of mercy, that can be conceived only by those that exercise it. The luxury of doing good surpasses every other personal enjoyment. A hard-hearted man is surrounded with the curses of the poor; but the benevolent may say with Job, "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me." Job xxix. 11.

But the great Christian paradox is the blessedness of suffering persecution and reproach; this persecution, however, be it remembered, must be "for righteousness' sake," and this reproach must be uttered "falsely." There is no blessedness in provoking persecution wilfully, or by our own imprudence; nor in reproach, when founded in truth, and on our own folly.

But wherein consists the blessedness of these Christian virtues? Partly in the present peace and consolation which attend them, and partly in the future reward of divine approbation which awaits them. The former cannot be denied, either by those who truly experience, or carefully observe them. Witness the sick beds of meek and patient believers! Witness the triumphant deaths of Christian martyrs! But the crowning blessedness is, their "reward in heaven," which has two peculiar properties; it is gratuitous and unmerited; it is final and unfading; well then may they rejoice and be exceeding glad."

Our Lord now addresses his disciples more particularly, as "the salt of the earth," and "the light of the world." The former metaphor implies, that by imbibing the savour of his doctrines, they are to season others with them. Believers are "the salt of the earth;" but if they lose the savour of his doctrines, how shall they communicate it to others? Again, they are "the light of the world;" a world sitting in darkness and the shadow of death; but if their conduct be inconsistent with their principles, it will be like putting a bushel measure over a candle, or lamp, which would totally obstruct its light. On the other hand, a strong, clear, and elevated light, is like "a city set upon a hill," and illumined by the splendour of an unclouded sun. "Let your light," therefore, says our divine Teacher, "so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Ver. 17—32. The strictness and spirituality of God's law, especially against murder and adultery.—Our Lord is here speaking of moral righteousness, or practical religion, as inculcated by Moses and the prophets; but this law, the Pharisees and Scribes "made void by their traditions," (chap. xv. 6.) and relaxed the strictness of its precepts: but, says our Lord, think not that I am come so to do. I am come to fulfil it in all its purity; to enforce it in all its rigour. "Heaven and earth," indeed, "shall pass away," but God's word must be fulfilled. Whoever, therefore, shall violate one of these divine commands, and teach or encourage others so to do, he shall be lit-

Ver. 17. To destroy.—Hammond, "To dissolve;" so Doddridge.——To fulfil.—Hammond, "To perfect;" Doddridge, "To complete;" Campbell, "To ratify." The sense appears to be, that whereas the Jewish teachers relaxed the morality of the law, as we shall see in the instances here subjoined, the object of Jesus was, to enforce it to the utmost extent of its demands.

Ver. 18. Verily.—Gr. Amen; I solemnly assure you.——One jot or tittle.—The jot (Iota) is the Hebrew Jod, and the tittle seems to refer to the corners of certain Hebrew letters, which distinguish them from others, (as, for instance, the Beth from the Caph, or the Daleth from the Resh;) which letters, without they are written with great care, are scarcely to be distinguished. Lamy, &c.

Ver. 19. One of these least commandments.—Doddridge and Campbell, "One of the least of these commandments."

Ver. 20. Of the scribes.—These are said to be of two classes, secular and ecclesiastical; but the latter are here intended, among whom were many degrees of rank, from mere transcribers, to men "learned in the law," like Ezra, (vii. 6.) Some of these are called "Doctors," and doubtless had disciples. (Mat. xxiii. 2, 3.)——The Pharisees were a sect remarkable for their attachment to the ceremonial law, and still more to the traditions of the elders. They were accounted most orthodox, and the scribes are generally associated with them. But we shall find their true character best developed in our Lord's addresses to them.——Righteousness.—Sanctity of life and integrity of conduct.

Verses 21 and 27. Said by.—Marg. "To;" so Doddridge and all the modern translators.——Them of old time.—That is, those to whom the law was delivered at Sinai.

Ver. 22. Judgment.—[An inferior court of judicature, in every city, consisting of twenty-three members, which punished criminals by strangling or beheading.]—Bagster.—— Raca.—That is, an empty, worthless fellow; so Drusius, who is followed by Doddridge, &c.——The council—Greek, Sanhedrim—composed of seventy-two elders, who alone punished by stoning.——Thou fool—Greek, Moreh, which Doddridge explains, "Thou wicked villain."——Hell fire—Greek, "The fire of the valley of Hinnom." See 2 Kings xxiii. 10, and note

Ver. 24. Leave there thy gift.—It appears from Dr Lightfoot, that sacrifices were not always offered immediately, but sometimes reserved to an approaching feast. At those times the people collected from all quarters, and reconciliation might be more easily effected. It may also be remembered, that there were fields, or pasture grounds, belonging to the temple, as it was impossible to keep all the great and small cattle for the public feasts within the courts of the temple.——Then come and offer thy gift.—Philo says, "When a man had injured his brother, and repenting of his fault, voluntarily acknowledged it, (in which case both restitution and sacrifice were required,) he was first to make restitution, and then to come into the temple, presenting his sacrifice, and asking pardon." Philo was contemporary with our Lord: but this rule appears to have been much neglected.

Ver. 25. Agree . . . quickly.—According to the Roman custom, a person aggrieved could compel the other party to go with him before the Prætor, unless he agreed by the way to adjust the matter. Adams' Rom. Antiq.

Ver. 26. The uttermost farthing.—That is, the full extent of the penalty inflicted. Some Roman Catholic writers have had the ingenuity to draw from hence an argument in favour of Purgatory; but it is evident that this refers to a final, and not to a temporary punishment, as in verses 22 and 29; and that no consistent Catholic can argue from the particle "till," for a termination of it: see chap. i. 29.

Ver. 28. Looketh.—Doddridge, "Gazeth;" that the word is often emphatic, see chap. vii. Luke vii. 44. Acts i. 9; iii. 4, &c.

Ver. 29. Offend thee.—Hammond and Doddridge, "Ensnare thee."

Ver. 30. Cut it off.—[Every one must immediately see, says Bishop Porteus, that the eye to be plucked out is the eye of concupiscence, and the hand to be cut off is the hand of violence and vengeance; that is, these passions are to be checked and subdued, let the conflict cost us what it may.——Hell.—Greek, geennan, a corruption of the Hebrew words gai hinnom, "the valley of Hinnom," which lay near Jerusalem, and had been the place of those abominable sacrifices in which the idolatrous Jews burnt their children to Moloch. Hence this place became in process of time an emblem of hell, or the place of punishment.]—Bagster.

tle esteemed among Christ's disciples. For, says, our Redeemer, "except your righteousness exceeds that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven;" that is, ye shall neither enjoy the privileges of my disciples here, nor share in their rewards hereafter.

"We must (says Henry) do more than the Pharisees, and better than they, or we shall come short of heaven. They were partial in the law, and laid most stress on the ritual part of it; but we must be universal. . . . They minded only the outside, but we must make conscience of inward godliness. They aimed at the praise of men; but we must seek acceptance with God. They were proud of what they did, but we, when we have done all, must say, that 'we are unprofitable servants.'"

Our Lord now adverts to some particular instances, to show the difference between his doctrine and that of the Scribes and Pharisees above alluded to. Thus, for example, the Mosaic law had said, "Thou shalt not kill," and whoever was guilty of murder, was subjected to the punishment of death. Here the Jewish doctors rested, without adverting to those sins of the heart and of the lips, which, though not cognizable by the letter of the law, would equally subject them to punishment from God, though in different degrees, which he compares to the different judgments of the lower court, the Sanhedrim, and the fire of the valley of Hinnom, here rendered "hell-fire." There is some difficulty, however, in distinguishing the several degrees of crime and punishment. To be angry with our brother (and every man is our brother, as well as our neighbour, Luke x. 29, &c.) "without cause," or without a sufficient cause, will subject us to the judgment of God: to treat him with contempt and ridicule, as a vain, empty fellow, is more criminal; but to fly into a rage with him, and call him a scoundrel, or villain, would subject us to still more terrible judgments, like those in the valley of Hinnom, the type of hell. Here, then, we see causeless anger, (though in the heart only,) reproachful satire, and especially bitter and cruel attacks on character, without legal proof, are all criminal in the sight of God. Our Lord directs men, in the first place, to seek reconciliation, and then make their offering; whereas it is reasonable to believe that those who had once made their offering thought no more of reconciliation. The next verse is supposed to allude to a custom introduced by the Romans, according to which, the complainant could compel an offender to go before the magistrate, unless he agreed to accommodate the matter by the way; and once committed, they must remain till the law was fully satisfied.

If the law against murder includes every species of violence leading thereto, by analogy of reasoning, that against adultery every species of uncleanness; for a man to gaze upon a woman with a lustful eye, is to commit adultery with her in his heart. And our Lord teaches us, "that the eye and the hand, and the fleshly powers, may become wretched occasions of sin to us; and, if there were no other way to avoid the danger, it were better to bear the pain of parting with those mischievous and offensive members, than yield to their temptations, and rush on to guilt and eternal misery." (Watts' Contest of the Powers of Flesh and Spirit.)

What here follows with respect to divorcement, is in opposition to another subterfuge of the Jewish doctors, who, in order to indulge the vices of the rich, (and probably their own,) allowed men to put away their wives, for every (or any) cause; (chap. xix. 2;) whereas none but the most important cause (moral uncleanness) ought by any means to be admitted, to separate those whom God hath joined. (Ch. xix. 6.) But here is another very important truth covertly insinuated, namely, that those who occasion sin in others, cannot themselves be innocent: a man who divorces his wife without a just cause, may lead two other parties into adultery, and thereby be partaker in the crimes of both. This is to "add sin to sin," and to accumulate wrath against the day of judgment.

Ver. 33—48. Laws with respect to oaths—a peaceful disposition and brotherly love.—The Mosaic law certainly did not forbid the use of oaths, but restrained men two ways—from swearing falsely, and from swearing by improper objects.

Ver. 31. Whosoever shall put away, &c.—[Divorces were carried to a scandalous and criminal excess among the Jews; the school of Hillel permitting a man to put away his wife, if he saw a woman handsomer than her, or if she displeased in her manners, or even in dressing his victuals!]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Fornication.—It is evident that the terms fornication and adultery are here used as synonymous, to include every species of actual uncleanness.

Ver. 33. Thou shalt not forswear thyself, &c.—[The morality of the Jews on this point was truly execrable: they maintained that a man might swear with his lips, and annul it the same moment in his heart! And, in even their holiest precepts, they did not pretend to forbid all common swearing, but only what they term much.]—Bagster.

Ver. 34. For it is God's throne.—Herodotus says, that "when the Scythians desire to use the most solemn oath, they swear by the king's throne."

Ver. 35. Nor by the earth.—Mr. Hughes (Travels in Sicily and Greece) mentions an old man at Acathamia swearing "by the earth," as an ancient oath. —Neither by Jerusalem.—This was common among the Jews, and is mentioned in the Gemara.

Ver. 36. Neither by thy head.—Another Jewish oath, but no less common among the Greeks and Romans, as appears from Homer, Virgil, Horace, Martial, &c.

Ver. 37. Yea, yea, is a solemn and deliberate affirmative; Nay, nay, as solemn a negation. Repetition, among the Hebrews, implied truth and certainty. See Ge. xli. 32. Ps. lxii. 11. Da. v. 25. Jn. v. 19, 24, 25. Jude 12. Campbell renders it, "Let your yes be yes, and your no, no."—Cometh of evil—or, "the evil one." Hammond and Doddridge. Not only profane oaths, but the needless multiplication even of lawful oaths, is a great evil, and much to be lamented in our own country. In opposition to what is advanced in our exposition of this passage, we may notice the contrary arguments of Friend Barclay, who contends, that every kind of swearing is forbidden; in doing which he is compelled to deny the oath of God, He. vi. 13—17; contending, that an oath implies swearing by another person, whereas God, swearing only by himself, did not, properly speaking, swear at all: but this is in direct opposition to the passage in the Hebrews, just referred to. And he evades the argument of our Lord's swearing, by pleading that this was under the Jewish dispensation; but it was certainly subsequent to his sermon on the mount.—See Barclay's Apol. chap. xv. As to the ceremony of "kissing the book," we consider it by no means essential to the nature of an oath. And if the Society of Friends are willing, on proper occasions, to declare they "speak the truth in the fear of God, and before him," whom they call to witness, we consider this, to all intents and purposes, as an oath, which ought to be admitted in all courts, criminal as well as civil. Assertions under such protests being, if false, subject to punishment as perjury.——Resist not evil—That is, "the evil or injurious person;" but submit to suffer wrong. See Hammond, Doddridge, Campbell.

Ver. 39. Turn . . . . the other also.—This is considered as a proverbial expression, indicative of great patience and forbearance.

Ver. 40. Sue thee at the law.—Wrong thee under pretence of law. It teaches us to love our enemies, and to be patient and forgiving under injuries.

Ver. 41. Whosoever shall compel.—Hammond and Doddridge, "Press" thee, &c.——Go with him twain.—This is supposed to refer to the Persian Angari, or state couriers, who were empowered to compel any person they met to assist them, or to surrender his horse to them; and a like arbitrary authority was exercised over the Jews by the Roman governors.

Ver. 45. He maketh his sun to rise, &c.—Bishop Jebb quotes a beautiful Persian epigram, which says, "Be like the trees, which impart their shade and fruits to every traveller, to those even who assault them with sticks and stones."

Ver. 46. Publicans.—[The term publican, from the Latin publicanus denotes a tax-gatherer, or farmer of collector of the public revenues, nearly corresponding to the original Greek telones, from telos, a tax, and meomai, I buy, or, farm. They were detested among all nations for their rapacity and avarice and abhorred especially by the Jews to whom the Roman government was odious.]—Bagster.

47 And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?

48 ¶ Be ye therefore [u] perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ continueth his sermon on the mount, speaking of alms, 5 prayer, 14 forgiving our brethren, 16 fasting, 19 where our treasure is to be laid up, 24 of serving God and mammon: 25 exhorteth not to be careful for worldly things: 33 but to seek God's kingdom.

TAKE heed that ye do not your [a] alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward [b] of your Father which is in heaven.

2 Therefore when thou doest thine alms, [c] do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

3 But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth:

4 That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward [d] thee openly.

5 ¶ And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their [e] reward.

6 But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in [f] secret shall reward thee openly.

7 But when ye pray, use not vain [g] repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for [h] their much speaking.

8 Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth [i] what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.

9 After this manner therefore pray ye: Our [j] Father [k] which art in [l] heaven, Hallowed be [m] thy name.

10 Thy kingdom [n] come. Thy will be done in earth, [o] as it is in heaven.

11 Give us this day our [p] daily bread.

12 And forgive us our [q] debts, as we forgive our debtors.

13 And lead us not into [r] temptation, but deliver us [s] from evil: For thine [t] is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever Amen.

Now we have already seen that our Lord attempted no alteration in the moral law; but only to rescue it from the false glosses and perversions of the Scribes and Pharisees. He could not, therefore, forbid that use of oaths (as an end of strife, Heb. vi. 16.) which Jehovah had expressly sanctioned; (Deut. vi. 13;) but, as on the preceding laws of murder and adultery, he exposes and condemns the evasions which these corrupt teachers had invented, in order to "make void the law of God by their traditions." 1. Though they dared not swear by idols, nor even swear falsely in the name of Jehovah; yet they considered themselves as laid under no solemn obligation in swearing by the heavens, or by the earth; by Jerusalem, or by their own head. So some nominal Christians in our own time seek the like evasion, in swearing by heaven, or by Jove; by their faith, or by their troth; neither of which, they suppose, can bear witness to their crime. 2. Though they might shrink from the guilt of judicial perjury, yet they would introduce into their communications with each other, in common conversation, a variety of profane and idle oaths, by way of embellishment, as is, perhaps even more frequently, the case in our own days; men not considering, or even believing, that for them they must give an account in the day of judgment. The object of these verses appears therefore to be, not to interfere with the public and solemn oaths, either of allegiance, or of evidence; but to purify their conversation from falsehood and profaneness, and confine it within the boundaries of truth and decency. But that Jesus did not mean to interfere, as we said, with their judicial proceedings, is, we think, clear, not only from the remarks above, but from the example of himself and his Apostles. The former, though silent to all preceding questions, no sooner is adjured by the high priest in the name of God, than he replies, and enters into the oath administered, which he surely would not have done, had its administration been unlawful. (chap. xxvi. 33, 34; compare Num. v. 19.) Paul also, in several instances, uses, on solemn occasions, expressions far beyond "Yea and nay," and even equivalent to oaths; (2 Cor. i. 18, 23. Gal. i. 20;) and St. John, in the last book of the New Testament, introduces an angel, lifting up his right hand and swearing "by him that liveth for ever and ever." (Rev. x. 5, 6.)

There is another point of view, however, in which this passage has been considered by a late ingenious writer, as referring to the subject of religious vows, which were certainly admitted and encouraged under the Old Testament dispensation. (Deut. xxiii. 21—23.) These, he remarks, are alluded to, ver. 33, "perform unto the Lord thine oath," which can only be applied to promissory oaths, or vows to God, which, under the Gospel, are not only not required, but forbidden. (Pirie's Works.)

Our Lord, in this chapter, animadverts on two classes of precepts. What was said "to them of old time," evidently refers to the moral law against murder, adultery, and oaths; but, in ver. 38 and 43, the expression "to them of old time" is omitted; "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," is no part of the moral, but belonged to the judicial law, (Exod. xxi. 24,) and expresses the legal punishment for private injuries; even "life for life," and "stripe for stripe." And this is certainly an equitable principle, and one on which the criminal law in our own and other nations is, in great measure, founded. But this is not the law of Christ, nor that on which Christians ought individually to act. They should rather render "good for evil," and "overcome evil with good."

The next precept, also, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy," is in the first part of it from Levit. xix. 18; but the latter part appears to have been an inference drawn from certain circumstances of Jewish history, and particularly the injunction to their forefathers to extirpate the seven tribes of Canaan, which they unwarrantably applied to all whom they considered as their enemies; though they had repeated admonitions to the contrary. (See. Exod. xxiii. 4, 5. Prov. xxiv. 17, 18; xxv. 21, 22.)

The principles which Jesus taught, were those which he exemplified. Did he say, "Resist not evil?" "He gave his back to the smiters, his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; and he hid not his face from shame and spitting." (Isa. i. 6) Did he say, "Love your enemies," and "Pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you?" He prayed even for his murderers, whilst hanging on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—18. On alms-deeds, prayer, and fasting.—Our Lord here directs the attention of his disciples more immediately to their religious duties, in which he particularly recommends secrecy and simplicity. Comparing the first verses with ch. v. 16, which requires us to "Let our light shine before men," &c. some have conceived an inconsistency; which, however, the late excellent Fuller removes in a few words: "It is right to do that which men may, and must see; but not for the sake of being seen by them. The difference lies in the motive."

"Our divine Master (says a learned writer) had such an abhorrence of hypocrisy, that he not only commanded his followers not to be hypocrites, but also not to be like them;" and that especially in the publicity and parade of their devotions.

Ver. 47. If ye salute your brethren only.—The rigid Jews would not salute the publicans, nor would even the publicans salute the heathen. Harmer.

Ver. 48. Perfect—i. e. benevolent.——Even as your Father—i. e. like as your father, a similitude.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. Do not your alms.—Some ancient copies, versions, and Christian Fathers, read, "Practice not your righteousness," which Doddridge and Campbell explain as including the three following duties; alms, prayer, and fasting. Mrs. Judson, giving some account, in a letter, of the first Burman convert, says, "A few days ago I was reading with him Christ's Sermon on the Mount. He was deeply impressed, and unusually solemn.—'These words,' said he, 'take hold on my very heart; they make me tremble. Here God commands us to do every thing that is good in secret, not to be seen of men. How unlike our religion is this! When Burmans make offerings at the pagodas, they make a great noise with drums and musical instruments, that others may see how good they are. But this religion makes the mind fear God; it makes it of its own accord fear sin.'"

Ver. 2. They have their reward—That is, what they seek after, the applause of men.

Ver. 5. Standing.—It should appear by this expression, that many of the Jews sat but the Pharisees stood, as an expression of their zeal.——In the Synagogues.—Though this term is undoubtedly used for any public assembly, as it is rendered, James ii. 2. yet we think with Doddridge, that it here most probably refers to their places of worship.

Ver. 6. Which is in secret—That is, invisible to mortal eye. See Ps. xviii. 11; lxxxi. 7.——Shall reward thee openly.—See chap. xxv. 34, &c.

Ver. 7. Vain repetitions.—The Greek word here used, Battalogie, alludes to a babbler of the name of Battus, who, according to Suidas, made long hymns, consisting of many lines, full of tautologies.

Ver. 9. After this manner.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Thus," which includes the ideas both of a pattern and a form: compare Luke xi. 1, &c.

Ver. 11. Our daily bread.—Doddridge, (from Mede,) "Bread sufficient for our present support."

Ver. 12. Forgive us, &c.—The condition on which we here ask forgiveness, is, "as we forgive" those who wrong us; consequently, if we do not heartily forgive, every time we offer up this prayer, we really pray God not to forgive us, but to destroy us for ever. Mark xi. 25, 26.

Ver. 13. From evil.—Hammond and Doddridge, "From the evil one;" but Campbell prefers our translation, and lays it down as a maxim, that when a word is in all respects equally susceptible of two interpretations, one of which, as a genus, comprehends the other, always to prefer the most extensive, which here is evil.

your heavenly Father will also forgive you:
15 But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your [u] trespasses.
16 ¶ Moreover when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men [v] to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.
17 But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, and wash thy face;
18 That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.
19 ¶ Lay not up for yourselves treasures [w] upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:
20 But lay up for yourselves treasures in [x] heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal:
21 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.
22 ¶ The light of the body is the [y] eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.
23 But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!
24 ¶ No man can serve two [z] masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot [a] serve God and mammon.

We have no proof that the Pharisees literally "sounded a trumpet;" the expression may only mean, as Mr. Harmer says, that they sought publicity, like the stage-players and gladiators of ancient times, who were thus introduced to the spectators. Chardin remarks, however, that the Eastern dervishes were sometimes furnished with rams' horns, which they sounded on receiving alms. So in regard to prayer, they sought the same publicity, "to be seen of men." A miserable devotion this, which is practised by Turks and Heathens to the present day: at the same time, it may make those blush who are ashamed of religion, and even of being seen in the house of God.

Dr. Gill supposes our Lord to mention giving of alms before prayer, because it was customary for the Jews first to bestow their alms, and then to pray. In both these duties secrecy is enjoined, to avoid the semblance of vanity and ostentation: but there are occasions in which it may be necessary to give alms in public, to excite others; and as to social and public prayer, it is no less a duty than private devotion. Those who never give alms or pray but in public, may assure themselves, that neither their prayers nor alms will be accepted. Private prayer, particularly, is the life of personal devotion.

Next to privacy, our Lord urges simplicity, not using vain repetitions like the heathen. Of their practice we have some examples in the worshippers of Baal and of Diana. (1 Kings xviii. 26. Acts xix. 34.) To avoid the evils of repetition, and at the same time to guard them against the omission of petitions necessary and proper, our Lord gives them a prayer which might serve them both as a model and form of their devotion.

In this prayer we are taught to address the Almighty as our Father; and it is true that he is, in one respect, the Father of all his creatures; but we are sinners, and can therefore approach him only through a Mediator. "It is only through him (says Dr. Booker) that we can presume to address God as our Father; because we can only be heirs of God by being joint heirs with Christ."

The first petition regards the divine glory, which certainly ought to be a primary object with us, and will be when we recollect how intimately the divine glory is connected with our salvation, in which "mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other." Intimately connected with God's glory is the advancement of his kingdom, which may be understood to comprehend. 1. The progress of his gospel in the world: the gospel of the kingdom first announced by John, and afterwards proclaimed by Jesus and his Apostles. 2. "The kingdom of God within us," which is "righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Rom. xiv. 17. And, 3. The completion of both in "glory everlasting." Dr. Booker observes, "There is so close a connexion between such temporal and eternal blessings, that they cannot well be separated. There is, indeed, a continuity which death cannot break. . . . . Faith and holiness, the love of God, and of our fellow-creatures—the exercises of divine worship, adoration, and praise, are the great constituents of real happiness in this world; and, in a more sublime and exalted manner, from these principles and from these exercises, we are taught to believe "the heirs of salvation" will derive a chief portion of their felicity in the world to come."

In these first three petitions, the employments and enjoyments of the present and the future life are intimately connected; but in the three following, they are confined to the present state. In the world to come, we shall want neither daily bread, nor forgiveness of sin, nor deliverance from temptation. Our wants will be all supplied, our sins all forgiven, and prayer exchanged for everlasting praise. While, however, we continue on earth, our wants are daily recurring, and our prayers require daily to be renewed. It was the wise request of Agur, "Feed me with food convenient for me;" a petition very analogous to that before us, "Give us this day our daily bread."

In the next petition, we are taught to consider ourselves as debtors to the Almighty. We owe him universal, perfect, and perpetual obedience; and therefore, when we omit to pay this, whether "by doing what we ought not to have done," or leaving "undone what we ought to have done," we become debtors to divine justice; and, as our Lord has taught us in the preceding chapter, are liable to be cast into prison, even the prison of hell, for ever. And if we are delivered from this by a gratuitous pardon, then we become equally indebted to the divine mercy. But we also have our debtors; at least in that light we consider those who have offended us; and in no case are we encouraged to implore pardon, but when we are prepared to grant the same to others: "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."

The last petition seems also to require some explanation; "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Does not St. James (ch. i. 13.) forbid us to ascribe to God any of our temptations? He does; yet there is a sense in which he may lead us into such trials, and that for wise and holy ends. Abraham was led into temptation when God required him to offer up his son. Job was led into temptation, when God permitted Satan to try him with losses and disease. And Jesus himself was "led into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil." In all these cases, the Providence of God permitted the evil, and the Spirit of God supported the sufferers under it. But as these were extraordinary cases, and we are of ourselves unable to sustain the trial, we are taught to pray, that God will be pleased to preserve us from such temptations, or in any wise from falling under them. So, feeling the weakness of our constitutions, we may pray to be preserved from a sickly climate, or, that we may be kept from the dangers of it.

But we must again return to the preceding clause, relative to our forgiving others, and we may judge of the importance which our Lord attaches to this precept, from his again and again adverting to it, and from the strong terms in which he expresses himself. A worthy clergyman, whose Lectures we have repeatedly quoted on this chapter, has placed this precept in a striking point of view. Referring to the clause, "If ye forgive not, ... neither will your heavenly Father forgive you," Dr. Booker adds, "Not that the forgiveness of injuries will entitle us to the pardon of God:" but, "our pardoning others is one of those qualifications which are indispensably requisite to fit us for the gracious gift of eternal life. This alone will not save us, nor will any thing else without it: no, not even the blood of Christ: for he will not apply that blood to the rancorous soul which refuses to forgive a fellow sinner."

Ver. 19—34. Against covetousness, duplicity, and over anxiety for temporal things.—The first exhortation is, not to lay up treasures upon earth, where they are equally liable to be corrupted, or to be stolen. Disputes have occurred among men of property where they could obtain the best interest for their money, and the best security. Some have preferred trade; but, alas! what trade has not failed? Or, they have trusted it in public banks; but these also have deceived them. Some have placed it in funded, and some in landed property; but

> "——— the Earth itself shall be burnt up,
> And all that it contains."

Where then shall we trust our souls, and the momentous concerns of an eternity? It is to a "faithful Creator" only, that we should surrender our souls, and it is in heaven only that our deposits can be out of the range of accidents and of dangers. How happy is it for us to be able to say, especially when

Ver. 16. Disfigure their faces—Or disguise them; the Rabbins have a saying, "Whoever makes his face black on account of the law in this world, God will make his brightness to shine in the world to come."

Ver. 17. Anoint thy head, &c.—This was omitted on occasion of their fasting, to make them appear the more wretched.

Ver. 18. In secret.—See ver. 6.

Ver. 19. Rust.—Hammond. "Smut;" Doddridge, "Canker;" it is a very general term, and from the same root as the term used in ver. 16 in relation to disfiguring the face by dirt, or smut. Moth corrupts garments; rust, metals; smut, corn; and dirt will disfigure any thing.

Ver. 22. The light.—Gr. "Lamp;" so Doddridge and Campbell.—Single.—Doddridge, "Clear;" Campbell, "Sound." It properly means "simple," unincumbered by film.

Ver. 23. Evil.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Distempered;" filmy, or otherwise diseased.

Ver. 24. Mammon.—"A Syriac word for riches. Wealth is here personified

CHAPTER VII.

1 Christ, ending his sermon on the mount, reproveth rash judgment, 6 forbiddeth to cast holy things to dogs, 7 exhorteth to prayer, 13 to enter in at the strait gate, 15 to beware of false prophets, 21 not to be hearers, but doers of the word: 24 like houses tumbled on a rock, 26 and not on the sand.

---

we come to die, "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him!"

There is another circumstance which makes the deposit of our treasures to be of vast importance: "Where your treasure is (says our Lord) there will your hearts be also." When our hearts are devoted to the enjoyment of worldly pleasure, the accumulation of wealth, or the acquisition of applause, where then can our treasure be? Not in heaven, assuredly, if our Lord's words may be depended on.

The next topic of this discourse is no less interesting; namely, to guard us against duplicity and hypocrisy: "The light (or lamp) of the body is the eye;" if that "be single," (or clear,) then is "the whole body full of light." "The eye is the intention, (says Gregory the Great,) and the body is the action; if the intention be pure, the action will be uniform and regular." If the eye of the mind "be singly fixed on God and heaven (says Wesley) the whole soul will be filled with holiness and happiness." If the eye be evil—not simple, but aiming to serve both God and Mammon, then will the mind be as surely involved in darkness, as the body would be, by losing the organs of sight.

What is here said of serving God and Mammon or the world, may remind us of the idolatrous Israelites in the time of Ahab, who, though they never openly renounced the worship of JEHOVAH, worshipped Baal also. But the prophet Elijah severely reproved this vacillating conduct, and urged them to decision. "If the LORD be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." So may we say, "halt not between two opinions;" if Mammon (or the world) be God, the source of true and lasting happiness, let us fall down before him; but if not—and who is there that dare maintain the affirmative?—then why devote the whole of our affections and our toils to a Baal that cannot hear us, and who in our extremity cannot help us? (Compare Expos. of 2 Kings xviii. ver. 21, &c.

We are now led to a more pleasing contemplation, and to a duty no less necessary. Behold our Saviour seated on a hill, whose shadow protects both himself and audience from the burning heat. It was his plan to deduce the most important moral and spiritual instruction from natural objects in his view. At this time, therefore, he probably had in view, cornfields interspersed with lilies, and was surrounded with flitting, and perhaps chirping, birds. This, indeed, may be conjectural; but the instruction derived from these objects is certain and important. Instruction has a double hold upon the mind, when it enters at once both by the eye and the ear.

Jesus had before been pressing on his disciples the great importance of their seeking treasures that could not perish, and of their serving a master who would not, and could not disappoint them. Under these considerations, he guards them against unavailing and unnecesary cares about worldly objects, assuring them, that if they faithfully served God—if they sought the prosperity, and practised the righteousness of his kingdom, he would by no means suffer them to perish for lack of necessary supplies.

When, however, we read, "Take no thought for the morrow," we ought to understand that the original term here used does not exclude a prudent forecast; but only that anxious, heart-dividing care, which would divert us from the service of God, and make us slaves to the world and sin. Our Lord reasons upon this subject, first, on the ground that all the care in the world is insufficient without the divine providence, either to increase our growth, or lengthen out our life; and secondly, because such anxiety is unnecessary; for he who feeds the sparrows and clothes the lilies, will much more provide for the necessities of those who, with the use of lawful means, confide in his power and goodness.

> "Will he not care for you, ye faithless, say?
> Is he unwise? or are ye less than they?"—Thompson.

The eastern lily is thought to have been a Persian flower, and is of two sorts; the white lily (which has sometimes streaks of purple) and the red, or scarlet lily, called by us, the crown imperial. Josephus tells us, Solomon's usual dress was white, yet his royal robes were probably purple, or scarlet; in either case, nothing of human manufacture can equal in beauty and splendour these works of the Almighty: yet these fairest of flowers wither and die, and when dead, the stalks are often thrown, with herbs and grass, decayed and dried, to heat their ovens. Such is the end of all human glory!

The conclusion of this chapter is peculiarly interesting. It urges to a most important duty, to which is attached a most encouraging promise. We are to seek the kingdom of God, which includes all the blessings of the Gospel dispensation; and his righteousness may include, both what he requires and what he provides. The righteousness which he requires is holiness, which we are to hunger and thirst after; (ch. v. 6;) that which he provides, is the righteousness which is by faith, even the righteousness of Christ. (Rom. iii. 5, 21, 22, &c.) This is to be sought first, in respect of time, and in preference to all other objects; and to those who thus seek the righteousness of God, all other things—that is, "all things pertaining to life and godliness," shall be added. (2 Pet. i. 3.)

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—14. Against censoriousness and hypocrisy. Encouragement to prayer, and earnestness in religion.—Censoriousness was a reigning sin among the Pharisees; it was therefore needful for our Lord to guard his own apostles against it, especially as it is an error to which young converts are particularly prone. But most assuredly, every censure we pass upon others without looking within, upon our own conduct, exposes us to our Lord's rebuke, and lays us under a just suspicion of hypocrisy. "Thou hypocrite!" first correct thine own faults, and then thy brother's.

and represented as a master who rivals God in our hearts."—Two masters—namely, of opposing interests, as God and Mammon.

Ver. 25. Take no thought.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Be not anxious;" and there is no doubt but this was the meaning of our translators, as the word thought is evidently so used, 1 Sam. ix. 5; also by Bacon, Milton, &c., as quoted in Johnson, and by Fox, the martyrologist, and the Geneva translators, as quoted by Parkhurst, who observes that the Greek term, in its derivation, means a distracting, or heart-dividing carefulness.

Ver. 26. Behold the fowls.—Doddridge, "Birds;" probably sparrows, as in chapter x. 29.—Barns.—Hammond, "Repositories;" Doddridge, "hoards."

Ver. 27. One cubit.—This (being at least 18 inches) would be a great addition to the height, which cannot therefore be here intended: most commentators therefore refer this to age. Applying this measure, however, to human life, it must be considered metaphorically as a race, of which a cubit describes a very small portion, analogous to "an inch of time," a common phrase with poets. Campbell translates the phrase, "Prolong his life one hour."

Ver. 30. The grass of the field.—The Hebrews divided all their vegetable productions into two classes; trees, and herbs, or grass, Gen. i. 29, 30.—Into the oven.—It is certain that fires were kindled and ovens heated with dried vegetables, &c. Compare Ezek. xv. 4.

Ver. 33. Seek ye first the kingdom.—Religion; to be sought "before all things, and above all things," as having "the promise of the life which now is and of that which is to come."

Ver. 34. The morrow shall take thought for itself.—That is, it will be time enough to care for the morrow when the morrow comes. Every day brings its duties and its cares. So Ezra and his companions "offered the daily burnt offerings, . . . as the duty of every day required." Ezra iii. 4.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. Judge not.—This does not forbid us to judge of men by their fruits, i. e. by their lives and principles; but it forbids us to judge with severity, and to condemn with censoriousness.

Ver. 3. The mote . . . . the beam.—The one a small thorn, or splinter of wood. Dr. Lightfoot has shown, that this saying (as well as the preceding) was proverbial among the Jews. [Similar to this is the caution given by Horace, of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

6 ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither [d] cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

7 ¶ Ask, and it shall be given you; [e] seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:

8 For every one that asketh [f] receiveth; and he that seeketh [g] findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

9 Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?

10 Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?

11 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, [h] how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

12 Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for [i] this is the law and the prophets.

13 ¶ Enter ye in [j] at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:

14 [k] Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few [l] there be that find it.

15 ¶ Beware of false prophets, [m] which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening [n] wolves.

16 Ye shall know them by their [o] fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

17 Even so every good tree [p] bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 Every [q] tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

20 Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

21 ¶ Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, [r] shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

22 Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied [s] in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from [t] me, ye that work iniquity.

24 ¶ Therefore [u] whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise [v] man, which built his house upon a rock:

25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a [w] rock.

26 And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish [x] man, which built his house upon the sand:

27 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, [y] and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was [z] the fall of it.

There requires also, in all our reproofs, a harmony between the style which we adopt, and the persons we address. Let us not wantonly expose truths the most sacred, to persons who are likely to snarl at them, or treat them with contempt. It is universally admitted, that the best things may be abused, and are most subject to abuse—as, for instance, the doctrines of divine grace.

Our Lord now returns to the subject of prayer, and having guarded his disciples, in the preceding chapter, against a vain parade, he now urges them to earnestness and importunity. It is not enough to say our prayers; we must ask with a view of receiving; we must seek as those anxious to find; and we must knock with importunity, as persons determined to take no denial. This we are encouraged to do in addressing "Our Father who is in heaven," because we know that no tender father will refuse those things to his children, which he knows to be suitable and good for them.

The relation between this and the following verse is to us not very apparent; but Doddridge thus connects them: "Being animated by his (God's) goodness, let us express (our) gratitude by kindness to our fellow-creatures." We should, however, rather connect them thus: "The Almighty acting toward us as his children, let us act as brethren toward each other:" and then our Saviour lays down his golden rule—"Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them;" a rule equally to be admired for its wisdom, equity, and benevolence; and which comprehends in it, so far as concerns our conduct toward our fellow-creatures, the substance both of "the law and the prophets."

The allusion here made to "a strait gate" and to "a narrow way," has been variously illustrated. To us the simple meaning appears to be, that there are such difficulties in entering upon the Christian course, as require all our exertions, together with the most earnest prayers for divine assistance.

"Lord! can a feeble, helpless worm,
Fulfil a task so hard?
Thy grace must all the work perform,
And give the free reward."—Watts.

Ver. 15—29. A caution against false prophets, and an exhortation to be doers of the word.—"By their fruits ye shall know them," is certainly the best rule to judge, both of preachers and their doctrines. The fruits here referred to, are those virtues and graces of the Holy Spirit on which our Lord has pronounced his blessing in the opening of this discourse,—meekness, humility, purity, and a peaceable disposition; none of which belongs to the character of wolves. The "sheep's clothing" respects not the outward garb, but the persons who put on the external semblance of Christ's disciples, whom he calls his sheep, while their inward disposition, which will eventually show itself in their conduct, proves them to be in heart—"ravening wolves." Or, to advert to another metaphor here used, however fair may be the appearance of a bad tree, its fruit will be of little or no value, till grafted into a good stock. Bad men cannot be good Christians, nor good Christians bad men. (See John xv. 1, &c.) For it is not calling Christ "Lord," nor even working miracles in his name, which will prove any man a Christian; but obedience to his commands. When our Lord says to false prophets and hypocritical professors, "I never knew you," we must take the word, as in many other passages, in the sense of acknowledgment—"I never owned you as my disciples." (See Ps. i. 6; Matt. xxv. 12; John x. 14; 1 Cor. viii. 3, &c.)

More fully to illustrate his meaning, our Lord concludes this discourse with a parable, in which he compares these two classes of his hearers to men building themselves a house; the one upon a sandy desert, which is liable to be undermined by the rain, and blown down by the wind; the other, deep in the fissures of a rock, which bids defiance both to rains and winds. (Compare Luke vi. 48, 49.)

Before closing our remarks on this chapter, we would add, that Bp. Jebb has reduced the whole of our Lord's discourses on the mount, and several others, to the same forms of parallelism as the poetical parts of the Old Testament, particularly Isaiah; in illustration of which remark, we subjoin his version of the concluding parable, (ver. 26, 27:)—

"When you can so readily overlook your own wickedness, why are you more clear sighted than the eagle, or serpent of Epidaurus, in spying out the faultings of your friends?"]—Bagster. Compare Numb. xxxiii. 55. Josh. xxiii. 13.

Ver. 6. Give not that.—Apply not the promises to the wicked.

Ver. 13. The strait gate.—Dr. Whitby explains this as referring to a wicket gate, admitting but one person at a time, and that not without some difficulty. Those (he says) were used on occasions of marriage feasts, &c.; a porter was placed to keep improper persons from pressing in, and when all the company invited were assembled, the door was shut. Mat. xxv. 10.

Ver. 13, 14. Enter ye in.—Are these verses consistent with the salvation of all men? See Luke xiii. 23—30.

Ver. 15. Beware of false prophets.—In Jeremiah xxiii. 17, 21, false prophets are represented as saying to the wicked, "the Lord hath said ye shall have peace—no evil shall come upon you."—The Saviour, after declaring the startling fact, that many lose their souls, cautions all to beware of those who teach a contrary doctrine. By their fruits ye shall know or distinguish them: an unholy life, a graceless heart.

Ver. 17, 18. A corrupt tree.—"An evil tree." The Greek word does not always signify corrupt, or rotten; but of a bad kind, like the rejected fishes, ch. xviii. 48. Campbell.

Ver. 21. The kingdom of heaven—Has two departments, grace and glory: but the expression must evidently refer to the latter.

Ver. 23. Never knew you—As a true disciple.

Ver. 26. Upon the sand.—"The fishermen in Bengal build their huts, in the dry season, on the beds of sand from which the river has retired. When the rains set in, which they often do very suddenly, accompanied with north-

CHAPTER VIII.

2 Christ cleanseth the leper, 5 healeth the centurion's servant, 14 Peter's mother-in-law, 16 and many other diseased: 18 showeth how he is to be followed: 23 stilleth the tempest on the sea, 28 driveth the devils out of two men possessed, 31 and suffereth them to go into the swine.

WHEN he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him.

2 And, behold, there came a leper [a] and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

3 And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.

4 And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell [b] no man; but go thy way, show thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, [c] for a testimony unto them.

5 ¶ And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto him a [d] centurion, beseeching him,

6 And saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented.

7 And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him.

8 The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that [e] thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word [f] only, and my servant shall be healed.

9 For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

10 When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great [g] faith, no, not in Israel.

11 And I say unto you, That [h] many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.

12 But the children of the [i] kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping [j] and gnashing of teeth.

13 And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the self-same hour.

14 ¶ And when Jesus was come into Peter's house, he saw his wife's mother [k] laid, and sick of a fever.

15 And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and she arose, and ministered unto them.

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by [m] Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

18 ¶ Now when Jesus saw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other side.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—15. Christ healeth a leper, the centurion's servant, and Peter's mother-in-law. As Jesus came down from the mountain, a leper contrived, unobserved, to mingle with the multitude, and applied to Jesus to be healed, under the full persuasion that he was able to effect the cure. Jesus, disregarding all public prejudices, and even ceremonial pollutions, touched him and cured him, as privately as he could; desiring him not to stay to publish the matter among the people, but to go to the temple, make the usual offerings for his cleansing, and show himself to the priest, that he might be fully satisfied of his cure. If, however, this be the same miracle recorded by Mark (ch. i.) and Luke (ch. v.,) he by no means attended to the injunction; for, instead of keeping the matter secret, he blazoned it abroad immediately; whether, indeed, he went to the priest afterward, is not said.

The next miracle recorded by Matthew, was wrought upon the favourite servant of a Roman centurion, who had become a convert to the law of Moses, and had ingratiated himself with the Jews, by building them a synagogue. Hearing that Jesus was at Capernaum, he sent to him some of the elders of the Jews, who had probably attended on his ministry, beseeching him to come and heal his servant, who was dangerously diseased with the palsy. Hearing Jesus was on his way, however, he goes forth to meet him, and in a style very different from that of a Roman soldier, humbles himself before him, professes his conviction that it was not necessary for the Lord to trouble himself to come any farther, it would be enough for him to speak the word, and demons and diseases would obey with promptitude, even as his soldiery yielded him obedience, and as he also obeyed the commands of his superior officer.

Jesus, on hearing this, being struck with the centurion's humility and faith, immediately exclaims to those around him, "I have not found so great faith (even) in Israel," as in this Gentile proselyte; and assures them, that many shall be called from among the Gentiles, and sit down with the chosen fathers of the Hebrews to enjoy the blessed feast of the celestial world, whilst their immediate descendants should themselves, be shut out in the regions of darkness and despair for ever. Jesus instantly subjoins, to the centurion, "Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee!" and so it was.

On the allusion here made to the heavenly felicity, Dr. MacKnight remarks—"Our Saviour, in the above passage, in saying that the (converted) heathen should sit in heaven on the same couches with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, wounds the pride of the Jews, who disdained to eat with the heathen, though many of them, with respect to their morality, were better than they. He finely compares the fruitless repentance, the pain and endless torment of the wicked, who are excluded from the joys of heaven, under the emblem of such as are rejected (from) a marriage feast, to which they had come in the hope of being admitted. In pain and despair they weep and gnash their teeth. As the Jews, for the most part, had their great feasts in the evening, by the light of tapers, the darkness in which those who are rejected are cast out of the house, is a very appropriate image of the dreadful state of the condemned, who are for ever excluded from the contemplation of God," and the enjoyment of his favour.

Ver. 16—34. After some inferior incidents, Jesus stilleth a tempest, and casts out devils.—The Evangelist, in mentioning the various miracles wrought by our Redeemer, makes a beautiful allusion to the prophecy of Isaiah: "Himself bare our infirmities, and carried our sicknesses:" yet it will be found, by turning to the prophecy, (ch. liii.) that the words have a farther and sublimer reference to his atonement for our sins. (1 Pet. ii. 24.) We must confine our remarks, however, to the two great miracles which fill up the remainder of this chapter.

The multitudes which followed our Saviour in consequence

Ver. 29. And not as the scribes.—The scribes used to say, Rabbi such-a-one says so and so: Jesus spake as one sent from God, "Verily I say unto you."

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 4. For a testimony unto them—First, to the "priests," for though one only was sufficient to pronounce him cured, others would probably inquire into it; and, secondly, to the people, who would eventually learn the truth of the miracle through their means.

Ver. 15. Unto them—That is, Jesus and those with him. But Campbell says many MSS. read "him," which he prefers.

Ver. 16. He cast out the spirits.—This seems to contradict the idea, that the demons were merely diseases; they were "spirits."

Ver. 17. That it might—Or "thus it was."—Himself took our infirmities. This passage of the prophet Isaiah is expressly referred to the Messiah by the Targumist, who renders, "Surely he will pray for our sins," &c. In the Talmud is this remarkable passage,—"What is the name of the Messiah? Some said, Leprous: according to that, Surely he hath borne our sicknesses, &c. And Messiah sitteth in the gate of the city. And by what sign may he be known He sitteth among the diseased poor." It is also said, in Zohar, that all the

of his miracles, led him to seek retirement; for which purpose he entered into a vessel to cross "the sea," or lake of Gennesareth, in order to pass to the other side, and his disciples with him. On the way, a storm arose, but such was the fatigue and watching which Jesus had endured, that the storm did not awake him. The disciples, however, cried out, under great alarm for their own safety, "Lord, save us, or we perish!" It is said of Julius Cæsar, that in a storm at sea, he quieted the mariners by telling them that they carried Cæsar; but Cæsar could not quiet the storm, as Jesus did. After a gentle reproof of his disciples for their unbelief, "He rebuked the winds and the sea; and"—not, gradually, as is commonly the case, but immediately—"there was a great calm!" Well might the disciples say, "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?" The miracles of Christ were generally wrought, like the work of creation, by a word speaking.

No sooner were Jesus and his disciples landed from the vessel in the country of the Gadarenes, than they were met by two maniacs of the worst class, "exceeding fierce," being possessed with devils, or demons, as the word is now uniformly rendered.

It is remarkable, that though St. Matthew mentions two demoniacs, the Evangelists Mark and Luke mention one only. This seems best accounted for, by supposing one of them rendered himself most conspicuous by his extraordinary conduct, inasmuch as he wore no clothes, and could not be bound with chains. This man also was the only one who continued with Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind. Both, however, when they saw Jesus, fell down and worshipped him, and cried out aloud, "What have we to do with thee? Art thou come to torment us before the time?"

The act of worship he referred to, can only be considered as the usual eastern form of prostration to superiors; and the address shows that the man was sufficiently collected to know the person whom he addressed. The expression, "What have we to do with thee?" if used by the demoniacs, implies a sense of their being connected with unclean spirits, and therefore in opposition to the holiness of Christ's character and mission. At the same time knowing that it was a part of his work and mission to cast out demons, they deprecated his interference, as though they expected it would add to their present sufferings. These words are, however, by most commentators (we believe) considered as those of the demons themselves, expressing an alarm lest they should be banished from earth, and consigned to their final punishment before the expected time. In our Lord's conversations with demons, we confess there is much that we do not understand, arising from our ignorance of the precise nature and circumstances of these "unclean spirits."

The Evangelist now remarks, that there was, at some distance, a herd of many swine feeding; a circumstance little to be expected in a country where religion did not suffer them to be eaten. These Gadarenes were, however, a sort of mongrel Jews, who preferred their interests to their religion, keeping swine, probably, for purposes of sale to the Gentiles, who were numerous in these parts, and often, perhaps, under that pretence, indulging themselves in the forbidden food. This accounts for our Lord's permitting the demons to destroy them, as a just punishment to their infidel and avaricious owners.

Why the demons should beseech Jesus not to send them out of the country, is not so clear. Dr. Doddridge infers from Dan. x. 13, 20, that different evil genii (as well as good angels) "preside over distinct regions, under the direction of Satan their prince." If this be the case, however, their power must be a usurpation, like that of their master, "the god of this world," (2 Cor. iv. 4.) whose reign is tolerated like many other evils, on account of the general good for which it is over-ruled by the providence of God. (See expos. on Dan. x.)

But how did the demons affect the swine? If, when they took possession of men, they produced a total derangement of their rational faculties, we may naturally conclude that they produced a similar effect on the natural powers of the animals. The late Lord Erskine mentioned to the writer that he once had a flock of sheep bitten by a mad dog, and the consequence was, that they ran round and round the field in which they were enclosed, with such impetuosity, that at length they laid down and died with fatigue; such appears to have been the impetus which drove this swinish multitude into the bed of the sea.

The effect of this circumstance upon the people was no less remarkable. They seem convinced that Jesus was possessed of a divine power, and therefore approach him with respect and reverence, praying him—not to forgive their sin, nor to heal their sick, nor to teach them the way of salvation, but—strange! surpassing strange!—to depart out of their coasts, for fear he should do them more mischief.

But what was the effect of the miracle on the immediate subjects of it, the poor lunatics themselves? Of one of them we know nothing; but it is to be feared he was not duly sensible of the favour he had received; the other, however, the worst of them, the naked madman whom chains could not confine, was found "clothed, and in his right mind;" telling all the people what Jesus had done for him, and afterwards (as Mark informs us) entreating the Saviour, "that he might be with him." (Mark v. 18.) "Howbeit," says that Evangelist, "Jesus suffered him not;" but directed him to go home to his friends, "and tell them how great things the Lord had done" for him. He did so, and thus showed his gratitude for the blessings which he had received.

diseases, all the griefs, and all the punishments due to Israel, shall be borne by him. Christ fulfils the prophecies in all respects, and is himself their completion.

Ver. 22. Let the dead bury their dead.—That is, let the spiritually dead employ themselves in burying those who are literally so. Doddridge and Campbell.

Ver. 28. Gergesenes.—The same as Gadarenes, according to Doddridge. Wetstein and Campbell think this word was introduced by Origen on conjecture, and that the original word was Gadarenes. So in Mark v. 1, and Luke viii. 26, it is called "the country of the Gadarenes." It is now called Om Keis; and the remains of the sepulchral caverns in which the demoniacs abode are still to be seen. Trav. in Syria. If Gadara and Gergese were not the same place, they were certainly very near each other, and the district intended by, as Luke says, over against Galilee.—Coming out of the tombs.—Mr. Forbes speaking of burying places in the East, says, they "frequently afford shelter to the weary traveller when overtaken by the night; and their recesses are also a hiding-place for thieves and murderers." Mr. Buckingham visited a tomb about eight feet high, and twelve paces square, which was turned into a family residence, and the sarcophagus, or stone coffin, used as a provision chest. Orient. Lit. No. 1183.

Ver. 32. The whole herd.—Mark says they were about 2000, and the demons themselves boast that they were a legion, which at this period contained between 4 and 5000, but probably varied like our regiments, and was often used indefinitely, like our term regiment, for an undefined number.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. His own city.—That is, Capernaum, the metropolis of Galilee, whither our Lord had removed from Nazareth, Mat. iv. 13.

2 And, [a] behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy, [b] Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee.

3 And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth.

4 And Jesus knowing their [c] thoughts said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?

5 For whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and walk?

6 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to [d] forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thy house.

7 And he arose, and departed to his house.

8 But when the multitudes saw it, they marvelled, and glorified [e] God, which had given such power unto men.

9 ¶ And [f] as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man, named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom: and he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose, and followed him.

10 ¶ And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples.

his sin. He calls Matthew, and in his house eats with publicans and sinners.—It should seem that this paralytic was not only "sick of the palsy," but distressed in mind, and therefore does our Lord address him in this consolatory language; "Son, be of good cheer:" that is, "take courage," as Doddridge renders it, "thy sins are forgiven thee." Certain of the Scribes, who were then present, take umbrage at this, and murmuring in their hearts, say, "This man blasphemeth!" Jesus, however, evinces his authority to forgive sins, by immediately healing him. The argument stands thus: "If I were a blasphemer, would the Almighty confirm my word, by imparting to it a miraculous power? Surely not. The power of miracles confirms my divine mission; and "the authority on earth to forgive sins,' bears witness to the divinity both of my person and character."

It is very observable, that though the apostles wrought many miracles, and in some cases were authorized to forgive sins; (Matt. xviii. 18;) yet they never did either in the authoritative manner which our Lord used, or in their own name. On the contrary, they always spake and acted in "the name of Jesus of Nazareth," and by his authority. (Acts iii. 6; v. 6, &c.) The objection, therefore, which some have urged against the argument of Christ's divinity from the miracles of the Apostles, rather confirms than weakens it: for he who speaks with authority, and acts in his own name, is evidently more than a mere delegate.

If it be asked why, on this and other occasions, the man that was cured, was commanded to take up his bed and walk? it may be replied, To show the completeness of his cure, that he was not huddled away in obscurity; but was able to walk steadily, and even to carry his bed with him. Perhaps, also, (as Jay suggests) that it might be a perpetual memento of his cure.

The next event recorded by this Evangelist is, the call of Matthew, and the entertainment which he gave on this occasion. His call has been already noticed slightly in our Introduction. We shall only add, that at this time he appears to have been engaged in a very active, and perhaps lucrative situation, at the custom-house, or toll-booth, in Galilee, when he, immediately on receiving this call from the Lord, "left all, and followed him."

It is not necessary to suppose that the entertainment which Matthew (or Levi) made to his friends, was on the same day, or even in the same week, that Jesus called him. Though he gave up immediately his situation, both honour and honesty required that he should make up his accounts with government; and one object of this feast seems to have been, to do good; as he knew of no way in which he could render them so great a benefit, as by introducing them to his great and blessed Master.

The conduct of Jesus, however, in this instance gave great offence to the Pharisees, who always spake of publicans with rancour, or contempt, and on no occasion would associate with them if they could avoid it. They, therefore, attack the disciples with this question, "Why eateth your master with publicans and sinners?" The disciples probably reported the question to their master, and he immediately replied, "The whole need not the physician, but they that are sick: Go ye and learn what that meaneth. (Hosea vi. 6.) I will have mercy and not sacrifice:" that is, God prefers acts of mercy and benevolence to either ritual services or costly sacrifices. "To call sinners to repentance—to heal the wounded soul—is an act of mercy and benevolence, far more acceptable to God than all your parade of heartless sacrifices." "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

On this occasion, some of John Baptist's disciples, whose master Herod had imprisoned, seeing the disciples of Jesus present at this feast, and probably being set on by the Pharisees, inquire of Jesus, "Why do we and the Pharisees fast often, but thy disciples fast not?" This question refers not to any divinely instituted fast of the Mosaic law; but, in the case of the Pharisees, to their fasting twice a week, from a principle of superstition and self-righteousness; and, in the case of John's disciples, as their master had been shut up in prison by Herod, and his life was threatened, it is probable they kept many fasts, as well as offered many prayers on his account. But it was not so with the disciples of Jesus; their Master, the bridegroom of his church, was yet with them; when he should be taken from them, which they are led to expect shortly, then would be their time for fasting and lamenting; and then, indeed, would they be far more severely tried than were now John's disciples. Not only so, but the disciples of Jesus were newly gathered around him; Matthew, in particular, was quite a new disciple; and it would not be wise in a master, to put his young converts to so severe a test as those who had been long attached to him. It would be like putting new wine in old skin bottles, that were like to burst; or sewing a patch of half-finished cloth upon a garment decayed or moth-eaten, than which nothing could be more absurd.

But to return to the feast before us: Bp. Hall remarks, "I do not find where Jesus was bidden to any table and refused. If a Pharisee, if a publican, invited him, he made no scruple to go. . . . . If he sat with sinners, he converted them: if with converts, he confirmed and instructed them; if with the poor

Ver. 10. Many publicans.—This term, anciently, had no relation to the class of persons whom we call publicans, namely, innkeepers and victuallers. 18 ¶ While [n] he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall [o] live.

19 And Jesus arose, and followed him, and so did his disciples.

20 ¶ [p] And, behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his [q] garment:

21 For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole.

22 But Jesus turned him about, and when he saw her, he said, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy [r] faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that [s] hour.

23 ¶ And [t] when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the [u] minstrels and the people making a noise,

24 He said unto them, Give place: for the maid is not [v] dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn.

25 But when the people were put [w] forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose.

26 And [x] the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

27 ¶ And when Jesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying, and saying, Thou son of [y] David, have mercy on us.

28 And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him: and Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord.

29 Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you.

30 And their eyes were opened; and Jesus straitly charged them, saying, See that no man know [z] it.

31 But they, when they were departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country.

32 ¶ As they went out, behold, they brought to him a dumb man [a] possessed with a devil.

33 And when the devil was cast out, the dumb [b] spake: and the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel.

34 But the Pharisees said, He [c] casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.

35 And [d] Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people.

36 ¶ But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they [e] fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep [f] having no shepherd.

37 Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest [g] truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few;

38 Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth [h] labourers into his harvest.

CHAPTER X.

1 Christ sendeth out his twelve apostles, enabling them with power to do miracles, 5 giveth them their charge, teacheth them, 16 comforteth them against persecutions 40 and promiseth a blessing to those that receive them.

AND when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he [a] gave them power [b] against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal he fed them; if with the rich, he made them richer in grace. At whose board did he ever sit, and left not his host a gainer?"

Ver. 18—38. The woman cured of a complaint of twelve years' standing. The ruler's daughter raised. Two blind men and a dumb demoniac cured.—While Jesus was engaged in conversation at the house of Matthew, Jairus, ruler of the synagogue, came and worshipped him. This might, indeed, be nothing more than the usual token of respect to men of rank and consequence; his request, however, shows that he had the highest opinion of Christ's saving power; for though he thought that his daughter was "even now dead," he says, "Come and lay thy hand on her, and she shall live." In regard to faith so eminent, Jesus and three of his disciples immediately depart for the ruler's house. He is stopped by the way, however, for a few moments, by another applicant, whose faith seems to have been even more extraordinary; for she was firmly persuaded, that if she did but touch "the hem (or fringe) of his garment," she should receive a cure; and she thought, perhaps, thereby to save her own delicacy, and avoid the observation of the crowd. Jesus, however, wished to do honour to faith so eminent; and, while she shrank from public notice behind him, he turned round, and in the kindest manner said, "Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole." She accordingly received an immediate and permanent cure. Such is the power and grace of Christ!

Before Jesus and his disciples could arrive at the ruler's house, the fatal event had taken place, and, according to custom, "the minstrels" had been sent for, and the funeral lamentations were begun. Immediately, however, on our Lord's entrance, they were expelled; but not before they had expressed their contempt and scorn for the divine visitant, when he assured them the maiden was not dead, but sleeping; meaning, no doubt, as in the case of Lazarus, that he would raise her from the dead. (See John xi. 11.) He did so, and the fame of this miracle brought others to request the exertion of his saving power.

Among these, two blind men accosted Jesus as "the Son of David," and as he (doubtless to try their faith) did not stop to speak to them by the way they followed him into the house whither he went; and professing their confidence in his healing power, had their eyes opened. But here we may remark, that in this, as in the preceding, and many other instances, he charged them to "let no man know it." The object of this could not be, to make a secret of the miraculous power with which he was endowed, for that was the evidence of his divine character and mission: but in this, as in some other cases, it should seem that the fame of his miracles drew such multitudes around him, as not only to deprive him of opportunities of retirement for the purposes of devotion, but even to interrupt his public preaching. (See Mark i. 32—38.) It may be added, that Jesus never sought popularity for its own sake, and had no desire needlessly to provoke his enemies.

His caution was, however, of no avail. His miracles continued to increase his popularity, and at the same time (such is the depravity of human nature!) to augment the opposition of his enemies. An instance of this nature closes this eventful chapter. Among other objects of benevolence, a deaf and dumb man, whose disorder is attributed to the influence of a demon, received a cure, and all the people marvelled, saying, "It was never so seen in Israel!" But the Pharisees, on the other hand, though they did not deny the fact, attributed it to magic, saying, "He casteth out demons through the prince of the demons;" that is, Satan. This charge we shall find repeated farther on; and as our Lord there condescends to refute it, we shall thither defer our remarks upon it. (See on chap. xii. 24, &c.)

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—23. Jesus chooses twelve Apostles, and gives them their commission.—"The distinguishing feature of the Christian church, (says Ward,) as it came from the forming hand of its founder, was unquestionably missionary." Jesus was the sent of the Father; and he sent forth Apostles, or Missionaries, to evangelize Judea. These primitive missionaries were endowed with the power of working miracles,

Ver. 18. A certain ruler—Namely, "of the Synagogue," Luke viii. 50. This reconciles this account with that of Mark and Luke.—Even now dead.—Campbell, "Is by this time dead;" i. e. he left her apparently at the last gasp, and concluded she must, by this time, have departed.

Ver. 20. Hem (Doddridge and Campbell, "fringe") of his garment—Which every Jew was commanded by the law to wear.

Ver. 23. Minstrels.—Gr. "Flute-players," or pipers, who commenced the lament, and were followed by the professional mourning women, and as appears in the present instance, by all present. The introduction of instruments on this occasion is thought to have been, at this period, a novel practice, borrowed from the heathen.

Ver. 27. Thou Son of David.—By this it is evident that these men took Jesus to be the Messiah.

Ver. 32. With a devil.—Doddridge, "a demon." So ver. 33, 34. It is evident from this expression, that the Pharisees, by demons, did not mean the souls of departed heroes, (as did the Greek, and other Gentile nations,) but the apostate spirits who sided with Satan in his apostacy.

Ver. 33. The dumb spake.—[It seems evident that this man was dumb, not from any natural defect, but from the power of an evil spirit; for when the evil spirit was expelled, he was immediately capable of speaking. The spectators were justly surprised at these multiplied and astonishing miracles; for in one afternoon our Lord had raised the daughter of Jairus from the dead, healed a woman with an issue of blood, restored two blind men to sight, and cured this dumb demoniac; and all this in Capernaum, one of the places which the Saviour so fearfully denounced for continuing impenitent sinners after beholding his miracles.]—Bagster.

Ver. 37. The harvest . . . is plenteous.—"Five hundred millions of souls," exclaims a missionary, "are represented as being unenlightened! I cannot, if I would, give up the idea of being a missionary, while I reflect upon this vast number of my fellow-sinners, who are perishing for lack of knowledge. Five hundred millions! intrudes itself upon my mind wherever I go, and however I am employed. When I go to bed, it is the last thing that recurs to my memory; if I awake in the night, it is to meditate on it alone; and in the morning, it is generally the first thing that occupies my thoughts."

all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease.

2 Now the names [c] of the twelve apostles are these; The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother;

3 Philip, and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alpheus, and Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddeus;

4 Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

5 ¶ These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans [d] enter ye not:

6 But go [e] rather to the lost [f] sheep of the house of Israel.

7 And as ye go, preach, saying, [g] The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: [h] freely ye have received, freely give.

9 [i] Provide [j] neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses,

10 Nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet [k] staves: for [l] the workman is worthy of his meat.

11 And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence.

12 And when ye come into a house, salute it.

13 And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return [m] to you.

14 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake [n] off the dust of your feet.

15 Verily I say unto you, It [o] shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

16 ¶ Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore [p] wise as serpents, and [q] harmless [r] as doves.

17 But beware [s] of men: for [t] they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge [u] you in their synagogues;

18 And [v] ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles.

19 But [w] when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak.

20 For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.

21 And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children shall rise up against their parents and cause them to be put to death.

22 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but [x] he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

23 But when they persecute you in this city, flee [y] ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not [z] have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come.

24 The [a] disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord.

25 It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If [b] they have called the master of the house [c] Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?

26 Fear them not therefore: for [d] there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known.

and of healing all manner of diseases; but the gift of tongues appears to have been reserved for the day of Pentecost. At first, their message was "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" only; they were not allowed to go unto either the Gentiles or the Samaritans.

They were also not suffered to make any provision for their journey; nor, except in necessary food and clothing, to receive any reward: "Freely ye have received; freely give." One part of their directions is peculiar: "Into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy, and there abide till ye go thence." The worthiness here referred to, is evidently that of character; they were to inquire for persons of repute for piety, benevolence, and hospitality, and then receive their offered kindness; not wandering from house to house, with idle curiosity, but saluting them with words of peace, and imploring on them all its blessings. But, if any refused to admit them, all the resentment they were allowed to show, was the shaking the dust from off their feet; an awful witness against them in the day of judgment.

Our Lord now warns his disciples of the treatment they must expect to meet with from the world, and how to comport themselves under it. They were "as sheep among wolves," and must expect to be treated with injury and outrage. They were allowed, however, to exercise prudence, to avoid the snares laid for them by their enemies, but they must not retaliate the injuries received. They may be "wise as serpents," but they must also be "harmless as doves." "Innocence," or moral purity of conduct, united with wisdom and prudence, does honour to the Christian name.

But in this address of our Lord to his disciples, he refers particularly to the case of persecution, of which he candidly warns them; and, instead of promising them exemption, assures them of direction and support. They shall be hated, accused, betrayed, martyred, "but he that endureth to the end shall be saved." In the mean time, they are not to provoke persecution; but rather to avoid it, when it can be done without injury to their Master's cause. Yet when they fly, it must not be to seek inglorious ease, but rather to spread the news of salvation from place to place; for such was the extent of their itinerating labours, that they would scarcely be able to visit every part of Judea before the Son of man should come, and visit the nation with the most awful judgments.

Ver. 24—42. Encouragement under persecution.—In the former part of this chapter, our Lord warns his disciples to expect persecution; here he offers several reasons to animate and support them under it. 1. "The disciple is not above his master:" it is surely enough if he fare as well. If they call the master Beelzebub, is it wonderful if they cast the same reproach upon his followers? If he who was without fault, and "in whose mouth was no guile," be subjected, not only to reproach, but pains and death also, surely it is not to be wondered that sinful men are called to drink the same cup of anguish. 2. Remember, that the utmost which men can do, affects the body only; they cannot reach the soul; to risk, therefore, the divine displeasure, in order to escape the anger of men, is folly in the extreme. 3. We are all and always under the immediate eye and care of God,

> "Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
> A monarch perish, or a sparrow fall." - Pope.

Even "the hairs of our head are all numbered" by that wisdom which cannot possibly overlook an atom in creation. 4. All our actions must be brought into judgment before God. If we deny Christ before men, and repent not, most assuredly will he deny us before his heavenly Father. 5. The nature of the gospel dispensation implies the necessity of persecution: It must needs be that offences come. (Matt. xviii. 7.) The CHAP. X. Ver. 2. Twelve apostles.—The term Apostle literally means, a person sent upon some errand, and is in its derivation equal to Missionary: the Apostles, however, if Missionaries, were in the first instance, Home-missionaries. But the sacred writers usually confine the term to the twelve, and to St. Paul. They are probably coupled together as Christ sent them forth. Mark tells us that the Lord sent them forth by two and two.——Peter—commonly called Simon Peter.——James.—This name in Greek is Jacob, the same as that of the Patriarch.

Ver 3. Lebbeus—Also called "Jude," and author of the Epistle.

Ver. 7. As ye go, preach.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Proclaim." It is the office of a herald that is here alluded to.

Ver. 8. Raise the dead.—There is no instance on record of the Apostles raising any dead person till after the day of Pentecost.

Ver. 9. In your purses.—Gr. zones, or girdles, the folds of which usually formed their purses.

Ver. 10. Neither two coats, &c.—Perhaps the most correct English version would be, "No change of coats, or shoes, or staves;" that is, nothing unnecessary for their journey, which was to be short, and in haste. Compare Ex. xii. 11.——Worthy of his meat.—Campbell, "Of his maintenance."

Ver. 12. Salute it.—The usual salutation was a salam: i. e. "peace be unto this house!" Such is the custom in the East to this day.

Ver. 18. Against them.—Hammond and Doddridge, "To them."

Ver. 23. Son of man be come.—[This coming of the Son of man, or the Messiah, seems to refer to the subversion of the Jewish state by the Romans.]—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Beelzebub—(Or Baalzebub) primarily the god-fly worshipped at Ekron, 2 Ki. i. 2, but afterwards applied to Satan by the Jews; and applied by Jews also to the Son of God himself. See ch. xii. 24.

Ver. 27. In darkness—i. e. privately:——in light—i. e. publicly. "In open day," as we say.

n light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops.

28 And [e] fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

29 Are not two sparrows sold for a [f] farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father.

30 But [g] the very hairs of your head are all numbered.

31 Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.

32 Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him [h] will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.

33 But [i] whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven.

34 Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: [j] I came not to send peace, but a sword.

35 For I am come to set a man at variance [k] against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.

36 And [l] a man's foes shall be they of his own household.

37 He [m] that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me.

38 And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

CHAPTER XI.

2 John sendeth his disciples to Christ. 7 Christ's testimony concerning John. 18 The opinion of the people, both concerning John and Christ. 20 Christ upbraideth the unthankfulness and unrepentance of Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum: 25 and praising his Father's wisdom in revealing the gospel to the simple, 28 he calleth to him all such as feel the burden of their sins.

AND it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.

2 ¶ Now [q] when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples,

3 And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?

4 Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see:

5 The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them.

very proclamation of mercy to mankind, enkindles all the evil passions of wicked men and "unclean spirits." When Jesus holds out the sceptre of mercy, Satan draws the sword of persecution; and it is in vain to hope, by trimming and prevarication, to avoid it: for, 6. He that thus attempts to preserve his life, risks the salvation of his soul; while, on the other hand, whosoever loses his life in this world for Christ's sake, shall surely find it in the world to come. 7. Persecution, in one form or other, is necessary to the completion of the Christian character: for he that "doth not take up his cross and follow me, (says the Saviour,) is not worthy of me," or fit to be ranked among my disciples. Lastly, whatever is done to Christ's disciples in his name, is done to himself, and will as such be recompensed at the last great day, when "every man shall be rewarded according to his works;" and when "a cup of cold water," trifling as the boon may seem to us, if given in Christian charity, shall by no means be forgotten.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—19. John sends two disciples to visit Jesus, who bears testimony concerning John.—When the Baptist heard, in prison, the miraculous works of Jesus, he deputed two of his disciples to visit him, and to inquire into his character and mission; not for his own satisfaction, for he had been certified by a voice from heaven that Jesus was indeed the Son of God; but for theirs, that they also might be satisfied. Instead of returning to John a verbal answer, Jesus desires them simply to relate what they saw, and to take John's opinion as to the proper inference they should draw. When, however, John's disciples had returned back to their master, Jesus began to speak to the Jews of his extraordinary character: "What went ye into the wilderness to see?" Was it a reed shaken by the wind? Had that been his character, he would not have been now confined; for it was on account of his fidelity and firmness that Herod had shut him up in prison. Was it to see a man of delicate habits, and delicately clothed? Such they might look for in the palace of Herod. But what was John? He was a prophet, and more than a prophet; for the prophets bare witness to Jesus only at a distance; he pointed to him in person—"Behold the Lamb of God." (John i. 36.) Yet, nevertheless, "He that is least in the kingdom of heaven;" that is, the humblest of Christ's servants, or apostles, is declared greater than the Baptist, as being the minister of a superior dispensation, and more enlightened in the mysteries of divine truth.

Our Lord then declares unequivocally, that John was the prophet predicted by Malachi, (ch. iv. 2,) in the name of Elias, (or Elijah,) as coming "in the spirit and power" of that prophet. And certain it is, that the energy of his preaching had given such an impetus to his hearers, that they rushed for a time to his baptism, as if they were determined to take the kingdom of heaven by storm. At the same time he reproves the Jews for their fickle and inconsistent conduct; and compares them to children playing in the market-place; and continually complaining of one another: for John came "neither eating nor drinking;" that is, leading a most solitary and abstemious life, and they said he had a demon. Jesus, on the contrary, came "eating and drinking;" that is, mixing in every class of society, that he might benefit all; and they said, behold "a glutton and a wine-bibber! a friend of publicans and sinners!" But "wisdom is justified of her children; that is, those who are divinely instructed, will see, or at least admit.

Ver. 28. Soul and body in hell.—Does hell, in this passage, mean only the valley of Hinnom, a place near Jerusalem, rendered odious by its having been a scene of cruelty and pollution, and in which worms were found, and a fire was kept up to consume the carcasses and offals of various kinds that were thrown into it? The body, it is granted, might be destroyed in this place; but our Saviour speaks of the soul being destroyed in Gehenna. Does it not then designate a place far more terrible than the valley of Hinnom? The worms in this valley died, and the fire was often quenched; and while it burned, it consumed nothing more than the body. But the Gehenna with which sinners are threatened, is a flame that seizes the soul, and is never quenched. Of this place of endless wrath, the valley of Hinnom, with its past idolatries and cruelties, with its blood and pollution, with its devouring worms and consuming fires, was, no doubt, the most striking image that could be suggested to the mind of a Jew.

Ver. 31. Than many sparrows.—The Rev. Mr. Nosworthy, who died in 1677, had, from the persecuting spirit of the times, been imprisoned at Winchester, where he met with much cruel usage. After his release, he was several times reduced to great straits. Once, when he and his family had breakfasted, and had nothing left for another meal, his wife, lamenting her condition, exclaimed, "What shall I do with my poor children?" He persuaded her to walk abroad with him, and seeing a little bird, he said, "Take notice how that little bird sits and chirps, though we cannot tell whether it has been at breakfast; and if it has, it knows not whither to go for a dinner. Therefore be of good cheer, and do not distrust the providence of God; for are we not better than many sparrows?" Before dinner time they had plenty of provisions brought them. Thus was the promise fulfilled, "They who trust in the Lord shall not want any good thing."

Ver. 34. Peace on earth.—Doddridge, "On the land," namely, of Judea; and certainly the words apply in a peculiar manner to that country, where the gospel met, in the first instance, with the most inveterate opposition from those for whose salvation it was peculiarly designed. It is the gospe of peace; but men war against it. [An energetic mode, as Dr. Campbell remarks, of expressing the certainty of a foreseen consequence of any measure, as if it were the purpose for which the measure was adopted. Our Lord here refers to their own traditions: "A little before the coming of the Messiah, the son shall insult the father, the daughter rebel against her mother, the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law, and each man shall have his own household for his enemies." Again, "In the age in which the Messiah shall come, the young men shall turn the elders into ridicule, the elders shall rise up against the youth," &c. All these things took place after the rejection of Christ, as may be seen in the terrible account which Josephus gives of these times.]—Bagster

Ver. 36. They of his own household.—The gospel, by reason of men's opposition to it, will cause much variance, even between nearest relatives.

Ver. 38. That taketh not his cross.—Alluding to criminals being compelled to bear their own cross, as was our Saviour. Jn. xix. 17.

Ver. 41. A prophet—That is, a messenger from God, whether under the Old Testament or the New.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 2. John had heard.—John was at this time in prison, and soon after suffered for the freedom and fidelity with which he reproved Herod.

Ver. 3. He that should come—Namely, the Messiah. See chap. iii. 11.

Ver. 5. The poor have the gospel preached to them.—A circumstance little less singular than the miracles which Jesus wrought; for neither Rabbins nor philosophers ever condescended to teach the lower classes.

A. M. 4031.
A. D. 27.

6 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended [b] in me.

7 ¶ And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What [c] went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the [d] wind?

8 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses.

9 But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet.

10 For this is he, of whom it is [e] written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

11 Verily I say unto you, Among [f] them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding, [g] he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.

12 And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven [h] suffereth violence, and the violent [i] take it by force.

13 For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John.

14 And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which [j] was for to come.

15 He [k] that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

16 ¶ But [l] whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17 And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented.

18 For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, [m] He hath a devil.

19 The Son of man came eating [n] and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans [o] and sinners. But [p] wisdom is justified of her children.

20 ¶ Then [q] began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not:

21 Wo unto thee, Chorazin! wo unto thee, [r] Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.

22 But I say unto you, It [s] shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.

23 And thou, Capernaum, which [t] art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

24 But I say unto you, That [u] it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

25 ¶ At [v] that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto [w] babes.

26 Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight.

27 All [x] things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither [y] knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

28 ¶ Come unto me, all ye that labour [z] and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

29 Take my yoke upon you, and learn [a] of me; for I am meek and lowly [b] in heart: and [c] ye shall find rest unto your souls.

30 For my yoke is [d] easy, and my burden is light.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Christ reproveth the blindness of the Pharisees concerning the breach of the sabbath, 3 by scriptures, 9 by reason, 13 and by a miracle. 22 He healeth the man possessed that was blind and dumb. 31 Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall never be forgiven. 36 Account shall be made of the words. 38 He reproveth the unfaithful, who seek after a sign: 49 and showeth who is his brother, sister, and mother.

AT that time [a] Jesus went on the sabbath day through the corn; and his disciples were a hungered, and began to [b] pluck the ears of corn, and to eat.

2 But when the Pharisees saw it, they said the propriety of all God's dispensations:—"He hath done all things well."

Ver. 20—30. Jesus upbraids the Galileans for their inattention to his ministry; offers thanksgivings to God his heavenly Father, and encourages his own disciples.—Our Lord, reminding the inhabitants of those cities of Galilee, in which most of his miracles had been wrought, of their folly and ingratitude, in not attending to his ministry, and receiving his word, warns them of the awful consequences of their neglect, as aggravating their guilt beyond that of the ancient cities here named, which had, for their flagitious crimes, been totally destroyed.

Our Lord then addresses his heavenly Father in a strain of the most fervent devotion; particularly thanking him for his gracious condescension, in revealing the mysteries of his gospel to the most simple of mankind; while, at the same time, they were concealed from "the wise and prudent;" that is, the scribes and lawyers among the Jews, and the philosophers among the Gentiles. These, being misguided by the pride of their own hearts, misled their disciples; and, in proportion to their influence, the common people.

To these burdened and misguided people, the last verses of the chapter appear to us particularly addressed. The Jews were burdened, not only with a heavy law of rites and ceremonies, but still more grievously with traditions of the elders, which the scribes and lawyers bound upon their shoulders, though they themselves refused to "move them with one of their fingers." (Matt. xxiii. 4.)

The Gentiles were no less oppressed by their priests and philosophers, with idolatrous and superstitious ceremonies, with vain and idle theories respecting "the chief good" of man; respecting which, their notions were wonderfully numerous and contradictory.

Characters of the like description may be found in all ages, and among all nations and classes of mankind. All labour in the search after happiness; but they labour in vain, not seeking it in the right direction.

They vainly seek in the creature—in weak and sinful creatures—what only can be found in the Creator, in the Redeemer of mankind. He is the fountain from whom alone flow all the streams of wisdom and blessedness. His service is perfect freedom; the yoke of his religion alone confers peace and happiness.

"Religion's yoke is soft and light,
And all her paths are peace:
Ambition, pride, revenge, depart,
And folly flies her chastening rod;
She makes the humble, contrite heart,
A temple of the living God."—Montgomery.

Ver. 6. Offended in me.—Doddridge, "Scandalized (or stumbled) at me." The same Messiah who was promised as the foundation stone of his church, was also predicted as a stumbling-stone to those who rejected him through unbelief. See ch. xxi. 44.

Ver. 8. A man clothed in soft raiment.—"An effeminate courtier, accustomed to fawning and flattery. You may expect to find such persons in palaces, not in a wilderness."—Wesley.

Ver. 15. He that hath ears, &c.—That is, "Let those who are disposed to learn, attend." See Deut. xxix. 4. Ezek. xii. 2.

Ver. 17. We have mourned.—Campbell, "Sung mournful songs." Compare ch. ix. 23, and note.

Ver. 20. He began to upbraid.—This is the first time he had done so. At first they received him joyfully, but after a while, not only became inattentive, but persecuted him.

Ver. 23. Exalted unto heaven—That is, very highly favoured.—Doron to hell.—This, in opposition to the preceding phrase, means, to the most degrading situation.

Ver. 25. Jesus answered.—This expression, in Scripture, does not always imply a previous question. Doddridge, in this place renders it, "Took occasion to say," &c.—I thank thee.—Campbell, "I adore thee;" i. e. "Every thing in which I discover thy will, I receive, not with acquiescence only, but with veneration."—Thou hast hid.—Campbell, "That having hidden."—From the wise and prudent.—Campbell, "From sages and the learned."—Unto babes.—Doddridge, "Infants," i. e. in knowledge.

Ver. 27. All things are delivered unto me—That is, all things relative to Christ's mediatorial kingdom, which, at its completion, shall be delivered back unto the Father, 1 Cor. xv. 25—28. Among the all things here mentioned, must particularly be included, the revelation of the Father's will to man, which to the Son only is fully and confidentially intrusted.—No man knoweth.—Doddridge, "Fully knoweth." J. P. Smith says, "The word used by Matthew, signifies such knowledge as is peculiarly intimate and accurate, full and perfect."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. At that time.—See Luke, chap. vi. 1.—Plucked the ears of corn—Sufficient for their present necessity; dried corn was commonly eaten among the Jews.

3 But he said unto them, Have ye not read what David did, [d] when he was a hungered, and they that were with him;

4 How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the [e] shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only [f] for the priests?

5 Or have ye not read in the [g] law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple [h] profane the sabbath, and are blameless?

6 But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater [i] than the temple.

7 But if ye had known what this meaneth, [j] I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless.

8 For the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath day.

9 ¶ And [k] when he was departed thence, he went into their synagogue:

10 And, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked him, saying, Is [l] it lawful to heal on the sabbath days? that they might accuse him.

11 And he said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and [m] if it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out?

12 How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath days.

13 Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

14 ¶ Then the Pharisees went out, and held [n] a council against him, how they might destroy him.

15 But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all;

16 And charged them that they should not make him known:

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the [o] prophet, saying,

18 Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased: I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles.

19 He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets.

20 A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.

them.—This chapter affords an instance of the strictness and malevolence with which the Pharisees watched Jesus and his disciples; even passing in their way from place to place, they were not exempt from the watchful eyes of these insidious enemies. It is probable, that the corn here referred to was barley, which, in that country, was generally ripe at, or before, the Passover, a sheaf of new barley being always offered on the close of this festival.

At this time, walking through the ripe but unreaped fields, the disciples, being hungry, plucked some of the ears, and rubbing them in their hands, ate the grain. Seeing the disciples do this, the Pharisees ran directly to their master, Jesus, and informed against them as sabbath-breakers; but he, knowing their hypocrisy, reproved them, and justified his disciples, upon the principle of necessity, as in the instance of David, who, in case of urgent hunger, ate the shew-bread; and as to the pretence of its being a breach of the sabbath to pluck and bruise the ears of corn, he reminds them, that the priests themselves far more profaned the sabbath every week, by the services which they performed in the temple; but which were justified by the circumstance, that they were thus engaged in the service of the temple; so his disciples, being a hungered, were no less justified in plucking the ears of corn upon the sabbath, especially as they were employed in the service of "one greater than the temple."

Soon after this, they formed a similar charge against Jesus himself. A man with a withered hand applying to him for relief, they presume to ask him, "Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath day?" that they might ensnare him; but he answered that question by another. Supposing either of them to have a sheep fallen into a pit on that day, whether they would not release it? Not being able to return an answer that would not condemn themselves, they remained silent, and Jesus performed the cure; while they, alike aggravated and embarrassed, went out, and held a council against him, to destroy him.

The most important inquiry now before us, relates to the doctrine of the sabbath, on which our Lord lays it down as a first principle, that "it is lawful to do good upon the sabbath day;" which has been well explained by our old divines to mean, that works of mercy and necessity are at all times lawful. The first instance in illustration of this doctrine we have already given in the case of the disciples, who, on the sabbath, plucked and ate the ears of corn. On this we may remark, 1. That this was not done wantonly, but in a case of hunger, and for a supply of their daily bread. 2. The disciples took their food in the simplest manner, and without any costly preparation. This, therefore, will not sanction the luxurious meals in which many professors indulge on that sacred day, whereby they not only neglect its sacred duties themselves; but, in many cases, wholly prevent their servants from attending public worship; and even from reading the word of God at home.

The second instance is a case of mercy; Jesus healed on the sabbath day a man with a withered hand, an object, doubtless, of great commiseration; and his example will justify the practice of the healing art on this day in all cases of importance; but it will not justify medical men in wholly abstaining from public worship; nor, 2ndly, the idle excuse of those who absent themselves from the house of God on every trifling indisposition; nor, 3dly, those that make this their constant time for taking medicine, that they may not be hindered by it on the other days of the week.

Thirdly, Our Lord's allusion to the case of the priests under the law, who on this day offered sacrifices, and performed other laborious duties which Moses had enjoined upon them, shows that a general command may admit of exceptions, enjoined by the same authority: the general command is, to abstain from labour on God's holy day; the exception was, the performance of certain services in the tabernacle, or temple, which himself had commanded. A parallel case exists under the Christian dispensation. The Lord's day takes place of the Christian sabbath; and the duties of the Christian minister, like those of the Jewish priest, relate to the public worship of the Almighty; and, so far as his service requires it, they are justified in travelling from place to place, which would be otherwise inconsistent with the morality of the fourth commandment. But this will no farther justify such travelling than as it may be necessary to the performance of their ministerial duties, in preaching the gospel, in visiting the sick, or in teaching the poor. The Son of man, who is Lord of the sabbath, sanctions every work necessary to the fulfilment of our Christian duties, but nothing inconsistent with them.

Many of these observations will equally apply to the case of those very useful and benevolent classes of Christians, Sunday-school teachers, and visiters of the sick poor, who seem to bear the same relation to ministers of the gospel, as did the Levites to the Jewish priests. The duties of the former are, indeed, commonly confined to this day, and, in great measure, the latter; since their labours are gratuitous, and they are generally engaged in secular occupations throughout the week.

Prolix as this section of our exposition may be thought, we cannot conclude it without an observation on the fine passage quoted by St. Matthew from Esaias, (or Isaiah,) chap. xlii. 1—4. The judgment Messiah was to "send forth" to the nations, (or Gentiles,) is very properly explained by Bp. Lowth of "the institution of the gospel;" but we would particularly notice the intimations of Messiah's tenderness and gentleness, in not breaking "the bruised reed," the frailest of all objects;

Ver 2. Behold, thy disciples.—[The law expressly allowed persons to pluck ears of corn in passing through a field, (De xxiii. 25.) and, as the malignity of the Pharisees could find no sufficient ground for censuring the thing itself, they cavilled at the disciples' plucking and rubbing out the grain in their hands on the sabbath day, considering that as servile work, and in some respects equivalent to reaping and threshing.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. In the house of God—That is, the tabernacle at Nob.

Ver. 5. On the sabbath day . . . . profane the sabbath—[That is, put it to a common use, by killing and offering sacrifices, as well as by other kinds of manual labour necessary in performing the service of God as on common days.]—B.

Ver. 6. One greater than the temple.—Doddridge and Campbell, on the authority of many MSS. and some ancient expositors, read, "Something greater," which Doddridge explains of our Lord's body. See John ii. 19.

Ver. 7. I will have mercy.—[That is, I desire, or require mercy, or acts of humanity, rather than sacrifice.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. What man.—[The Jews held that such things were lawful on the sabbath day, and our Saviour very properly appealed to their conscience in vindication of his intention to heal the distressed man.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Judgment to the Gentiles—That is, the Gospel; "the great law (of rule) of religion, righteousness, and truth." Doddridge.—[This prophecy is expressly referred to the Messiah by the Targumist, who renders, "Behold my servant the Messiah;" and it was amply fulfilled in the gentle, lowly, condescending, and beneficent nature of Christ's miracles and personal ministry; his perseverance in the midst of opposition, without engaging in contentious disputation; and his kind and tender dealing with weak and tempted believers.]—B

Ver. 20. Smoking flax, &c.—i. e. the wick whose flame has expired, but which still burns faintly, he will not entirely extinguish. The sense is, that the Messiah will impose upon his people, borne down with oppression and suffering, nothing more than they can bear. He will not add to their afflictions. The passage is adduced by Matthew, as exhibiting the meek and retiring character of 21 And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

22 ¶ Then [p] was brought unto him one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb: and he healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw.

23 And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the son of David?

24 ¶ But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by [q] Beelzebub the prince of the devils.

25 And Jesus knew their [r] thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand:

26 And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?

27 And if I by Beelzebub [s] cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges.

28 But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom [t] of God is come unto you.

29 Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil [u] his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house.

nor extinguishing "the smoking flax," when ready to expire: that is, he will cherish the smallest spark of piety; he will preserve the humblest confidence in his name unbroken.

Ver. 22–37. Jesus justifies himself from the accusation of the Pharisees, and charges them with blasphemy.—It is well known that the Jews expected their Messiah to work miracles, as had been predicted by the prophets; when, therefore, they saw the miracles of Jesus, they very naturally concluded that he must be the "Son of David;" that is, the Messiah. The Scribes and Pharisees, however, being predetermined to receive none but a temporal Messiah, would neither listen to his doctrine, nor regard his miracles. As to his casting out demons, they could not, indeed, deny the facts; but they were so perverse as to attribute them to a diabolical power, and to pretend he cast out demons by being himself in league with Beelzebub, the prince of demons.

In reply to this, Jesus appeals to themselves on two points. 1. "Every kingdom divided against itself, cannot stand." Now if I (said he) by Beelzebub cast out demons, who are the subjects of Satan, then is Satan (or Beelzebub) divided against himself, and labouring to overthrow his own power: a conduct highly inconsistent with the allowed cunning of the old serpent. 2. Our Lord justifies himself by an appeal to the Pharisees on the conduct of their own children, who frequently pretended to cast out devils. We need not here inquire into the truth of their pretensions, to which we may advert hereafter: it is certain that they made such pretensions, and it became them, in this instance, to prove that they acted by a superior power, before they brought this charge against him; but they discovered, in both these respects, the grossest inconsistency.

But this was the smallest part of their crime: they are also charged with "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost," in attributing to Satan works so evidently wrought by that Holy Spirit, as were the benevolent miracles of our Saviour: and he plainly tells them, that although all their abuse and blasphemy against himself was pardonable upon their repentance; yet could he give them no encouragement to expect forgiveness for an offence so gross as this, arising from the malignity of their hearts, and committed against the evidence both of their reason and their senses.

The brevity we are obliged to study, will not allow us to go fully into the several passages where this sin is treated of: more may be added hereafter; at present we shall only remark, 1. That this sin is charged only upon the Scribes and Pharisees, the most enlightened classes of the Jews, many of whom, we have reason to believe, were in their own minds satisfied of the truth of Christ's miracles, and of the purity of his moral character; but their pride and malice would not allow them to acknowledge a Saviour in form and appearance so humble and unpretending; and who, indeed, was firmly opposed to all their plans of aggrandizement and worldly power. 2. To prevent any serious and distressed mind from applying this terrible sentence against themselves, we remark, it is evident that this dreadful sin could never be committed by any person alarmed for fear of once having committed it. Great and awful was the sin of crucifying the Son of God; but the multitude were ignorant, and actuated by these blaspheming Pharisees. Jesus therefore prayed for them, and many, doubtless, were forgiven on the day of Pentecost, and enrolled among the first converts of the Jewish church. Terrible was the crime of persecuting Stephen, and the other disciples of Jesus; but one of the bitterest of their persecutors, the chief of these sinners, was not only converted and forgiven, but became himself equal to "the chiefest of the Apostles." (See 2 Cor. xi. 5.) No man's sins are unpardonable, who repents and is penitent on their account.

Another passage, which has much distressed many persons, occurs in the close of this section: "For every IDLE word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." We are far from wishing to lower the standard of Christian morals; we have, however, no hesitation in saying, that "every idle word," does not here mean every unnecessary word; for it requires a high degree of lite-the Saviour. Rob. Wahl.—Till he send forth judgment unto victory.—Isaiah says, "unto truth;" that is, "till he make the cause of righteousness and truth completely victorious, through the world."

Ver. 22. With a devil.—Greek, "Demon." So the plurals in the following verses should be rendered "demons."

Ver. 26. Satan.—Undoubtedly the same as Beelzebub, the prince of demons, ver. 24. Comp. Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2. The demons here referred to, are evidently "the angels of Satan," spoken of Matt. xxv. 41. Rev. xii. 9, just quoted. By demons, the heathens understood the spirits of deceased heroes, &c., and hence those possessed by them, were supposed to be possessed of the same talents or virtues; but the word is never used in this sense in the New Testament; but only for the angels or agents of Satan; hence for Satan to cast out demons would be, as our Lord argues, to fight against himself.

We have stated our full persuasion, that the same agency of demons still takes place in many cases of lunacy, and other diseases; since writing which, the Editor has had the satisfaction to find, that the same opinion was adopted by Joseph Mede, as appears by the following extract from the late Granville Sharp. "It is plain (says Mr. S.) that Mede did not believe the demoniacs to be mere madmen, according to our modern ideas of madness; and his discourse plainly tends to a very different purpose; viz. to show that some madmen, even at this day, are really demoniacs, actuated by evil spirits, as much as those mentioned in Scripture! How far this opinion may be true, with respect to some modern madmen, (adds Mr. S.) I am not able to determine: but that the demoniacs mentioned in Scripture were really possessed by evil spirits, . . . I cannot possibly doubt, notwithstanding the Gentile opinion of demons may have been very different." (Gran. Sharpe's case of Saul.) The late Mr. Andrew Baxter, in his Essay on Dreaming, evidently adopted the same hypothesis; for, speaking of impressions made upon the brain in sleep, he adds, "If the same vibrations are more powerfully excited in the optic nerves, while the eyes are open, than those excited by external objects then acting, the man pursuing with the drawn sword (as in a supposed dream) will appear, even though the eyes be open. And thus . . . we see that dreaming may degenerate into possession; and that the cause and nature of both are the same, differing only in degree." This writer was equally admired and eulogized by Bp. Warburton and Mr Toplady! The latter, at least, adopted the same hypothesis.

Ver. 27. By whom do your children cast them out?—That some Jews practised exorcism, and pretended (at least) to cast out demons, appears from Mark ix. 38. Luke ix. 49. Acts xix. 13. See our note on the last cited text.

Ver. 29. Spoil.—Hammond and Doddridge, "Plunder."

Ver. 30. He that gathereth not with me, in the Gospel harvest, may be considered as an enemy, who scatters abroad the grain; or, without metaphor, he that is not my friend, is my enemy.

Ver. 31. Shall be forgiven.—That is, are pardonable.—[Blasphemy, when applied to men, denotes injurious speaking, or calumny, and when used in reference to God, signifies speaking impiously of his nature, attributes, and works.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Holy Ghost.—The Holy Ghost is that divine subsistence, which is most intimately united with God the Father and Son. He is distinguished from the Father and Son in certain respects, but possesses the same nature and attributes which are ascribed to God the Father and Son.—Neither in this world; neither (nor) in the world to come—That is, shall never be forgiven. Mark iii. 29. Dr. Whitby remarks, that there are several passages in the Rabbins which show this to have been a proverbial expression, implying no forgiveness. There is, therefore, no ground to infer from hence the purgatory of the church of Rome.

Ver. 33. Either make the tree good, &c.—Grotius understands this, as if our Lord had said, "Since you cannot but allow that my life, and the tendency of my doctrine, are (morally) good, he not so inconsistent as to suppose I am a confederate with Beelzebub!" So Boothroyd.

Ver. 36. Idle word.—[A word that produces no good effect, and is not calculated to produce any. "Discourse," says Dr. Doddridge, "tending to innocent mirth, to exhilarate the spirits, is not idle discourse: as the time spent in necessary recreation is not idle time."]—Bagster.

37 For by thy words [a] thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

38 ¶ Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign [e] from thee.

39 But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous [f] generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas:

40 For [g] as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly: so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

41 The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn [h] it: because they repented at [i] the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

42 The [j] queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for she [k] came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

43 When [l] the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he [m] walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none.

44 Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished.

45 Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse [n] than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

46 ¶ While he yet talked to the people, behold, his [o] mother and his [p] brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him.

47 Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee.

48 But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?

49 And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren!

50 For whosoever shall do the will [q] of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

rary skill and practice to avoid these, even in writing: nor, secondly, every ebullition of cheerfulness or pleasantry; for "pleasant words are as the honeycomb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones." (Proverbs xvi. 24.) But it does include, 1. False or lying words, which, in conformity to the Hebrew idiom, may be called idle, or vain, as having no foundation in truth. 2. Profane, abusive, and injurious words, though idly, thoughtlessly, or even sportively applied. 3. Foolish and indecorous jesting; and, in fact, all sinful words, are liable to be called into judgment; but it should be remembered, that of these words it is not said, that they never shall be forgiven; for though blasphemous, and spoken even against Christ himself, when not marked with the black character of the sin against the Holy Ghost, they are not excluded from the divine mercy.

Ver. 38—50. The Scribes and Pharisees demand a sign from heaven, but are refused and reproved.—In demanding "a sign," or miracle, which in another evangelist is called "a sign from heaven," these men had probably in their recollection the sign given to John Baptist on the bank of Jordan, to which he bare witness on a former occasion, (John i. 31—34,) and of which they now seem to require a repetition. Considering that, previously to this, they had witnessed many miracles wrought by Jesus on the sick, the lame, the blind, and those possessed by demons, this appears a most unreasonable request, and is, therefore, very properly refused; and they are called, in the language of Isaiah, (chap. lvii. 3,) "an evil and adulterous generation;" that is, as Doddridge explains it, "a spurious brood," grossly "degenerated from the piety of their ancestors;" and from "a chosen generation," become "a generation (or brood) of vipers," as in verse 34.

A sign, however, they shall have, analogous to that of the prophet Jonas; for, as he was in the whale's belly three days, or rather, part of "three days and nights," which was a phrase used by the Hebrews, as analogous to our day of 24 hours, (see expos. Jonah ch. i.) so should the Son of man remain for the like period in the bowels of the earth; his resurrection from which would be a sign more decisive in its nature, and more influential in its consequences, than any sign which heaven had hitherto displayed.

What follows, relative to unclean spirits, connects immediately with our Lord's preceding discourse, in answer to the charge of his casting out demons by a diabolical power; and it appears to us to relate particularly to the exorcisms of the Jews themselves, in which the unclean spirit might retire for a time, (perhaps from a Satanic policy,) and afterwards return with sevenfold power and malignity. These restless spirits were supposed to return with fresh ardour to their former residence, from which for a time they had been expelled. But there is no instance, either expressed or implied, of any relapse occurring to persons who had been the subjects of our Saviour's miraculous cures.

Yet our Lord's words should be here chiefly considered as emblematical of the state of the Jewish nation, which had been partially, and for a time, reformed under the ministry of John the Baptist, but was now, through the agency of the Scribes and Pharisees, become more hardened in their infidelity, which led, in the first instance, to their rejection of the Messiah, and subsequently, to their destruction by the Romans. "Even so shall it be to this wicked generation." In the next place, which is the more interesting to us, it presents us with a striking picture of those moral reforms which sometimes take place among ourselves; but which, not being founded on sound evangelical principles, but either on Pharisaical self-righteousness, or human policy, are often of short duration, and terminate in a worse state than they began. Such persons the writer has often observed proceed rapidly from sect to sect, with remarkable strictness, or from notion to notion with ardent zeal, until at last, wearied with these changes, they sink into downright scepticism and profaneness. "Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines, for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace." (Heb. xiii. 9.)

The concluding verses of this chapter inform us, that, while Jesus was teaching the people, his mother and his brethren were standing without the crowd, desiring to speak with him, on which occasion he delivered this most important truth, that those who receive and obey the will of his heavenly Father, are dear to our Saviour, as could be his own brother, his sister, or even his mother. "So may it be our care to do the will of God, that we may be thus dear to our Redeemer!"

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—23. The parable of the sower and its explanation.—On the same day on which he had held his preceding discourse, "went Jesus out of the house," into which he had probably retired at noon, as is common in hot countries; and in the afternoon sat by the sea side, until the multitude came crowding around him, when he found it convenient to go into a small ship, or fishing vessel, which probably lay in a creek of the lake of Galilee, and sitting on its edge, the people might nearly surround him, in a semicircle,

Ver. 43. When the unclean.—'Had there been no reality in demoniacal possessions, as some have supposed, our Lord would scarcely have appealed to a case of this kind here to point out the real state of the Jewish people, and their approaching desolation. Had this been only a vulgar error, of the nonsense of which the learned scribes and wise Pharisees must have been convinced, the case not being in point, because not true, must have been treated with contempt by the very people for whose conviction it was designed.]—B.

Ver. 44. Empty—That is, unhabited.——Swept and garnished—or "adorned," as Doddridge.

Ver. 45. Even so.—[And so it was; for they became worse and worse, as it totally abandoned to diabolical influence, till the besom of destruction swept them away.]—B.

Ver. 50. My brother, and sister, and mother.—Those who truly love and obey the Saviour, are as dear to him, as the nearest relations can possibly be.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1. The same day—Namely, on which Jesus had held his preceding discourse with the Pharisees.

3 And he spake many things unto them in parables, saying, [b] Behold, a sower went forth to sow;

4 And when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way side, and the fowls came and devoured them up:

5 Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth:

6 And when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them:

8 But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, some a hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold.

9 Who [c] hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 ¶ And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables?

11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to [d] know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.

12 For [e] whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

13 Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand:

14 And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of [f] Esaias, which saith, By [g] hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive:

15 For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull [h] of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

18 ¶ Hear [k] ye therefore the parable of the sower.

19 When any one heareth the [l] word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked [m] one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which received seed by the way side.

20 But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy [n] receiveth it;

21 Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is [o] offended.

22 He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care [p] of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, [q] choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful.

23 But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it; which also heareth [r] fruit, and bringeth forth, some a hundred fold, some sixty, some thirty.

and hear to great advantage. He then began the parable of "the sower," intending thereby himself, in the first place, (ver. 37,) and in the next, his apostles and their successors. The seed is his doctrine, "the word of the kingdom," which was differently received, according to the soil on which it fell. First, That which fell by the way side, or in the public paths, which were trodden hard, not entering the ground, the sparrows and other birds picked it up, and carried it away. So there are minds on which the word of God makes no impression, for want of due attention to understand it: but the temptations of Satan divert them from all serious regard, either to its truth or its importance.—In the second instance, the seed fell upon a stony (or rocky) soil, with a thin layer of earth, in which it immediately vegetated; but no sooner did the sun attain the zenith of his power, than it withered, having no depth of root. These, we are told, represent persons who receive the word joyfully at first, but when trouble or persecution arises, they stumble at this "rock of offence," and utterly fall away.—In the third case, the seed fell among thorns, or thistles, which generally grow round the boundary of a field; and these thorns represent the cares of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches, whereby the word is choked, and therefore produces no fruit.—Lastly, there is a fourth sort of hearers, represented by the good and fruitful soil, who not only hear, but understand; who not only understand, but practise it; these bring forth abundantly, some even an hundred fold; for there is a vast difference in the improvement and fruitfulness even of sincere and good Christians.

Previous, however, to this explanation, our Lord's disciples inquired of their Master privately, in the ship, why it was that he instructed the people by parables; and his answer merits our particular attention: "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; but to them it is not given." Hereby we are taught, that all spiritual knowledge is the gift of God; the hearing ear and the understanding heart; a doctrine on which we shall have farther occasion to remark hereafter. In the mean time we may consider the passage here quoted from Isaiah, (chap. vi. 8, 9,) and its fulfilment. The prophet had predicted the gross stupidity of the great body of this people, and the evangelist records the fact. Their hearts were fattened with luxuries, which rendered them deaf to the divine eloquence of our Saviour, and blind to the miraculous evidence of his mission; notwithstanding curiosity, or a worse motive, led them to attend upon his ministry.

The late ingenious Editor of Calmet has remarked, that this is not a new nor a singular case. "God, by giving plenty and abundance, affords the means of people's abusing his goodness, and getting both over fat with food, and intoxicated with drink; and thus, by his very beneficence, he may be said to make their heart fat and their eyes heavy." (Fragments, No. CXC.)

Happy, however, were those whose hearts had been circumcised, and their eyes enlightened into the mysteries of the gospel: for they saw what "many prophets and righteous men had desired to see," but were not so highly favoured. They saw Messiah in human flesh, witnessed the benevolence of

Ver. 3. A parable.—[A parable has been justly defined to be a comparison or similitude, in which one thing is compared with another, especially spiritual things with natural, by which means those spiritual things are better understood, and make a deeper impression on an honest and attentive mind. In a parable, a resemblance in the principal incidents is all that is required; smaller matters being considered as a sort of drapery. Maimonides gives an excellent rule on this head: "Fix it as a principle to attach yourself to the grand object of the parable, without attempting to make a particular application of all the circumstances and terms which it comprehends."]—Bagster. The parable of the sower is designed to show what are the hinderances which prevent the power of the gospel, and to demonstrate that the salvation of three classes of hearers is impossible.

Ver. 4. The fowls (i. e. birds) came and devoured them.—Thevenot (the traveller) says, "There are so many sparrows in Persia, that they destroy all things; and scare-crows are so far from frightening them, that they will perch upon them." He adds, that when they see flocks of birds coming, the peasants run, and shout, and smack their whips, to drive them farther. Orient. Cust. No. 1188.

Ver. 8. Some a hundred-fold.—The sower was one, and the seed the same; but even in good ground some spots will be far more productive than others.

Ver. 12. For whosoever hath, &c.—He that hath improved the talents and privileges granted him to acquire divine knowledge, shall have given him more talents and greater privileges: but he that hath not improved the talents and privileges granted him, shall have them taken from him.—But whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.—To those who cavil at this seeming contradiction, we recommend the following lines from Juvenal;

"'Tis true, poor Codrus nothing had to boast;
And yet poor Codrus all that nothing lost."

See Orient. Llt. No. 1193.

Ver. 14. Is fulfilled.—Dr. Campbell remarks, that the Greek word is here emphatic, implying that this was the proper fulfilment of the prediction, which (he adds) is oftener quoted in the New Testament than any other.

Ver. 19. Understandeth it not.—Campbell, "Mindeth (it) not." He adds, "that the word frequently means, both in the Septuagint and New Testament, to mind, to regard, to attend to, is unquestionable." The same word is used in the close of ver. 13, "Neither do they mind."—The wicked (or evil) one—That is, Satan; see ver. 38.—And catcheth.—Campbell, "Snatcheth;" a more happy rendering, the original word implying violence.—Hammond.

Ver. 21. Dureth—That is, endureth.—He is offended—or "stumbleth."—See note on chap. vi. 6.

Ver. 22. The deceitfulness.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Delusion."—Choke—Campbell, "Stifle." Plants may properly be said to be choked (or stifled) by thorns, which do not leave them room to grow; and the word of God is represented as choked, when thus pressed with secular cares prevailing in the mind.

Ver. 23. Understandeth—Or "mindeth" it as ver. 19

24 ¶ Another [a] parable put he forth unto them, saying, The king[c] om of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed [c] good seed in his field:
25 But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way.
26 But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also.
27 So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares?
28 He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up?
29 But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them.
30 Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest [u] I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to [v] burn them: but gather the [w] wheat into my barn.
31 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a [x] grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field:
32 Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a [y] tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.
33 ¶ Another parable spake he unto them; The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three [z] measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.
34 All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in [a] parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them:
35 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the [b] prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept [c] secret from the foundation of the world.
36 ¶ Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field.
37 He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man;
38 The field is the [d] world; the good seed are the children of the [e] kingdom; but the tares are the children of the [f] wicked one;
39 The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the [g] world; and the reapers are the [h] angels.
40 As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the [i] fire; so shall it be in the end of this world.
41 The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all [j] things that offend, [k] and them which do iniquity;
42 And [l] shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there [m] shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.
43 Then shall the righteous shine [n] forth as his miracles, and heard "the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." Privileges in which we also, by means of the Scriptures, happily partake.

"How happy are our ears,
That hear this joyful sound,
Which kings and prophets waited for,
And sought, but never found!
How blessed are our eyes,
That see this heavenly light!
Prophets and kings desired it long,

Ver. 24—43. The parables of the tares, of the mustard tree, and others.—The former has some analogy with the preceding, and is, in like manner, explained by its author. The purport of it is, to show that the visible church must be expected in every age to contain, more or less, an admixture of false professors, which cannot be wholly eradicated till the day of judgment. Much injury has, however, been done, by the injudicious conduct of some "servants" of the divine "Householder," who have made the rash attempt. In some instances, as was the case with the Novatians, they refused to admit those returning penitents who had apostatized in time of persecution; thereby rooting out from the church those whom their indulgent Master would have retained. More frequently this has been effected by religious zealots, who knew not "what spirit they were of." Even some of our Lord's apostles, before they became inspired from above, would have called down fire from heaven to destroy those who assorted not with them; so, many, pretending to be their successors, kindled fires upon earth, to burn those whom they considered heretics. In other cases, where their zeal was more guarded, they pursued them with pains and penalties to the grave. He only who can search the heart, is qualified to punish errors of the mind: and he will do it only when his justice shall demand it. We owe no indulgence to error; but we owe personal toleration, or rather liberty of conscience, to every human being.

Before we proceed, however, we must notice two short parables, which intervene between this parable of the tares and our Lord's explication of it. 1. "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a grain of mustard-seed," which, though one of the smallest seeds then known, being sowed in the earth, produced a tree, on which the birds of the air found a lodgement. This was evidently designed to intimate, that though Christ's kingdom was at that time very inconsiderable, it should eventually spread, till it became like the tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, so large "that the fowls of the heaven should dwell in the boughs thereof." (Dan. iv. 12.) A prediction which, in great measure, we have happily seen fulfilled.

2. The other parable here alluded to, is designed to show the manner in which the spirit of Christianity operates secretly and unobserved, spreading from one individual to another, and from family to family, till a whole village, town, or country, is imbued with it; or, speaking figuratively, leavened thereby.

All these things Jesus spake in parables to the multitudes, and thus was fulfilled the expression of the Psalmist Asaph, (Ps. lxxviii. 2.) "I will open my mouth in parables: I will utter things kept secret from the foundation of the world;" that is, never before revealed. But though these things were clothed in parables to the promiscuous multitude, our Lord privately explained them to the meanest and poorest of his disciples, to whom grace was also given to understand the mysteries of his heavenly kingdom. It is well known, that the Greek philosophers had a secret and a popular doctrine, the former of which was taught only to their private disciples, from whom they often received large premiums; but the instructions of Jesus were all gratuitous, and his disciples were mostly from the lower classes: and though he spake in figures to the multitude, and explained those figures to his disciples, yet his doctrine was but one, and none who desired instruction were refused. Whereas there is reason to believe that many of the philosophers, while they taught idolatry to the world, taught atheism to their private pupils!

In the above abstract of the parable of the tares, we omitted to notice the concluding paragraph, which briefly places before our eyes the solemn consequences of the day of judgment; when the Son of man shall send forth his angels to gather out of his kingdom all scandals and offences, all hypocrites and unbelievers, and cast them in bundles into the furnace of perdition: "Then shall the righteous shine forth as

Ver. 24. Parable of tares.—The design of this parable is to illustrate the divine government, showing this world as a place of probation, where men form their characters, and eternity as the place of retribution, where men are treated according to their characters in this life. The field is the world, and not the church. See Saviour's exposition, ver. 38—43.

Ver. 25. Tares.—Greek, Zezania.—"It appears from the parable itself, (says Campbell.) 1. That this weed was not only hurtful to the corn, but otherwise of no value, and therefore to be severed and burnt. 2. That it resembles corn, especially wheat, since it was only when the wheat was putting forth the ear, that these weeds were discovered. Now, neither of these characters will suit the tare, which is excellent food for cattle, . . . and distinguished from corn the moment it comes above ground." Dr. Clarke therefore concludes it must mean the darnel. Gadus, Lolium) which Shakspeare mentions as "an idle weed," which grows among our corn. (See Johnson's Dictionary.) The Talmud calls it zonan; the Turks, zuvan; the Arabs, zuman; and the Spaniards, zizannum. Its seeds, if mingled with corn, produce inebriety, vertigo, and lethargy. In some parts of Syria travellers mention that it is drawn up by the hand, in time of harvest, and tied in bundles, to be burnt. See Taylor's Expos. Index, and Harris's Nat. Hist. of the Bible, in Tares.

Ver. 32. The least of all seeds.—Not absolutely, but one of the smallest, and therefore used proverbially, chap. xvii. 20. And, according to Sir Thos. Brown, the smallest of such as are apt to grow to a ligneous (or woody) substance, of which C. Taylor refers to a specimen in the collection of Sir Jos. Banks. The Talmud speaks of a mustard tree, one of whose branches covered a potter's bovel; and a certain Rabbi boasts of possessing one which he could climb up like a fig tree: but for these we cannot vouch. See Taylor's Expos. Index and Harris's Nat. Hist. A traveller in Chili says, "I have travelled many leagues through groves (of mustard seed) which were taller than horse and man and the birds build their nests in them." Pinkerton's Voy.

Ver. 39. The devil (diabolos.)—"A plain answer to the great question concerning the origin of evil. God made man (as he did angels) intelligent creatures, and consequently free either to choose good or evil: but he implanted no evil in the human soul; an enemy (with man's concurrence) hath done this."—J. Wesley.

44 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure [o] hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth [p] all that he hath, and buyeth [q] that field.

45 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls:

46 Who, when he had found one [r] pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it.

47 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered [s] of every kind:

48 Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.

49 So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and [t] sever the wicked from among the just,

50 And [u] shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

51 Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord.

52 Then said he unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out [v] of his treasure things new and [w] old.

53 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these parables, he departed thence.

54 And [x] when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their synagogue insomuch that they were astonished, and said Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works?

55 Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?

56 And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things?

57 And they were offended [y] in him. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.

58 And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Herod's opinion of Christ. 3 Wherefore John Baptist was beheaded. 13 Jesus departeth into a desert place: 15 where he feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes: 22 he walketh on the sea to his disciples: 34 and landing at Gennesaret, healeth the sick by the touch of the hem of his garment.

AT that time [a] Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus,

2 And said unto his servants, This is John the Baptist; he is risen from the dead; and therefore mighty works [b] do show forth themselves in him.

3 ¶ For Herod had laid hold on John, and the sun, in the kingdom of their Father!" The Lord hath, no doubt, wise and valuable ends, in permitting, during the present state, that mixture of the righteous and the wicked which is necessary to the fulfilment of his great designs; but that accomplished, their co-existence will be tolerated no longer. The one shall be consigned to their long-threatened punishment; and the other exalted to glory. "They that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars, for ever and ever." (Dan. xii. 3.)

Ver. 44—58. The parables of the hidden treasure, the pearl of great price, and the fisher's net; with our Lord's return to Nazareth.—By this variety of parables and metaphors, our Lord places the gospel of his kingdom in various and important points of view. Here it is a treasure hidden, and to be digged for: a treasure of such value that if a man were to part with his all for it, he would still be an infinite gainer. "Christian truth (says the late Mr. Ward, missionary in India,) enriches the possessor, by implanting those preserving, dignified, and immortal principles, which are at once the marks of the person's high calling, of his holy nature, and of the glorious destiny which awaits him among the sons and heirs of God. But he who has found this treasure, is not only himself enriched; he enriches his children, his friends, his neighbours, the present age, and perhaps posterity. Yea, farther, the riches of Christ are said to be unsearchable; always in a state of expenditure, but for ever inexhaustible.

"We are ready to pity those who suffer losses for Christ, and we feel aright; but let us never suppose that any one loses by his attachment to the Saviour. Such persons not only enjoy heaven in common with their fellow Christians, but every item of loss and suffering will meet with its own especial remuneration in heaven. God is not unfaithful, to forget the labours or sufferings of his people." (Ward's Reflections on the Word of God.)

The importance of divine truth is then placed in another point of light, in being compared to a goodly pearl that must be drawn up from the bottom of the sea; and when found, is of so "great price," that it costs a merchant's all to purchase it; but all is little, for that which is infinite in value and duration. "Whatever stands in opposition to Christ, (says Henry,) or in competition with him, for our love and service, we must cheerfully quit it, though never so dear to us. A man may buy gold too dear, but not this pearl of great price."

A third simile, or parable, represents "the kingdom of heaven" in a different point of view. This comprehends all the professors of the gospel, and plainly tells us that all are not pearls nor jewels. The kingdom of heaven is like a fisher's net cast into the sea, and which embraces every kind of fish, good or bad, that comes within its limits. But when the net is drawn to shore, a discrimination takes place: the good are gathered into vessels, and the bad are cast away; a term especially applied to hypocrites and apostates. This is a very awful admonition to us all; for even St. Paul says, I keep my body under, ... lest, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." (1 Cor. ix. 27.) And this term, as it respects mankind, does not intend a mere rejection, but a terrible punishment:—"Angels shall come forth, and shall sever the wicked from the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire:" of fire unquenchable, where shall be "wailing and gnashing of teeth."

When Jesus had thus represented to his disciples the great importance of his salvation, in these various interesting points of view, he inquired if they understood them; and being informed they did, he remarked, that a scribe well instructed, is like a householder who has treasures, both new and old, and brings them forth to his household, as occasion may require. These treasures may include both provisions and raiment. So these scribes of the New Testament were to bring forth old truths, and mysteries of ancient date; but dressed up, as it were, by a variety of images and illustrations, calculated to render them both interesting and intelligible, as our Lord himself had here given them an example.

Towards evening, when Jesus had finished these discourses, he crossed the lake, and returned to Nazareth, where his presence excited a temporary astonishment, but no permanent good effect. "Is not this the carpenter's son, and are not his mother and her family with us? . . . . Whence then hath this man all these things?" Hence, instead of inquiring into his doctrine, or the evidences of his mission, they were offended (or scandalized) at the meanness of his origin, and paid little or no attention to either his miracles or preaching; and here Jesus himself bare witness, that a prophet is not wholly without honour, save in his own country, and his own family.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—21. Herod's cruelty to John the Baptist. Our Lord feeds five thousand, &c.—The voice of conscience is the voice of God, and speaking with no less authority than his own thunder, can make even infidels and tyrants tremble. "O the terrors and tortures of a guilty heart! CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1. Herod the tetrarch.—[This was Herod Antipas, the son of Herod the Great by Malthace, and tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, which produced a revenue of 200 talents a year. He married the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia, whom he divorced in order to marry Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip, who was still living. Aretas, to revenge the affront which Herod had offered his daughter, declared war against him; and vanquished him after an obstinate engagement. This defeat Josephus assures us the Jews considered as a punishment for the death of John the Baptist.—Having gone to Rome to solicit the title of king, he was accused by Agrippa with carrying on a correspondence with Artabanus king of Parthia, against the Romans, and was banished by the Emperor Caius to Lyons, and thence to Spain, where he and Herodias died in exile.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. He is risen.—Josephus represents Herod as a Sadducee, which sect denied the resurrection, &c. (See Doddridge.) But "Conscience makes cowards of us all;" and infidels who deny a future state, will yet tremble at the sight of a supposed spectre.

bound him, and put him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife.

4 For John said unto him, It [c] is not lawful for thee to have her.

5 And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, because they counted him as a [d] prophet.

6 But when Herod's birth-day was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced [e] before them, and pleased Herod.

7 Whereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask.

8 And she, being before instructed of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's [f] head in a charger.

9 And the king was [g] sorry: nevertheless for the oath's [h] sake, and them which sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her.

10 And he sent, and beheaded John in the prison.

11 And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother.

12 And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried [i] it, and went and told Jesus.

13 ¶ When Jesus heard of it, he [j] departed thence by ship into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities.

14 And Jesus went forth, and [k] saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion [l] toward them, and he healed their sick.

15 And when it was evening, his disciples came to him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past; send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals.

16 But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat.

17 And they say unto him, We have here but five loaves, and two fishes.

18 He said, Bring them hither to me.

19 And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

20 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets [m] full.

21 And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, beside women and children.

22 ¶ And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away.

23 And when he had sent the multitudes away, he [n] went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone.

that shall invisibly follow thee, and scourge thy guilty heart with secret lashes, ... and begin thy hell within thee."

The popularity of St. John the Baptist, whom all men esteemed a prophet, had induced Herod to invite him to his court. John, however, was no courtier; instead of flattering Herod, as he probably expected, he reproved him for marrying his brother's wife, his brother being yet alive. This exasperated the tyrant, who threw him into prison, and in his rage would, as it appears, have killed him outright, had he not feared the people. While, however, he was imprisoned, Herod made a great feast to celebrate his birth-day, and the daughter of Herodias, by her former husband, so pleased him by her dancing, that he vowed to give her whatever she might require, even to the value of half his kingdom. Elated with such a promise, (though great rewards for dancing were by no means uncommon,) she, or. leaving the room, ran to consult her mother, who bitterly hating the Baptist for his reproof of her adultery, counselled her daughter to ask the head of John the Baptist, in a charger, or large silver dish. Tyrant as he was, he was startled at the demand, and would fain have evaded it; partly from check of conscience, for he knew John to be a good and honest man; and partly from fear of an insurrection among the people: his oath, and still more his honour, were, however, pledged in presence of his court; and what is the life of a subject to an Eastern despot, who claims a right to all the lives and property in his kingdom? A military executioner was sent; John was beheaded; his head was brought in a charger, as desired, and delivered to the delicate damsel, who carried it to her mother; she feasted her revenge thereon, considering it doubtless, as to her, worth more than half a kingdom.

Herod had been hitherto too much involved in business of state, and in the pleasures of his court, to pay any attention to the reports in circulation relative to the preaching and miracles of Jesus; but when John was dead, and reports began to circulate more widely respecting the miracles which Jesus had lately wrought in Galilee, (where he had for some time resided,) it became surmised that John, or one of the old prophets, must be risen from the dead, and Herod's conscience decided for the former opinion: "Surely," said he, "John the Baptist is risen from the dead!"

Upon hearing of John's death, his affectionate disciples came and buried his corpse, and then went and told Jesus, who immediately took ship, and crossing the lake privately, departed into a desert place; partly, probably, for private devotion, and partly to avoid Herod, his "time not being yet come." The people, however, followed him into the desert on foot, taking their sick with them, on whom he had "compassion, and whom he healed."

When evening came on, the disciples applied to their Master to dismiss the people (who seem to have showed no disposition to depart) to their respective homes, to buy food. Jesus, however, taking another course, commanded the people to sit down upon the grass, (of which, according to St. John, there was much in that place,) and finding that the disciples had five loaves, and two fishes, he gave thanks, and miraculously multiplied them to such a degree, that they fed and satisfied five thousand men, besides women and children, and left twelve baskets of fragments over. "I know not, (says Bp. Hall,) whether more to wonder at the miraculous eating, or the miraculous leaving. Here were 'five thousand men,' and, in all likelihood, no fewer women and children. Perhaps some of these only looked on; nay, they did all eat 'and were satisfied.' So many must needs make clean work; of so little, there could be left nothing. Yea, there were 'fragments' remaining. Perhaps some crumbs, or crusts. Nay, 'twelve baskets full;' more remaining than was first set down. . . .Here is a marvellous provision made; a marvellous bounty of that provision; a no less marvellous extent of that bounty. Those that depend upon God, shall not want a due purveyance in the very desert."

Ver. 22—36. Christ walketh on the water.—Having thus miraculously fed the multitude, Jesus constrained his disciples, who seem to have been unwilling to leave him, to re-cross

Ver. 3. Herodias.—[This infamous woman was the daughter of Aristobulus and Berenice, and grand-daughter of Herod the Great.—Philip's wife.—Herod Philip, son of Herod the Great and Mariamne.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Promised with an oath.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Sware unto her."

Ver. 8. Before instructed.—Campbell, "Instigated." The facts appear to have been, that when the daughter of Herodias danced, her mother was not in the ball-room, but in an antechamber; when, therefore, Herod made his foolish vow, the girl ran to her mother, who told her what to ask, and she followed her directions.—Give me here.—Mark, "By and by;" Doddridge, "Presently," which seems more exact.

Ver. 10. He sent and beheaded, &c.—This is no uncommon thing in Turkey and the East to this day. Some time since the Grand Signior having received the heads of some of his officers who had been decapitated by his orders, commanded that they should be exposed in large silver dishes (chargers) at the entrance of his porte. See Orient. Lit. No. 1195.—[Josephus informs us, that John the Baptist was imprisoned and beheaded by Herod in the strong castle of Machærus, which he describes as situated about 60 stadia east of Jordan, not far from where the river discharges itself into the Dead sea.]—Bagster.—She brought it to her mother.—Jerome relates that Herodias treated the Baptist's head with great disdain, and pierced it with a needle. So when the head of Cicero was brought to Fulvia (wife of Mark Anthony) she is said to have pierced it with a silver bodkin.

Ver. 11. The damsel.—[This was Salome, the daughter of Herodias by her uncle and husband, Herod Philip. Nicephorus and Metaphrastes relate, that she accompanied her mother Herodias and Herod in their banishment, and when passing over a river that was frozen, the ice broke, and she sunk up to her neck, and the ice uniting, she suffered the same punishment she had caused to be inflicted on John the Baptist. If true, this was certainly a wonderful providence; but it must be confessed that it appears contrary to the account of Josephus, who says, that she first married Philip the Tetrarch, and then Herod the king of Chalcis, by whom she had three sons.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Apart.—Campbell, "Privately;" so ver. 24.—On foot.—Campbell, "By land;" he says that the Greek word means on foot, when opposed to horseback; and by land, when contrasted with by sea.

Ver. 15. When it was evening.—Campbell, "Towards evening." He adds, "The Jews reckoned two evenings, the one commencing about three in the afternoon, (the time of the evening sacrifice,) the other about six, or sunset." The second evening is mentioned ver. 23, where the same critic renders, "It was late."

Ver. 19. He blessed.—Query, What did he bless? This is generally explained of the fishes; but Campbell (guided by the oriental idiom) inclines to explain it, "He blessed God," or asked a blessing. Compare Mark vi. 6.

Ver. 20. Twelve baskets full.—From this it is clear that a creative power must have been exerted, as the food remaining was evidently more than before they began to eat.

Ver. 22. Jesus constrained his disciples.—John intimates that the people wanted to take Jesus by force, and make him a king; (John vi. 15.) one reason, therefore, for Jesus sending them away might be, to prevent their uniting with the multitude, and creating an alarm to the Roman government

CHAPTER XV.

3 Christ reproveth the scribes and Pharisees for transgressing God's commandments through their own traditions: 11 teacheth how that which goeth into the mouth defileth not a man: 21 He healeth the daughter of the woman of Canaan, 30 and other great multitudes: 32 and with seven loaves and a few little fishes feedeth four thousand men, besides women and children.

THEN [a] came to Jesus scribes and Pharisees, which were of Jerusalem, saying,

2 Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread.

3 But he answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your [b] tradition?

4 For God commanded, saying, [c] Honour thy father and mother; and, He [d] that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.

5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me;

6 And honour not [e] his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the com-

the lake, while he dismissed the people to their homes; after which he went up into a mountain apart—that is, secretly and alone—to pray. The time which Jesus devoted to his public work and private devotion, seems hardly to have allowed sufficient intervals for either sleep or food. After the labours of the preceding day, instead of retiring to rest, he seeks a solitary place to pray, where he might "pour out prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears," (Heb. v. 7,) without interruption from either friends or enemies. And after this, instead of lying down to rest, even in the open air, like Jacob, his head pillowed with a stone, (Gen. xxviii. 18;) his heart is with his disciples, and foreseeing a rising storm, in the fourth watch of the night, (or between three and four in the morning,) behold him walking on the swelling waves. The disciples, as well they might, felt alarmed and terrified, concluding that they saw a spectre, and cried out, or screamed, for fear. Jesus hearing them, immediately called out, to calm their fears, "Be of good cheer, it is I." Instantly their fears are calmed, and Peter, in a moment of sudden joy and gratitude, exclaimed, "Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water." He received the command, and instantly obeyed, and for a moment he walked on the water; but looking at the waves instead of the Saviour, his faith failed him, and he began to sink. "Looking at difficulties with an eye of sense, more than at precepts and promises with an eye of faith, (says Henry,) is at the bottom of all our inordinate fears, both as to public and personal concerns."

When Peter begins to sink, he begins to pray, which is the only remedy for sinking, both with him and us. In the conduct of our Saviour, here are several things to remark. 1. The Lord cures vain confidence by leaving us for a time to try our own strength. Peter suspected not the weakness of his faith, till he found it fail him. 2. When Jesus reproved Peter for his wavering faith, he at the same time sustained him. Indeed he caught him before he reproved him; and when he did reprove, it was in these gentle words, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" There is no room, in any case, to doubt, while we are directed by a clear command. 3. The presence of the Saviour insures the safety of his disciples. "Immediately as he came into the ship, the wind ceased!" Well, therefore, might the little crew of mariners and disciples fall down and "worship him." He steps into the sea, and the waves become as a solid pavement beneath his tread; and no sooner are his feet within the vessel, than the winds are hushed to peace! Well might they, in a rapture of surprise and joy, exclaim, "Of a truth, thou art the Son of God!" It is difficult to say exactly what was meant by this expression. If the company consisted, as some suspect, partly of Jews, and partly of Gentiles, they might have different ideas under the same title. The latter were used to consider extraordinary personages as children of the gods; but the former could hardly attach to it any other idea than that of the Great Prophet—the Messiah!

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—20. The traditions of men compared with the commands of God.—It may be here proper to observe, that besides the laws of Moses, as recorded in the Pentateuch, the Rabbins pretend that he left a variety of oral traditions; that is, traditions delivered to him by the voice of God at Sinai, and handed down, from generation to generation, by word of mouth, to the time of our Lord, and even lower; for it does not appear that any complete digest of them was put into writing till the latter part of the second century, by Rabbi Judas, surnamed the holy. This work (which makes six volumes, folio,) is called the Mishna, or second law, as containing a variety of additions to, and explanations of, the written law: these were pretended to be explicatory, but many of them were evasive, and some even subversive of the laws of Moses. Of this we have an example in the chapter now before us.

The Pharisees come to our Lord, complaining that his disciples, on some occasion, when they had watched them, had taken food without washing their hands, which, it seems, the Pharisees always practised with great ceremony; not for cleanliness, but as a form required by the traditions of their elders, which were of higher authority with them than the laws of decency, or even of God himself. The law of Moses had pronounced sentence of death against those who cursed their parents, which implied not merely a hasty expression, (though that must be highly culpable,) but a neglect and abandonment of them, as though the parental relation had been dissolved: it was not merely a verbal, but a practical curse, of which our Lord gives this instance. A Jew, finding that his parents, through age and infirmity, were likely to become a burden to him, devotes a part of his property to the temple, saying, "It is Corban;" that is, a gift; "I have devoted all I can spare, and therefore can do nothing for you." This was sanctioned by the traditions of the elders, who thereby made void the law, releasing children from the natural and legal obligations which they owed to their parents; that is,

Ver. 24. The wind was contrary.—By this they were driven farther from the shore than they designed, and in a different course.

Ver. 25. Fourth watch.—The Jews at this time divided the night into four watches. the first was from six o'clock in the evening till nine; the second, from nine to twelve; the third from twelve till three; and the fourth, from three till six. So that it probably began to be daylight before our Lord came to his disciples. —Walking on the sea.—This was thought so absurd, that the Egyptian hieroglyphic for an impossibility was "two feet walking on the sea." This suspension of the laws of gravitation was a proper manifestation of omnipotence.

Ver. 26. It is a spirit.—Gr. Phantasma, i. e. "an apparition." So Doddridge.

Ver. 34. Gennesaret.—[Gennesaret was a fertile district, in which were situated the cities of Tiberias and Capernaum, extending along the western shore of the lake to which it gave name, about thirty stadia, or nearly four miles in length, and twenty stadia, or two miles and a half in breadth, according to Josephus.]—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Had knowledge of him—That is, found out who he was.

Ver. 36. Hem—Or "fringe." See note on ch. ix. 20.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1. Of Jerusalem—Or, from Jerusalem. Doddridge suggests, that these were deputed to watch the conduct of Jesus and his disciples in Galilee.

Ver. 2. Traditions of the elders.—[Tradition, in Latin traditio, from trado I deliver, hand down. Among the Jews, it signifies what is called the oral law, which they say has been successively handed down from Moses, through every generation, to Judah the Holy, who compiled and digested it into the Mishneh to explain which the two Gemaras, or Talmuds, called the Jerusalem and Babylonish, were composed. Of the estimation in which these were held by the Jews, the following may serve as an example: "The words of the Scribes are lovely beyond the words of the law, for the words of the law are weighty and light, but the words of the Scribes are all weighty." Hieros. Berac.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Curseth.—Campbell is surprised at this translation being so current; he thinks that both the Hebrew and Greek words signify to reproach, or calumniate. But the penalty of death being affixed to this "reproach," probably led to this strong term "curseth," and seems to justify it: for no slight reproach, assuredly, would warrant such a punishment.

Ver. 5. It is (or, be it) a gift.—"It is Corban," the Hebrew term for a gift, or offering to God. Levit. i. 2, 3; ii. 1, 5, &c. To interfere with this offering would mandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

7 Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, from honouring them, as the law required. Thus, by presents to the temple, or the priests, they purchased a release from the obligations of the moral law: so says the Talmud—"Every one ought to honour his father and mother, EXCEPT he hath vowed to the contrary;" which fully justifies our Lord's assertion, that they made void the law. (See note on verse 5.)

Bishop Jebb, in his metrical version of verse 5, 6, seems to have rendered the passage clearer and more elegant.

"But ye say:
Whosoever shall say to his father or mother, (Be that) a gift, by which thou mightest have been relieved from me;
Must also not honour his father or his mother:
Thus have ye nullified the commandment of God by your tradition."

Well might our Lord call these people hypocrites, and apply to them the language of the prophet Isaiah; "Their heart is far from me!"

Having thus far rectified the errors of the Scribes, our Lord explains the nature and source of moral pollution. Under the new dispensation, it is not what a man eats or drinks that renders him obnoxious in the sight of God: for "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. xiv. 17.) But what truly defiles a man is that which springeth from his evil heart; "for out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders." The heart of man being corrupted by the fall, has become the fountain of iniquity, from which all these evil streams do flow. "And doth a fountain, (asks St. James,) send forth, at the same place, sweet water and bitter?" (chap. iii. 11.) Can that depraved heart, which is the source of every iniquity, produce also devotion to God, and benevolence to man?

"O God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of thine Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love thee, and worthily magnify thy holy name, through Christ our Lord! Amen."

Ver. 21—39. The daughter of a woman of Canaan healed, with sundry other miracles.—This woman, though of Canaan's accursed race, (who, according to Lightfoot, occupied the country about Tyre and Sidon,) was a remarkable monument, not only of our Lord's miraculous power, but also of his saving grace; and in her was exhibited a specimen of that mercy promised to the Gentiles. It is observable, that though our Lord confined the ministry of his Apostles, during his lifetime, to the Jews, he did not so restrict his own ministrations; but in one instance visited a Samaritan woman; in another, the servant of a Roman centurion; and in a third, this "outcast among the heathen;" this Syro-Phœnician woman, his conduct towards whom appears most extraordinary, till explained by the sequel. Jesus was now in the farther part of Galilee, on the very boundary of Judea, and she ran crying after him, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord:" and at the same time evinced her faith in him, by calling him, "the Son of David," or the Messiah. She then earnestly implored mercy on herself, by the healing of her daughter, who was grievously vexed with a demon. On this we may observe, by the way, that some of the greatest mercies we receive, are those bestowed upon our children.—At first Jesus seems to turn a deaf ear towards her, for "he answered her not a word." This, however, did not dismay her: she exhibited that perseverance which our Lord had recommended in his sermon on the mount. She asks till she receives; she seeks till she finds; and she knocks till the door of mercy is effectually opened. In short, she wearies out the disciples, (though she could not their master,) and they beg him to dismiss her by an answer of some kind or other, though they seem doubtful what that should be, as they perceived that she was a Gentile. To them he replied, not to her, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Upon this, she pressed nearer to him, till she fell down at his feet and worshipped him, saying, "Lord, help me!" the language both of anxiety and distress. The Lord now condescended to speak to her; but not with his usual tenderness: "It is not meet, (said he,) to take the children's bread and cast it unto dogs." At this word she eagerly caught. "Truth, Lord," said she, I am a Gentile dog, "yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table." The Saviour appears now completely overcome with her importunity. His bowels doubtless yearned over her, (as did those of Joseph when he spake roughly to his brethren,) and he exclaimed, "O woman! great is thy faith: be it unto thee according to thy word!"

"Truth, Lord," we were Gentile dogs. "Lord, how should we (Christians) bless thy name, that we of dogs are made children! How should we fear thy justice, since thine ancient people are become dogs! O let us not be high-minded, but tremble. If they were cut off who crucified thee in thine humble state, what may we expect who crucify thee daily in thy glory?" (Bp. Hall.)

After the cure of this Gentile's daughter, our Lord, as he was wont, went up into the side of a mountain, where he was speedily surrounded with hearers, and with proper subjects for the exertion of his miraculous power; and when the multitude saw the wonders which Jesus wrought, they were not only struck with admiration, but "glorified the God of Israel."

After three days, (or on the third day,) the people probably discovered symptoms of hunger and fatigue, and our Saviour fed them by a miracle, so similar to that in the preceding chapter, that we need not dwell on it; yet so varied in its circumstances as to demonstrate it was not the same. (See ch. xvi. 9.) The disciples, however, reasoned and acted as if they had totally forgotten the preceding event; which would appear the 27 And she said, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table.

28 Then [r] Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be [s] it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very [t] hour.

32 ¶ Then [w] Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.

33 And [x] his disciples say unto him, Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as to fill so great a multitude?

35 And [y] he commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground.

36 And he took the seven loaves and the fishes, and [z] gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

37 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets full.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The Pharisees require a sign. 6 Jesus warneth his disciples of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees. 13 The people's opinion of Christ, 16 and Peter's confession of him. 21 Jesus foreshoweth his death, 23 reproving Peter for dissuading him from it: 24 and admonisheth those that will follow him, to bear the cross.

THE Pharisees also with the Sadducees came, and tempting desired him that he would show them a sign [a] from heaven.

2 He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red.

3 And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?

4 A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet [b] Jonas. And he left them, and departed.

5 ¶ And when his disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, [c] Take heed and beware of the leaven [d] of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

7 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have taken no bread.

8 Which when Jesus perceived, he said unto them, [e] O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread?

9 Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five [f] loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

10 Neither the seven [g] loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—12. The Pharisees require a sign, and are refused: the disciples cautioned against their doctrines.—On a former occasion, (chap. xii. 38,) certain scribes and Pharisees had required a sign from heaven, and were refused: another party of Pharisees now come, and bring certain of the Sadducees with them, who probably imagined they might be able to elicit from our Saviour what the others could not. As they proposed the same question, they received the like answer; with a reproof, at the same, time for their want of discernment and of candour, in not appreciating the evidences of his mission, with which they were surrounded. Upon this, our Saviour left them, without any farther reply, and again entering a small vessel, departed to the other side of the lake. When they arrived, he began to caution his disciples to "beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." Upon this, they were at first confounded, taking our Lord's words literally, as if he had spoken of bread; whereas our Lord had before used the term in respect of doctrine, in speaking of his new dispensation, (chap. xiii. 33.) Jesus, therefore, reproved the dulness of their apprehension, and gave them to understand that he referred to the doctrines of these Jewish sects, on which this seems the proper place to offer a few remarks.

The Pharisees were esteemed the most orthodox sect among the Jews, and held in the highest respect. Their name, (from the Hebrew Pharosh,) implies separation; not that they separated from communion with the Sadducees, or other sects, but they professed an extraordinary degree of moral and ritual purity, and the highest veneration for the traditions of the elders. They also avowed their belief in the doctrines of a future state, and the resurrection. (See Acts xxiii. 3; xxiv. 15.) "It is somewhat doubtful, however, what the Pharisees meant by the last doctrine. According to Josephus, it was no more than a Pythagorean resurrection; that is, a resurrection of the soul, by its transmigration into another body, and being born anew with it. From this resurrection, he says, they excluded all who were notoriously wicked, being of opinion, that the souls of such persons were transmitted into a state of everlasting wo. As to inferior crimes, they held, that they were punished in the bodies which the souls of those who committed them were next sent into."

The Sadducees, another Jewish sect, are said to have originated with one Sadoc, in the third century before Christ. This man "inculcated a pure and disinterested principle of obedience to God, independent of rewards and punishments, from which some of his disciples inferred, that none were to be expected; and hence the sect degenerated into infidelity, and denied, not only the resurrection of the body, but also the being of angels, or spirits, and consequently a future state. (Acts xxiii. 8.) . . . . It has been said, that they rejected all the sacred writings but those of Moses; and it is probable that some did so, but this was not universally the case. It is certain that they rejected the traditions of the elders, and paid little attention to any religious forms." But they were, however, very strict in the administration of justice. In their philosophy they were Epicureans, or materialists, but by no means Necessarians.

There was another sect, called Essenes, mentioned by Josephus, but not in the New Testament. This may be accounted for, from their living in a kind of monkish community, and never attending the Jewish festivities, or the temple service. They believed in the immortality of the soul, but not in the resurrection of the body. They were moral, abstemious, and recluse; and in their interpretations of the Scriptures they were highly mystical and allegorical. They disapproved of oaths and war, and wholly rejected the traditions of the elders.

There is no difficulty in ascertaining which of these doctrines were here intended as their leaven. The leaven of the Pharisees was their hypocrisy and superstition; the leaven of the Sadducees, licentiousness and infidelity: but what was the leaven of Herod, (which the Evangelist Mark adds, ch.

Ver. 39. Magdala.—[Magdala was a city, and probably a territory, east of Jordan, sometimes called by the Rabbins Magdala of Gadara, from its vicinity to that city. Dr. Lightfoot has satisfactorily shown, from the Jewish writers that it was situated on the south-east side of the Lake of Gennesareth, a sabbath-day's journey, or two miles, from Chammath, near the hot baths of Tiberias, one mile from Jordan, and the same distance from Hippo. It appears to be the same Magdala which Josephus mentions, in his Life, as in the vicinity of Gamala, in Gaulonitis.]—Bagster.

should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees?

12 Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine [h] of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

13 ¶ When Jesus came into the coast of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom [i] do men say that I the Son of man am?

14 And they said, [j] Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

15 He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?

16 And Simon Peter answered and [k] said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,

17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for [l] flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but [m] my Father which is in heaven.

18 And I say also unto thee, That thou art [n] Peter, and [o] upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of [p] hell shall not prevail [q] against it.

19 And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou [r] shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

iii. 6.) is not so clear. The Herodians, however, appear to have been rather a political party, which supported Herod's family, and was willing to flatter him in all his measures, than a religious sect. Sycophancy and flattery, therefore, seem to be the leaven of the Herodians; and such are the vices against which our Lord here cautions his disciples. And the union of these discordant sects against Christ, shows that their enmity against him was greater than their enmity against each other.

Ver. 13—20. Simon Peter's confession, and our Lord's inference therefrom.—Our Lord elicits the opinion of Peter and his fellow disciples, by first inquiring the opinion of others: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" The answer seems to refer to the Pythagorean notion, mentioned in the preceding section, that the soul of John the Baptist, or one of the prophets, was returned to animate the body of our Saviour. "But whom say ye that I am?" is the pointed and interesting question, which he then put to his own disciples, and now puts to us: "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter answered for the rest—May he answer for us also? Do we believe that Christ the Son of man is also the Son of the living God? It is true that this name is sometimes used as synonymous with the Son of man; (compare verse 13 and 16;) but it is also true that it implies something more: it implies a participation of the divine nature; and hence, when Jesus himself answered to that designation, "then the high priest rent his garments, saying, He hath blasphemed;" (ch. xxvi. 63—65,) and hence our Lord concluded that this was not revealed to Peter by any of his fellow disciples, nor even by his own natural powers, but by the Father only; for Peter seems to have been the first disciple that properly understood the true character of his Master; though perhaps he did not yet fully understand the "good confession" that he had now made.

The following words, "Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my church," are of peculiar importance in our controversy with the church of Rome, which founds thereon the primacy of St. Peter, who is the foundation of their church, though not of ours. Thus the Rhemish translators explain the words, "Christ foretold and appointed, (John i. 42,) that this man, named Simon, should afterward be called Cephas, or Petrus, that is to say, a rock; not then uttering the cause, but now expressing the same, viz. (as St. Cyril writeth,) 'For that upon HIM, (Peter,) as upon a firm rock, his church should be builded.'" It is also the avowed doctrine of the Catholic church to this day, "that our Lord did make St. Peter the chief pastor of the church, giving him a name that implied no less than being a rock, or foundation stone, declaring that upon this rock he would build his church." (Bp. Chaloner's Grounds of the Old Religion, sect. ii.) Now in answer to this, 1. Protestants deny that Peter signifies "a rock," and say it signifies a stone only; or, at most, a fragment of a rock. 2. They contend Peter himself was not the foundation rock here spoken of, but only one of the chosen stones laid on that rock, on which the church was built. (Ephes. ii. 20. Rev. xxi. 14.) 3. They believe that Peter's noble confession, (verse 16,) or rather, Christ himself, the subject of that confession, is the Rock both of the church and of every individual believer; (1 Cor. iii. 11;) and that the title (Rock) is indeed an evidence of our Lord's divinity; for "Who is a rock, save our God?" Jehovah was the Rock of Israel; (Deut. xxxii. 30, 31:) and the Apostle Paul explains that rock to signify, (not Peter, but) Christ himself. (1 Cor. x. 4.) Lastly, they add, that if Peter had been that rock, when he fell, by denying his master, (chap. xxvi. 69—72,) the church must have fallen with him.

The great question between Roman Catholics and Protestants is, did Christ here constitute Peter the Pope—i. e. the infallible head of the church. Papists say, yes.—But if so, why did Christ almost immediately after such appointment, say unto Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence to me."—And why did Peter deny Christ, even with cursing, "if infallible?"—And how could he be pope, and yet lead about a wife? (See 1 Cor. ix. 5. Luke iv. 38, &c.)

But our Lord also gave "the keys of the kingdom of heaven" to Peter; by which we understand, that it was his special privilege to open the new dispensation, by first preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, as we have already remarked he did. He opened the kingdom of heaven to all nations, and freely invited them to enter: he also opened the sacred mysteries of the types and prophecies, and showed his hearers somewhat of the glory of his Master in all the institutions of Moses; in all the buds and blossoms of Aaron's rod. Thus, as an able minister of the New Testament, did he open and explain the gospel. But he bound also; and as his opening was expository, so was his binding declarative. This was in perfect accordance with the language of the prophets, who were said to "set up," or "pull down" states and kingdoms, when they were directed prophetically to announce the decrees of God respecting them. (Jer. i. 10.) This explanation of binding and loosing, as declarative and expository, is also, according to Dr. Lightfoot, quite in harmony with the language of the ancient Rabbins, who used them in the sense of teaching what was right, and prohibiting what was wrong. Connecting this passage with the preceding, Townsend thus judiciously paraphrases them, in consistency with this idea. "I am about to build a Gentile church," saith Christ, "and to thee, O Peter, do I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven, that then thou mayest first open the door of faith to them: but if thou askest by what rule that church is to be governed, when the Mosaic rule may seem so improper for it, thou shalt be so guided by the Holy Spirit, that whatsoever of the law of Moses thou shalt forbid them, shall be forbidden; whatsoever thou grantest them shall be granted, and that under a sanction made in heaven." Mr. T. here instances, in the opening the gate of the gospel to the Gentiles, and in the permission of food previously forbidden as unclean.

As to St. Peter's and the Pope's supremacy, it is so far from being founded on the Scriptures, that it is in direct contradiction to the whole tenor of our Lord's doctrine, who forbade any of his disciples to assume pre-eminence above the rest. (Matt. xviii. 1—4; xxiii. 6—10. Mark ix. 33—35.)

When our Lord said, "Upon this rock (pointing, probably to himself, as in another instance, John ii. 19—22,) will I build my church," he subjoined, "and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it." Now, whether this be understood of Ver. 13. Cesarea Philippi.—[Cesarea Philippi was anciently called Paneas, from the mountain of Panium, or Hermon, at the foot of which it was situated, near the springs of Jordan; but Philip the Tetrarch, the son of Herod the Great, having rebuilt it, gave it the name of Cæsarea in honour of Tiberius, the reigning emperor, and he added his own name to it, to distinguish it from another Cæsarea on the coast of the Mediterranean. It was afterwards named Neronias by the young Agrippa, in honour of Nero, and in the time of William of Tyre, it was called Belinas. It was, according to Josephus, a day's journey from Sidon, and 120 stadia from the lake of Phiala, and, according to Abulfeda, a journey of a day and a half from Damascus. It is now called Banias. Burckhardt says it contains about 150 houses, inhabited by Turks, Greeks, &c. Travels in Syria.]—Barxter.

Ver. 17. Simon Bar jona.—Or, the son of Jonas.

Ver. 18. Thou art Peter.—The Catholics explain the name Peter (Gr. Petros) to mean a rock, but a learned Lexicographer of the 17th century (Edw. Leigh, Esq.) says, "Petros (i. e. Peter) always signifies a stone, never a rock;" which is confirmed by another learned layman, Granville Sharp, Esq., who appeals to the Lexicons of Scapula, Schrevelius, Dawson, Parkhurst, &c., to which might be added, many others of the highest literary authority. The Syro-Chaldaic term Cephas, also simply means a stone. See John i. 41.—"Remarks on an important Passage," &c.—Upon this rock.—Chrysostom says, On this rock, not upon Peter, for he did not build his church upon the man, but upon his faith;" or, as he elsewhere expresses it, "his confession." It has been remarked, that this passage contains a Paronomasia, or play of words, such as is not unfrequent in the Hebrew language: "Thou art Peter (Petros,) a stone; and upon this rock (Petra) will I build my church,' &c. See note on Micah i. 11.—The gates of hell.—Gr. Hades. This phrase is differently explained. Schleusner, who, in his Greek Lexicon, represents hades as sometimes meaning hell, the place of punishment, here understands thereby, the violence and power of the devil, and of all the fierce adversaries of Christ, whose efforts against the church shall be rendered abortive, and remarks, that it was considered in the same light by Chrysostom, the most eloquent of the Greek fathers. But Dr. Campbell, who follows Grotius, here and always explains it in reference to the state of the dead in general, considering death as the gate to the invisible world; and he regards the expression as equivalent to saying, the church shall never die, or become extinct.—On the word Hades, see note on Ps. xvi. 10.

death itself, or of the powers and policy of hell, in both senses it is equally true. Death cannot destroy the hope of a Christian, nor can Satan, with all his angels, either in the way of heresy or infidelity, prevail against the church, so as to overturn it: this is admitted both by Protestants and Roman Catholics.

We now proceed to the much controverted passage which immediately follows, relative to what is called "the power of the keys," which we shall introduce to our readers in the eloquent and impressive language of Bp. Horsley: "The kingdom of heaven is the church of God. Formerly, the Jewish church was that kingdom: it is now, the Christian church. The true church is represented in this text (ver. 18,) as in many passages of holy writ, under the image of a walled city, to be entered only at the gates. Under the Mosaic economy, these gates were shut, and particular persons only could gain admittance; Israelites by birth, or by legal incorporation. The locks of these gates were the rites of the Mosaic law, which obstructed the entrance of aliens. But after our Lord's ascension, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, the keys of the city were given to St. Peter, by that vision which taught him, and authorized him to teach others, that all distinctions of one nation from another were at an end. By virtue of this special commission, the great Apostle applied the key, pushed back the bolt of the lock, and threw the gates of the city open for the admission of the whole Gentile world, in the instance of Cornelius and his family. To this, and to this only, our Lord prophetically alludes, when he promises to St. Peter the custody of the keys. No authority over the rest of the apostles was given to St. Peter, by the promise made to him in either, or in both its branches; nor was any right conveyed to him, which could descend from him to his successors in any see. The promise was simply a prediction that he would be selected to be the first instrument in a great work of providence, which was of such a nature as to be done once for all; and being done, it cannot be repeated. The great apostle fulfilled his commission in his lifetime. He applied his key; he turned back the lock, he loosed and he bound. The gates of the kingdom of heaven are thrown open; the ceremonial law is abrogated; the moral is confirmed, and the successor of St. Peter can give neither furtherance nor obstruction to the business."

This opinion of priority in service, not supremacy in power, being conferred upon the Apostle Peter on this occasion, is maintained by several of the Christian Fathers, particularly by Tertullian, who says, "He, in the administration of Christian baptism, did first unlock the entrance into the kingdom of heaven;" that is, unto the Gentiles. And we think it not improbable, that by connecting Peter's name thus honourably with his own, our Lord might intimate to Peter the favour he intended to confer on him, in laying the first stone of the Apostolic church upon Christ, the Rock of our salvation. (See Acts iv. 10—12; x. 34; xv. 7.)

Ver. 21—28. Jesus gradually prepares his disciples for the painful scene of his sufferings, and inculcates upon them the importance of their own preparation for death and judgment.—As they had deeply imbibed the common prejudice of their countrymen in favour of Messiah's temporal reign, it required no small address to reconcile them (as well as others) to the doctrine of Messiah's sufferings and death on the cross, as we may see by the incident now before us. "That be far from thee, Lord!" said Peter; or, as the Greek literally reads, "Mercy on thee, Lord! this shall not be unto thee." Peter, in his own apprehension, was probably willing himself rather to suffer and to die, than that his Master should: but he neither knew his own weakness, nor the folly of his suggestion. He had presumed to rebuke his Master, but in return he receives a most severe rebuke, "Get thee behind me, Satan;" as if Jesus had said, "Thou art my adversary, and not my friend, to oppose me in the fulfilment of my engagements; and in attempting to set aside God's plan of salvation. Thou art an offence, a scandal unto me." Thus it is that many, in every age, would set aside the doctrine of the Cross, by the merit of their own righteousness. They wish to be saved (if salvation it may be called) in a way more congenial to their own notions of propriety. But what saith our Lord? "If any man will come after me," that is, be my disciple, "let him take up his cross and follow me." A follower of Christ without a Cross, is like a soldier without his uniform, or a servant out of livery, who does no honour to his Master; for the Cross is the badge of all true Christians. Now the import of this Cross is, to deny ourselves in every thing inconsistent with the will of Christ, and to renounce ourselves in every thing that interferes with his glory; that is, in short, to say with St. Paul, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ!" (Gal. vi. 14.)

It is, however, chiefly in the sense of suffering persecution, that the expression is here used; in order to understand which it is necessary for the mere English reader to be informed, that the Scriptures (both Hebrew and Greek) use the same word both for the animal life, and for the immortal soul. "Whoever, therefore, (says our Lord,) will save his life," by apostacy, to avoid persecution for my sake, "shall lose it;" that is, shall lose his soul; "and (or but) whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it;" that is, he shall find eternal life. "For what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own (life, or his) soul?" or what shall a man give in exchange for either? It is only, we apprehend, by combining the two-fold sense of the original term, that we can fully comprehend this argument of our divine teacher. A man, by using improper means to save his life, may lose his soul; or, on the other hand, he may save his soul by the surrender of his life in Christ's cause.

In the concluding verses of this chapter, our Lord makes an estimate of the value of the human soul; and in order to this, he places before our view the awful scenes of an eternal judgment, the glories of his mediatorial kingdom, and the splendours of the burning throne; and he weighs the worth of the soul against the worthlessness of the world. Or, as that great master of reasoning, Locke, expresses it, Jesus Christ "puts infinite happiness into one scale, and infinite misery into the other;" and, as Mr. L. adds, "If the worst that comes to the pious man, if he be mistaken, (namely, annihilation,) be the best that the wicked man can attain unto if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture?" We shall conclude this very important topic with a few interesting hints from Henry. 1. Man has a soul of infinite value. 2. That soul is in danger of being lost. 3. If lost, it must be the sinner's own fault; he must lose it. 4. One soul is of more worth than all the world. He saith so, who had reason to know their value, for he redeemed them; and who is not likely to undervalue the world, for he made it. 5.

Ver. 21. From that time forth—That is, at different times after this, as opportunity permitted.

Ver. 22. To rebuke him.—This implies great presumption in Peter, and our Lord's answer shows that it was so considered by his Master.—Be it far from thee!—Marg. "Pity thyself;" but others render it, still more literally, "Mercy on thee, Lord!" The use of this expression in the LXX. answers to "God forbid!" and is so translated, 1 Sa. xiv. 45.; 1 Ch. xi. 19.; also, 1 Mac. ii. 21. See Campbell.

Ver. 23. Satan.—The word signifies an adversary: see notes on Job i. 6. Zec. iii. 1. Our Lord means to say, that Peter did not speak like a friend, but like an enemy: in fact, he pursued the same conduct that Satan himself did when he tempted our Lord to give up his course of suffering, by offering him "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them." Mat. iv. 8—10.—Thou art an offence —Greek, Scandal, or stumbling block; that is, by this temptation, Peter put a stumbling-block in the way of his Lord's duty.

Ver. 24. Come after me.—It is the part of a disciple to follow his Master both in his instructions and example.—Take up his cross. See note on chap. x. 38.

Ver. 26. And lose his own soul.—The word here rendered lose, is different from that in the verse preceding; and Campbell says forfeit is the term which comes nearest to the original, and is therefore adopted by Boothroyd.—In exchange. Doddridge. "As a ransom."

Ver. 28. Shall not taste of death.—To taste, or to see death, is a common Hebraism for dying.—Campbell.—The Son of man coming in his kingdom —[This appears to refer to the Mediatorial kingdom which our Lord was about to set up by the destruction of the Jewish nation and polity, and the diffusion of the gospel throughout the world.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The transfiguration of Christ. 14 He healeth the lunatic, 22 foretelleth his own Passion, 24 and payeth tribute.

AND [a] after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart,

2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the [b] sun, and his raiment was white as the light.

3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.

4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

5 While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice [c] out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in [d] whom I am well pleased; hear [e] ye him.

6 And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7 And Jesus came and touched [f] them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid.

8 And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only.

The winning of the world is often the losing of the soul. Lastly, if now lost, it is lost for ever; for "there remains no more sacrifice for sin." (Heb. x. 26.)

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—13. The transfiguration of Christ.—A scene of glory now bursts upon us, such as has seldom beamed on earth. About a week after the preceding conversation, Jesus taketh his three favourite disciples, Peter, James, and John, with him into a high mountain, apart by themselves. On such an occasion, we might have expected the twelve to have been all present; but he who knew, better than we do, what was proper, chose to select only three. But why are the same three, on almost all occasions, selected? Is not this a system of favouritism? Alas! how weak is man! We think we have a right to bestow our charities, and confer our favours, as we please; yet we dare to charge our Maker with partiality, for bestowing that on others which he withholds from us: but "he giveth not account of any of his matters." (Job xxxiii. 13.)

So it pleased the Saviour to distinguish these three disciples, and they were admitted to behold an intercourse between earth and heaven. A deputation (if we may use that term) descended from the skies; and Moses, the lawgiver of Israel, and Elijah, the chief of the prophets, held a conversation with Jesus, the Saviour of mankind. Surely never was an interview so calculated to excite human curiosity. And what could be the subject of their conversation? Was it the magnitude and strength and glory of the Roman empire? Ah, no! Was it the recovery of the liberty of the Jewish nation? No. Was it the state of Greek and Roman literature? Not a word about it. What then could engage the attention of earth and heaven? St. Luke informs us that "they spake of the decease which he (Jesus) should accomplish at Jerusalem." The very subject which, but a few days before, so offended Peter, that he presumed to reprimand his Master for only hinting at it. But what said Peter now? Alas! both he and they that were with him, were heavy with sleep, and probably heard little or nothing of this conversation. They had, however, a glimpse of the celestial glory before it was withdrawn, and Peter was so charmed with it, that he proposed the erection of three booths, or tabernacles, in honour of his Master and the two celestial visiters, "not knowing what he said," as Luke says, and perhaps scarcely awake, when "a cloud came and overshadowed them," and the scene closed with a repetition of the testimony afore borne to Jesus on his baptism. (Luke ix. 30—35; compare Matt. iii. 17.)

But we must revert again to their conversation, for it seems strange that Moses and Elias should appear so deeply interested in a topic with which Peter was offended and disgusted. What could interest Moses? Probably he would trace, with high satisfaction, the accomplishment of those types which he had delivered 2000 years before. And what could command the peculiar attention of Elijah the prophet? Surely he must be struck with the accomplishment of a series of predictions, which had been in the course of delivery during 4000 years; and which, by the prophets themselves, were, in many instances probably, but imperfectly understood. (1 Pet. i. 10—12.)

In coming down from the mountain, Jesus charged his disciples not to relate the circumstances of this vision till after his resurrection. This produced a question from the disciples, the ground of which does not clearly appear in the narrative. They had heard from the scribes, no doubt in objection to the claims of their Master, that Elias was to come before Messiah; they had seen Elias, and therefore seemed to think it right that they should publish it, as it might remove that objection: but Jesus gives them to understand, that John the Baptist was the Elias intended by the prophet, whose predicted office it was to "make the crooked straight, and the rough places plain," and thus to prepare the way of the Messiah, by a national alarm and reformation. (Compare Mal. iv. 5, with Luke iii. 4—6: also Matt. xi. 13, 14.)

We are not always able to fathom the designs of God in his providential dispensations, and sometimes it might be presumptuous to attempt it: but in the present case, three obvious ends present themselves. 1. This vision might prepare the faith of the disciples for their approaching trial. The attestation of heaven to the divine mission of their Master might fortify their minds against any doubts arising from his future sufferings: and, 2. It might in some measure reconcile their minds to their propriety, since they had here an anticipation of the glory which was to succeed. And, 3. As they would be required each to take up his cross and follow him, so they were encouraged to expect, that after partaking of our Saviour's sufferings, they should likewise participate in his celestial glory. Now some such effects did, in fact, take place, for though Peter seems to have lost all impressions from the scene when his Master was betrayed, yet many years afterwards, when he wrote his Second General Epistle, he recollects the fact with much apparent joy, and to the confirmation of his faith. "This voice, which came from heaven, we heard when we were with him in the mount," attesting the divinity of our Saviour's character and mission. (2 Peter i. 16—18.)

Ver. 14—27. The epileptic demoniac cured. Christ payeth tribute.—Some time previous to this, it appears that the apostles were endowed with the power of working miracles, and particularly of casting out demons, (chap. x. 8,) and this is the only instance we have on record of their failure in such an attempt. But before we inquire into the cause of their failure, we must notice the cure effected by our Lord himself. A certain man brings his boy to Jesus, who was not only deaf and dumb, but also troubled with epileptic fits, or the falling sickness, and had been so from his infancy. This complication of misfortunes proceeded from the influence of an evil demon, as appears in the sequel, (ver. 18,) and is more fully stated by the other evangelists. The agency of Satan and his demons, in the infliction of disease and trouble on mankind, is a doctrine which, however mysterious and inexplicable it may appear, runs through the whole of the Scriptures, and cannot, we think, be explained away without offering them great

Ver. 6. Were sore afraid.—They seem to have supported the glory of the scene with pleasure, but the voice terrified them. Compare Jn. xii. 28, 29.

Ver. 8. Saw no man—Neither Moses nor Elias.

Ver. 11. And restore all things.—Restore is certainly the primary sense of the original, but we conceive it means, to reform, or rectify, both here and in Ac. iii. 21. See Isa. xl. 3, 4, and compare note on Mat. iii. 3.

Ver. 12. Whatsoever they listed—Or chose.——Also suffer of them—That is, suffer persecution and death, as John had done, though in a different way.

Ver. 15. Lunatic.—The Greek term used by Matthew, exactly corresponds with this, and means, influenced by the moon, (Luna,) which is said to be remarkably the case in epilepsy, which Dr. Mead informs us was often distin-

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Christ warneth his disciples to be humble and harmless: 7 to avoid offences, and not to despise the little ones: 15 teacheth how we are to deal with our brethren, when they offend us: 21 and how oft to forgive them: 23 which he setteth forth by a parable of the king, that took account of his servants, 32 and punished him, who showed no mercy to his fellow.

AT [a] the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

2 And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,

3 And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be [b] converted, and become as little [c] children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4 Whosoever therefore shall humble himself [d] as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

5 And whoso shall receive one such little [e] child in my name receiveth me.

6 But whoso shall offend [f] one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

7 ¶ Wo unto the world because of offences!

violence. It is not pretended that this lad was not diseased; but his disease, though inflicted by divine permission, was allowed, like Job's, to come through the instrumentality of Satan and his demons, the final end of which doubtless was, to advance the glory of the Saviour by his cure; and if, at the same time, the youth was received into the number of his disciples, who shall say that this was not a recompense for all his previous sufferings?

But how was it the disciples could not cast this demon out? The disciples themselves privately propose this question to their Master: let us hear his answer: "Because of your unbelief." The faith here referred to, is evidently that of miracles; for most certain it is, that faith was required, both in those who applied for miraculous cures, and in those who attempted to perform them. It was deficiency in the latter case which here brought the disciples under our Lord's reproof.

It is added, (ver. 21,) "Howbeit this kind goeth not out, but by prayer and fasting." Here arise two questions. 1. Are there different kinds of demons? The text implies as much; and in all probability there may be as great a variety in spiritual as in material beings. Indeed, of this we shall find evident intimations. (See Col. i. 16. 1 Pet. iii. 22.) 2. What is meant by some (particularly by this kind) not going out, but by prayer and fasting? This is reasonably supposed to allude to express acts of devotion, which their master had prescribed, and they had neglected. But how one thing can be more difficult than another to the power of God, (and it is certainly by his power alone that these miracles were wrought,) is to us, we confess, inexplicable, and we can find no assistance from commentators.

Jesus remained some time in Galilee after this event, and while he continued there, took another opportunity seriously to impress upon them the important truth, that he must be slain, and afterwards arise from the dead; a doctrine which, of all others, they were most reluctant to receive. With us, indeed, the fact admits of no question, that Christ "both died and rose again:" but we are still negligent and forgetful of the great truths connected with these events. How little faith do we act on his atonement! How little sympathy do we feel in his extreme sufferings!

But this chapter concludes with an incident of a very different kind from the preceding. Josephus informs us, that every Jew used to pay half a shekel (or about fourteen pence of our money) annually for the support of the temple worship, and this is thought to be the tribute here required. As the Son of God, he might have claimed exemption from paying tribute in his Father's house; but, as he has taught us in his sermon on the mount, in many cases rather to suffer wrong than to resist, (chap. v. 46;) so hath he thus set us the example, by working a miracle rather than give any unnecessary offence. This tribute seems here demanded, both for Jesus and for Peter; the former as head of the family, and the latter as householder, or master of the house in which Jesus now resided with him. The miracle does not necessarily suppose the creation of a piece of silver coin; it will equally display his omniscience in directing Peter to draw up a fish which had accidentally swallowed such a coin. Bishop Hall thus beautifully improves this incident, in a devotional address: "How should this encourage our dependance upon that omnipotent hand of thine, (O Lord!) which hath heaven, earth, sea, at thy disposing! Still thou art the same for thy members which thou wert for thyself, the Head. Rather than offence shall be given to the world, by a seeming neglect of thy dear children, thou wilt cause the very fowls of heaven to bring them meat, and the fish of the sea to bring them money. O let us look up ever to thee, by the eye of our faith, and not be wanting in our dependence upon thee, who canst not be wanting in thy providence over us."

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—20. Lessons on humility, on offences, and on prayer.—From the narrative here brought before us, it should seem that the peculiar attention which our Lord showed to his three favoured disciples, Peter, James, and John, was in some measure abused by them; and that our Lord's words to Peter, in particular, were from the beginning misconstrued, as giving a degree of pre-eminence which never was intended. It must have been such a claim as this, that first occasioned a dispute by the way, as noticed by the evangelist Mark, which of them should be the greatest; and probably afterwards, when they sat down, either to rest or dine, Matthew, or some other of the apostles, complained of the assumption of the three above named, and brought the question before their Master, who was already acquainted with all their differences and debates, and took a happy method effectually to terminate the contest.

On this circumstance, Townsend (above quoted) observes—"The ambitious dispute of the disciples concerning their precedency in the kingdom of heaven, proves that not even the repeated predictions of our Saviour's sufferings and death, could banish from the minds of his followers their preconceived ideas respecting the Messiah's kingdom. To correct this prevailing error, our Saviour now resorts to a different mode of undeceiving them. He places a little child before them, assuring them that unless they were converted, that is, unless they became as unambitious and as humble, as mild, as meek, and as regardless of all temporal power and distinctions, as a little child, they could not even be admitted into the kingdom of heaven. Humility is the characteristic virtue of Christianity; and the highest rewards of heaven are promised to the humblest; for "he that is least among you all, the same shall be great."

Thus, taking children as the models of his true disciples, our Lord, in very strong language, cautions all his followers against treating with neglect or contempt, either children, literally understood, or disciples of a childlike disposition. As to the former, his precept has been almost as much neglected as the command for missionary exertions; for what, until within these very few years, has been done for the education, more than for the conversion of the world? Happily, Christians of most denominations seem to be awaking from the slumber of centuries, and "bestirring themselves" in these important works.

The arguments used by our Lord are two-fold. 1. Every one that is "ignorant and out of the way," should be considered as a lost sheep; his salvation to be sought with as much ardour as if it were a whole flock; and if any one perish, the cause is not to be resolved into the divine will, as has been too often done; but their loss will involve a heavy responsibility on those who neglect to seek them. 2. However contemptuously the world may look on simple children, or on Christ's poor and humble disciples, angels of high celestial rank wait on them with pleasure and delight. Yes! ye who teach the first elements of language and of religion, angels do not disdain to wait upon your humble pupils.

The next subjects treated by our Lord, are those of offences, and the duty of mutual forgiveness. In the sermon on the mount, our Lord has anticipated some things, treated here more at large. Nothing can be farther from the temper and spirit of Christianity than revenge; and Christians, so far from being allowed to indulge it, are taught, in all cases of supposed injury, first to seek reconciliation, by every reasonable and practicable means. If, for instance, a Christian brother offend, the first step is, to procure a private audience, and reason with him calmly on the subject. The next step is, to take a common friend with us, who may mediate and remonstrate with him: and should this measure prove equally unavailing, the only remaining process is, (if the matter be of sufficient importance,) to lay it, at least, before the heads of the church, or Christian society to which he belongs; who, if they fail in recovering him to his duty, may find it necessary to exclude him from their community, that he may bring no disgrace on their society, or on the Christian name. Their authority in binding or loosing, in such a case, if founded on Scriptural principles, and accompanied with solemn prayer, will then be ratified in heaven; and a person thus excluded, ought no more to be considered as a Christian brother, though still a neighbour, or fellow-man. This, or something very much like it, is said to have been formerly the practice of the Jews, and of the primitive Christian Church; and most denominations of Christians have adopted a similar course, so far as their respective rules of ecclesiastical discipline would allow. Here we find "the power of the keys," as it is called, extended not only to the other apostles, but to all societies of faithful Christians; for prayer, we know, can open and shut heaven, as in the case of Elijah, (James v. 13—20;) and our Lord here assures us, that when two or three are gathered together, and unite in any request, (with a proper deference to the divine will,) it shall be done for them. When a church, or society of Christians, are met together to consider the conduct of a fallen brother; when they offer their united prayers for divine illumination in the name of Christ; and form their determination under the direction of his word; then is the Saviour "in the midst of them," and whether they bind or loose, whatever they bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; or whatever they loose or unbind, shall be in like manner ratified on high. We shall only here add, that upon this promise, Dr. Pye Smith founds an argument in favour of our Lord's divinity; "for were he a creature only, how could he be present at various and distant places at one and the same time?"

Ver. 21—35. The parable of the unforgiving servant.—Perhaps there is no duty so much neglected among Christians as that of mutual forgiveness; nor any duty, merely moral, so strongly and repeatedly inculcated by our Lord. The general pretence is, "I am the injured party, and am ready to forgive on the offender making a proper acknowledgment of his offence;" but this is not God's method. He is the offended party; but he does not wait for our submission, or entreaty; he sends special messengers to "beseech us to be reconciled to him." (2 Cor. v. 20.) This is not Christ's rule: he does not say, "If thy brother offend thee," and is penitent, and comes to ask pardon, then forgive him, and be reconciled. No; but go and speak privately to him, and try to regain his confidence and good will; and if he listen to thee, "thou hast gained thy brother!" thou hast won an immortal soul! But we must not rest here: we must pursue the offender with importunity, and take, if necessary, two or three more brethren, and endeavour, if possible, to convince him of his fault; and even if this fail, the whole society, or congregation, with which he stands connected, must be pressed into the service, to procure a reconciliation, before the object must be abandoned. Such is the law of our Master; but it is an inquiry well deserving our attention—Do we obey it?

Scholiast on the Equites of Aristophanes. "When a person was drowned, they hung a weight about his neck."]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. It must needs be that offences come.—Yes! where there is sin, there must needs be sorrow; and while men's minds remain unhumbled, offences will continually arise.

Ver. 10. Their angels do always behold the face of my Father.—The highest officers in the Oriental courts, are described as those who see the king's face; the expression may therefore mean, angels of the higher ranks. Compare Esther i. 14. with Re. i. 4. But though this text undoubtedly proves the ministry of angels, it by no means proves that any persons have guardian angels to attend them individually.

Ver. 12. And goeth into the mountains.—Campbell, "Will he not leave the ninety and nine upon the mountains, and go in quest of the stray?" So Vulgate and Syriac. So Doddridge.

Ver. 15. Tell him his fault.—Doddridge says the Greek word signifies "to convince, as well as to admonish." Not to rail, or to abuse, but to reason calmly, and on Christian principles.

Ver. 17. The church.—A congregation of faithful men gathered together in the name of Christ. See verse 20.——As a heathen man, &c.—Maimonides speaks of private admonition; then before witnesses; and if that failed, then they proclaimed an incorrigible person in the synagogue.

26 The servant therefore fell down, and [b] worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

27 Then the lord of that servant was moved with [c] compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

28 But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him a hundred [d] pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest.

29 And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, [e] Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

30 And he would not: but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

31 So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done.

32 Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked [f] servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me:

CHAPTER XIX.

2 Christ healeth the sick: 3 answereth the Pharisees concerning divorcement: 10 showeth when marriage is necessary: 13 receiveth little children: 16 instructeth the young man how to attain eternal life, 20 and how to be perfect: 23 telleth his disciples how hard it is for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, 27 and promiseth reward to those that forsake any thing to follow him.

AND it came to pass, that when Jesus had [a] finished these sayings, he [a] departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea beyond Jordan;

2 And great multitudes followed him; and he healed them there.

3 ¶ The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that [b] he which made them at the beginning made them male and female,

5 And said, For [c] this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh?

6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What [d] therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

7 They say unto him, Why [e] did Moses then

Peter was no doubt a good man, and much attached to his divine Master. He was willing to forgive, and probably to forget injuries; for he was of a frank and open temper, but perhaps thought he had been trifled with by some of his brethren, whom he had repeatedly forgiven. What! says he, am I to forgive them seven times over? "No!" replies our Lord, "I say not, until seven times, but until seventy times seven!" Now let us attend to this parable of our Saviour: A certain king had an unfaithful servant, who defrauded him of 10,000 talents. By the law and custom of nations, he was liable to be sold, with all his family, to make reparation to the state. But he was overwhelmed with misery, and implored mercy; and even promised, if time were given him, to make good the whole. To the latter part of this promise his lord seems to have paid no attention; nor does the Almighty regard the silly promises of sinners to make reparation for their offences. When God forgives, he forgives like a king—like the king in the parable—he forgives the whole.

But what did this servant? Instead of imitating the conduct of his lord, as those ignorant of the depravity of human nature might expect, he acts just the reverse. Finding a poor fellow-servant who owed him about three pounds sterling, or $13, he suddenly and violently arrests him, and casts him into prison. The other servants, struck with the flagrancy of this conduct, inform their royal master, who immediately visits upon him all his sins; and who, in earth or in heaven, can say that he acted unjustly?

But let us hear our Lord's concluding remark, which contains the moral, "the very pith and marrow of the parable." "So likewise shall my heavenly Father do unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Here almost every word is emphatic. We must, "every one" of us forgive his offending brother, and forgive him "from our hearts;" otherwise God will not forgive us, but cast us into the prison of hell, with the devil and his angels, who are no less ready to torment than they are to tempt. (Chap. xxv. 41.)

In this parable, it has been remarked, there are three things set in opposition; namely, 1. A sovereign and his servant, or God and man. 2. The enormity of our sins is set in opposition to the petty offences of our brethren against us. And, 3. The infinite liberality of providence to men, compared with their cruel conduct toward each other. "And can I, (may the Christian say,) after such a forcible appeal as this, ungenerously retain anger in my breast against an offending fellow-creature? Can I, while indulging the hope that God, my heavenly Father, has forgiven me millions of the greatest and most aggravated offences, and will not bring them into judgment, nor remember them any more for ever; can I indulge an unforgiving or revengeful temper towards my fellow-creature, or fellow-christian? God forbid! Let me not, O Lord, by any subterfuge, deceive myself (herein;) may I freely and fully forgive, as thou dost; and not, while I profess to discard revenge, still retain a fretting remembrance of the injury."—(Ward's Reflections on the Word of God, p. 69.)

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—15. On matrimony and divorces.—From the simple fact of one pair only being at first created, several important inferences are drawn. 1. From mankind

Ver. 24. Ten thousand talents.—According to Prideaux, the Roman talent was equal to $959 90 cents; ten thousand of which would amount to $9,599,000. If the Jewish talent of silver be designed, which is estimated by the same learned writer at $1,999 80, this sum amounts to $19,998,000; but if the gold talent is meant, which is equal to $31,996 80, then the amount is $319,968,000. [The value of ten thousand silver talents, according to the table adopted in this book, is $15,188,300, and of the like number of gold talents, $242,174,000.] This immense sum represents our boundless obligations to God, and our utter incapacity, as sinners infinitely indebted to Divine Justice, of paying one mite out of the talent.

Ver. 25. His lord commanded him to be sold, &c.—This was the custom, not only among the Jews, but also among the heathen; in Asia, at Athens, and at Rome. Orient. Cust. No. 1194.

Ver. 28. A hundred pence—Or, in our money, $13 87—[Which was not one six hundred thousandth part of the amount of the 10,000 talents, even calculating them as Roman talents.]—Bagster.——Took.—Literally, "seized" him.

Ver. 34. The tormentors.—Properly, those who examined prisoners by torture, which office was often assigned to jailers. It was also common to load such prisoners with chains of iron, and heavy yokes of wood, and to visit them with frequent scourging; the object of their imprisonment was, the infliction of misery, which, from the general character of jailers, was often carried beyond the rigour of the law.

Ver. 35. So likewise, &c.—An unforgiving, revengeful spirit, is an infallible evidence of an impenitent, graceless heart. If men do not from their heart forgive those trespasses against them, God will deal with them with that unmixed justice which the King in the parable exercised towards his merciless servant. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you again," is a perfect definition of exact justice. We should be extremely cautious in forming theological arguments on the circumstances of a parable. By disregarding this simple caution, you may form opinions subversive of the doctrines and morality of the Bible. For example, in the parable of the unjust steward, you may, by forming arguments on the circumstances of the parable, make the Lord commend unrighteousness. See Luke xvi. 8.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1. He departed.—[This was our Lord's final departure from Galilee, previous to his crucifixion; but he appears to have taken in a large compass in his journey, and passed through the districts east of Jordan.] —Bagster.

Ver. 3. For every cause.—There was a debate between the Rabbins of the schools of Sammai and of Hillel, respecting the meaning of Moses, in De. xxiv. 1, as to the ground of divorce; the former explaining the term "uncleanness," morally, in reference to adultery; the latter contending that it included every matter of dislike.

Ver. 4. He which made.—Doddridge, "The Creator, from the beginning, made (them) male and female:" meaning, no doubt, our first parents.——And said—That is, God said; but in Ge. ii. 24, the words are attributed to Adam. But this is no contradiction; as God is said to say whatever is spoken by others under inspiration.

Ver. 5. Shall cleave.—["Shall be cemented to his wife," as the Hebrew davak implies; a beautiful metaphor, forcibly intimating that nothing but death can separate them.]—Bagster.——They twain (or two) shall be one flesh.—The word twain, or two, however, is not, at present, in the Hebrew text of Ge. ii. 24, though many think it was originally; Dr. Kennicott remarks, that it is in the Samaritan text, and in all the ancient versions; and that it is so quoted by our Lord here, (also Mark x. 8,) and by St. Paul twice. Cudworth also thought that the word was quite necessary to the sense. Dr. Clarke adds, "That this is the genuine reading, I have no doubt." So Campbell, Boothroyd, &c.

Ver. 6. Hath joined together.—[" Hath yoked together," as oxen in the plough, where each must pull equally in order to bring it on. Among the ancients, they put a yoke upon the necks of a new married couple, or chains on their arms, to show that they were to be one, closely united, and pulling equally together in all the concerns of life.]—Bagster.——Let no man put asunder.—This implies, 1. That matrimony is a divine institution; and, 2. That it can only be dissolved on the ground stated in the divine law.

command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

9 And I say unto you, Whosoever [f] shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to [g] marry.

11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

13 ¶ Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.

14 But Jesus said, Suffer [i] little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such [j] is the kingdom of heaven.

15 And he laid his hands on them and departed thence.

16 ¶ And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what [k] good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

18 He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt [l] do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, 19 Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou [m] shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

20 The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?

21 Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go [n] and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow [o] me.

22 But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That [p] a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24 And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25 When his disciples heard it, they were ex-being created male and female, it is evident that matrimony is the natural state of man; for had man been intended for a state of celibacy, (or a single life,) women were made in vain. 2. From one only of each sex being formed, it is equally clear that polygamy was not man's natural state. 3. As to divorces, though allowed in some cases, as a remedy for improper marriages, they ought only to be allowed in cases of infidelity.

On the latter subject, however, the scribes and Pharisees had introduced many abuses, which called loudly for a reform; for they maintained that a man might put away his wife for every trifling cause, when the real cause was, generally, the desire to have another: thus he committed adultery himself; his wife also, by being liberated, was tempted to live in adultery with another man, and that man, by living with her, became also an adulterer. Thus was the crime shamefully propagated, by means of these divorces, to a great extent.

But the Pharisees pleaded the authority of their lawgiver: "Moses did command;" referring, doubtless, to Deut. xxiv. 1. "When a man hath taken a wife, and hath found some uncleanness in her," meaning moral pollution, (see our Note,) "let him write her a bill of divorcement," &c. To this our Lord answers, that this was merely a permission, "Moses suffered you;" and that only because of the hardness of your hearts, and to prevent some worse evil.

Upon this some of our Lord's disciples remark, that such being the case, it were better not to marry: this our Lord admits only in some few instances, since no inconveniences were to be compared with the guilt of a life of fornication, which was frequently the consequence (in the male sex at least) of a single life, for which but few are by nature fitted: an argument of great force against the compulsive celibacy of the clergy, (as enjoined in the church of Rome,) and against monastic institutions, which have often proved nests of vice; and will do so, whenever persons who have not by nature the gift of continence, are enticed or forced into them, of which many unhappy instances have occurred, and do frequently occur.

After this discussion, and perhaps before it was well closed, several of the poor inhabitants of the neighbourhood brought to Jesus Christ their little children, that he might lay his hands upon them and bless them, as Jacob did his sons and grandsons, (Gen. xlviii. xlix.,) and as was often practised by patriarchs and prophets. And it is probable they were the rather induced to this, from hearing of the charge he gave respecting little children but a short time before. (Chap. xviii. 2.) His apostles, however, being probably otherwise engaged themselves, and perhaps suspecting (as the case proved) that they should have another lesson on humility, put back the children, and rebuked the parents for attempting to disturb their Master. Jesus observing this, rebuked his disciples, repeated his maxim on the necessity of their becoming like these little children, upon whom he kindly put his hands, blessing and praying for them. This is a circumstance very encouraging to those who bestow their labours in the instruction of children, as it affords good reason to believe that they will not go unrewarded.

Ver. 16—30. The young ruler repulsed, and the danger of riches.—Luke says this young man was a ruler; Matthew, that he was rich; and Mark, that he came running and kneeling; which circumstances combined show, that though a young man of rank and property, he was neither haughty nor morose, but affable and courteous; he had also received a religious education, and kept the commandments from his youth up. We need not wonder, therefore, when we read that Jesus "loved him" for his amiable character and disposition. The language also in which he addressed our Saviour, was highly respectful, and showed a confidence in him as an able teacher; for it was the same in which the Jewish doctors liked to be addressed: "Good Master! what good thing shall I do, that I may have (or inherit) eternal life?"

Amiable as he was, and as he appeared, Jesus begins with reproving him. "Why callest thou me Good! There is none (absolutely) good but one (that is) God," or but God only. But if thou wilt enter into life on the principle of thine own goodness, "keep the commandments," and he immediately enumerates those of the second table; to which the amiable youth instantly answers, "All these have I kept from my youth up;" flattering himself, no doubt, that he should receive the approbation of our Saviour. But how great must have been his disappointment, when Jesus, with a look both of anxiety and affection, told him, One thing thou lackest! but that one thing is absolutely necessary to the completion of thy character, to make thee perfect, and before thou canst put in any claim to eternal life. Thou art rich: but if thou wilt be my

Others who make themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake; i. e. who devote themselves to a single life, that they may be more at liberty to propagate the gospel, as appears to have been the case with the Apostle Paul. See 1 Co. vii. throughout. The case is now, however, somewhat different, and married men are found to be far the most useful missionaries, especially in the business of female education, which, in these early ages, was never thought of.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Christ, by the similitude of the labourers in the vineyard, showeth that God is debtor unto no man: 17 foretelleth his passion: 20 by answering the mother of Zebedee's children teacheth his disciples to be lowly: 30 and giveth two blind men their sight.

FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, [a] which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard.

2 And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny [b] a day, he sent them into his vineyard.

3 And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place,

4 And said unto them; Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise.

6 And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day [c] idle?

7 They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto [d] them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

8 So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and [e] give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

9 And when they came that were hired about the eleventh [f] hour, they received every man a penny:

disciple; if thou wilt have eternal life; "sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven:" and then, when thou hast given such a proof of thine attachment to God, and religion, in preference to the world—Then "Come and follow me."

Alas! the most tremendous clap of thunder heard at Sinai could not have more alarmed this hopeful young man, than this dreadful announcement. "He went away sorrowful, for he was very rich." Behold! he who but just now came running, and kneeling to the Saviour—behold, he turns his back, and walks grieved and sorrowful away.

"How many lovely qualities (says the excellent Dr. Watts) are here spoiled at once, by the love of this world! and a man that was not far from the kingdom of God, divided from Christ, and driven to a fatal distance from heaven, by this dangerous interposing snare! A wretched chain, though it was a golden one, that withheld his soul from the embraces of his Saviour. He was young; he was modest, and humble; he had a desire to be saved, and he went far in the outward forms of godliness; all these commands (said he) have I kept from my youth, (or childhood:) and he had a mind to follow Christ too; but Jesus was poor, and his followers must take up their cross, and share in his poverty. This was the parting point; this was the bar to his salvation: he was almost a Christian, but his riches prevented him from being altogether so. O fatal wealth, and foolish possessor!"

Our Lord's improvement of this incident is, "that a rich man can hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven:" that, in fact, it is impossible by any power short of that of God, with whom "all things are possible." Peter seeing the unhappy issue of this incident, that the young ruler would not "forsake all" to follow Jesus, ventures to remind his Master, that he and his fellow apostles had done this, and inquires what reward they shall have. Jesus, in reply, assures him, that none shall lose by serving him: but, on the contrary, that great shall be their reward in heaven. That himself and others, who had "followed him in the regeneration," or the commencement of his kingdom, through all its trials or persecutions, should, in the sequel, partake with him in the triumphs of its consummation. From sufferings and martyrdom, they should be advanced to thrones; and, when separated from all their earthly kindred, should be received to the marriage supper of the Lamb. But, adds he, beware that ye do not deceive yourselves, for many that are (now) first, that stand high in privilege, if they abuse their situation, may be degraded to the lowest seats, while those who were among the lowest and last of my disciples, shall then be placed on the first and highest seats in glory.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—16. The parable of the householder and his labourers.—The best illustration we have met with of the imagery of this parable, is in the celebrated Morier's Second Journey through Persia, (p. 265.) Speaking of a large square in Hamadan, which served as a market-place, he says, "Here we observed every morning, before the sun rose, that a numerous band of peasants were collected, with spades in their hands, waiting, as they informed us, to be hired for the day, to work in the surrounding fields. This custom .... forcibly struck me (says M. Morier) as a most happy illustration of our Saviour's parable of the labourers in the vineyard, particularly when passing by the same place late in the day, we still found others standing idle, and remembered his words, Why stand ye here all the day idle? as most applicable to their situation: for in putting the very same question to them, they answered, Because no man hath hired us." As to the method, or rule, of rewarding these labourers, we have here no information: it was natural to suppose they should be paid according to the time they were employed; and thus reasoning, the Jews, from the priority of their call to the knowledge of the true God, doubtless valued themselves before proselytes; and much more before the Gentiles: but "God's ways are not our ways," nor is his conduct formed on our maxims of equity; it would be the extreme of absurdity to suppose this. We may venture to remark, that upon our own estimate, the length of their services would be greatly counterbalanced by their neglect and disobedience. Perhaps, however, the parable may be illustrated in reference to the cases of individuals. God has promised to reward every man according to his works; but we apprehend this may be understood in reference to the energy and fidelity shown in his service, rather than with regard to the length of their services. Were our good and evil deeds to be weighed against each other, as some persons suppose, there would indeed be a fearful balance against the best of us. Some who commence a religious course from their infancy, in consequence of a pious education, show so little zeal and decision in the cause, as often to leave their religion doubtful through life; while others, who are called, as it were, at the eleventh hour, are no sooner illumined by divine grace, than they burn with such a clear and steady flame, as to "give light to all around." It is a first principle of Christianity, that its rewards are all "of grace." It is in vain, therefore, to reason as to the magnitude of deserved recompense from any estimate we may form of human deservings. God seeth not as man seeth; much less is he bound to distribute his rewards upon any scale of merit which man can form. To the latest and meanest services, he certainly may, if he please, give the highest premiums, since to the lowest premiums that he gives, sinners, as we are, can certainly have no claim. Pharisees, whether Jewish or Christian, may murmur and complain; but the Almighty will bestow his blessings as he pleases. Those who are distinguished by his earliest favours, and so stand first in respect of privilege, may, by their negligence and ingratitude, reduce themselves to the last and lowest rank of Christians, "for many that are first shall be last, and the last first;" a maxim on which this parable is founded, and which forms both its introduction and conclusion: but to this is here added, "Many be called, but few chosen;" that is, according to Doddridge, "Though the messages of salvation are sent to all the thousands of Israel, yet as small as the eye of a needle, as for a rich man," &c. For camel, some read cable, which differs but one letter in the Greek; but Campbell prefers the common reading, and we think justly.

Ver. 28. In the regeneration.—Spoken of the melioration of all things; the new condition of all things in the reign of the Messiah; when the universe, and all it contains, especially the human race, will be restored to their state of pristine purity and splendour.—Rob. Wahl. "The times of the restitution of all things." Ac. iii. 21.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1.—The kingdom, &c.—[This parable was intended to illustrate the equity of God's dealings in admitting the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Jews, and to illustrate the last verse of the nineteenth chapter. It affords no encouragement to those deferring personal religion to old age.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. A penny—That is, a Roman penny; a denarius, value about 14 cents.

Ver. 3—6. These periods are by some supposed to refer to the different revelations made by Moses, David, and the prophets; to the ministry of John, of Christ, and of the apostles; and to the Gentiles, in the close of the Jewish dispensation.

Ver. 9. The eleventh hour.—[The civil day of the Jews was divided into twelve hours, which they computed from six in the morning to six in the even-

10 But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny.

11 And when they had received it, they murmured [g] against the good man of the house,

12 Saying, These last [h] have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he answered one of them, and said, [i] Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

14 Take that thine is, and go thy way: [j] I will give unto this last, even as unto thee.

15 Is [k] it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is [l] thine eye evil, because I am good?

16 So [m] the last shall be first, and the first last: for [n] many be called, but few chosen.

17 ¶ And [o] Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,

18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death,

19 And [p] shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to [q] scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

20 ¶ Then [r] came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him.

21 And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom.

22 But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the [s] baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able.

23 And he saith unto them, Ye [t] shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

24 And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.

25 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye [u] know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them.

26 But it shall not be [v] so among you: but [w] whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister;

27 And whosoever will be chief among you let him be your servant:

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but [x] to minister, and [y] to give his life a ransom for many.

29 ¶ And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him.

30 And, [z] behold, two blind men sitting by the way-side, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.

31 And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.

32 And Jesus stood still, and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?

33 They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.

34 So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed him.

a small remnant only will embrace the gospel so universally offered; and so be saved according to the election of grace, (Rom. xi. 5;) while the rest will be justly disowned of God, as a punishment for so obstinate and so envious a temper."

Ver. 17—34. Jesus going up to Jerusalem, refuses an improper application from the sons of Zebedee; but heals two blind men.—Jesus now going to celebrate his last passover, calls his apostles on one side from the multitude, and informs them, in addition to his former intimations, not only that he was to suffer and die, but also that he was to be crucified by the hands of the Gentiles. After this Salome, the mother of Zebedee's children, doubtless at their desire, presents a request on their behalf, which, though in itself improper, and consequently refused, was, as Bishop Hall thinks, singularly well timed. "O the admirable faith of this good woman! When she heard the discourse of Christ's sufferings and death, she talks of his glory; when she hears of his cross, she speaks of his crown. If she had seen Herod come and tender his sceptre to Christ; or the elders of the Jews come upon their knees, with a submissive proffer of their allegiance, she might have had some reason to entertain the thoughts of a kingdom: but now, while the sound of betraying, suffering, dying, was in her ear, to make account of, and sue for a place in his kingdom, it argues a belief able to triumph over all discouragements."

But to come to the petition itself, whether this good woman had heard of the previous contentions for pre-eminence between her sons and their fellow apostles, we are not informed: it should seem, however, that she had some doubt of the propriety of her request, by the language in which she clothes it, "desiring a certain thing;" on which the excellent prelate above cited, thus descants: "A certain thing! Speak out, woman; what is this certain thing that thou cravest? How poor and weak is this supplicatory anticipation, to him that knew thy thoughts ere thou utteredst them? (But) we are all in this tune: every one would have something, such, perhaps, as we are ashamed to utter. The proud would have a certain thing, honour; the covetous man a certain thing, wealth; the malicious, revenge; the epicure, pleasure, &c. &c., though we may be ashamed to name openly the direct object of our wishes."

He who knew this good woman's thoughts, drew from her the explicit declaration of her wish; which was, to secure for her sons the chief places in the new kingdom. Jesus then addressed her sons; "Ye know not what ye ask." As if he had said, "Simple young men! ye dream only of honour, power, or wealth; but ye are asking for much tribulation, for a martyrdom, and death. Can ye drink of my cup of sufferings? Will ye be content to be baptized with blood?" Alas! vain-confident disciples? they fled before they saw the sight of blood, except from the ear of the high priest's servant.

This silly petition, however, exposed the sons of Zebedee to the indignation of the other apostles, and it required wisdom and temper equal to that of their Master to reconcile them. This he does by repeating his favourite lesson on humility, and placing before them his own most instructive example: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister:" not to be waited upon, but to serve; not to serve only, but "to give his life a ransom" for mankind.

This dispute seems to have happened at Jericho; in leaving which, two blind men, who were sitting by the way side, addressed our Lord with much importunity, and implored a cure, which he cheerfully granted, notwithstanding some opposition from the multitude who followed Jesus. One only of these,

Ver. 15. Is thine eye evil?—That is, art thou jealous? This reminds us of Milton's "jealous leer malign."

Ver. 16. For many be called.—Hammond, "The called are many, but the elect few."

Ver. 19. To the Gentiles . . . to crucify him.—Crucifixion was not a Jewish, but a Roman punishment; nor could the Jews at this time punish capitally, at least not without the sanction of the Roman government. Which is proof that the sceptre had departed from Judah, and that the Shiloh had come.

Ver. 21. The one on thy right hand, &c.—Talmudical writers relate, that in Sanhedrim, two principal officers were placed on either hand of the president; one called the Father of the Justiciary, the other, the Sage. See Doddridge.

Ver. 22. To drink of the cup, &c.—Among the ancients it was customary to assign to each guest a particular cup, which is spoken, not only in reference to cups of blessing, but also of vengeance. See Zec. xii. 2, and note.

Ver. 23. Ye shall drink.—James was the first of the apostles who suffered martyrdom, and John was scourged. CHAPTER XXI.

Christ rideth into Jerusalem upon an ass, 12 driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple, 17 curseth the fig tree, 23 putteth to silence the priests and elders, 28 and rebuketh them by the similitude of the two sons, 35 and the husbandmen, who slew such as were sent unto them.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29.

AND [a] when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the [b] prophet, saying,

5 Tell ye the daughter of Sion, [c] Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

6 And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them,

7 And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strewed them in the way.

9 And the multitudes that went before and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed [d] is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the [e] highest.

10 And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?

11 And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

12 ¶ And [f] Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves, namely, Bartimeus, is mentioned by the other evangelists, probably because the most known, and the most importunate; but upon this we shall reserve our remarks till we come to Mark, ch. x. 46.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—11. The Lord Jesus rides into Jerusalem on an ass, is hailed by the Hosannas of the multitude.—To understand the propriety of this conduct in our Saviour, we must turn back to the prophecy of Zechariah, (chap. ix. 9,) of which we shall find it an exact fulfilment; and consequently, an argument of Christ's divine character and mission. It also forms an honourable close of his public ministry. An eloquent and popular writer thus describes the event: "When this Sun of righteousness arose with healing under his wings, the populace, who lay all neglected and forlorn, benighted with ignorance, and benumbed with vice, saw the light, and hailed the brightness of its rising. Up they sprang, and after him in multitudes, men, women, and children, went. Was he to pass a road, they climbed the trees to see him; yea, the blind sat by the way side to hear him go by. Was he in a house, they unroofed the building to come at him. As if they could never get near enough to hear the soft accents of his voice, they pressed, they crowded, they trod upon one another to surround him. When he retired into the wilderness, they thought him another Moses, and would have made him a king. It was the finest thing they could think of: He, greater than the greatest monarch, despised worldly grandeur; but, to fulfil prophecy, sitting upon a borrowed ass's colt, rode into Jerusalem, the Son of the Highest, and allowed the transported multitude to strew the way with garments and branches, and to arouse the insensible metropolis by acclamations, the very children shouting Hosanna!—Hosanna in the highest! Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" (Claude.)

This sort of triumphant entry, a mixture of simplicity and grandeur, roused the whole population of the metropolis: "All the city was moved, saying, Who is this?" WHO? say you: Ask Moses, and he will tell you, "It is the seed of the woman, that shall break the serpent's head." Ask the patriarch Jacob, and he will reply, "The Shiloh of the tribe of Judah." Ask David, and he shall tell you, "The King of glory," Isaiah proclaims him, "The Prince of peace;" Jeremiah, "The righteous Branch;" Zechariah, "The King of Zion." John the Baptist, "The Lamb of God;" and the multitude which followed him, say, "This is Jesus, the Prophet of Galilee!"

It is evident, from comparing the gospel of John with the other evangelists, that besides the throng which accompanied Jesus from Jericho, another multitude, which had been assembled at Jerusalem from all parts of Judea, to celebrate the Passover, and many also which had witnessed the resurrection of Lazarus, came from Jerusalem to meet Jesus; so that he was surrounded with the greater part of the population of the country. "Let us (now) imagine," says the pious and amiable Doddridge, "that we see the Son of God and the King of Israel thus proceeding towards Jerusalem, and the people meeting him, and surrounding him with their acclamations: 'Hosanna! Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord!' Do not our hearts spring at the sound? Do we not, as it were, in spirit go forth with them, and join in that sublime, but simple song? 'Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord,' with divine authority, and divine blessings in his hands! and blessed be the kingdom he has erected! May perpetual prosperity attend it!"

Ver. 12—22. Jesus cleanses the temple; curses the barren fig-tree; and answers the demand of the chief priests and elders.—When we read of Jesus and his apostles entering the temple, we are neither to understand it of the holy, or the most holy place, which none might enter but the priests; but of the courts of the temple, where only the other tribes were allowed to meet. In the first of these, entering by the east gate, were found these money changers, who supplied those who wanted to purchase sacrifices with change, smaller coin for large; Jewish money for foreign; and advanced money to persons of credit, on their own security. The tables (or counters) of these bankers, Jesus overthrew, and turned out those who sold doves for sacrifice; men of infamous character, who thereby turned the house of God "into a den of thieves;' alluding, perhaps, to the caverns of Judea, which were often occupied by thieves and free-booters.

That such trafficking was not suited to the house of God, is self-evident; and if they had been expelled and warned two or three years before, it made their offence the more criminal. (See note, verse 12.) The mixing up trade with religion, if we are not grossly misinformed, is still the Jewish practice, and bargains of every kind are mingled with their prayers even in their synagogues; nor is it, alas! peculiar to the Jews, for we fear there is too much trafficking in some Christian synagogues, and that even on the sabbath day! Surely the pecuniary transactions of places of worship ought, as little as possible, to intrench upon the times of public devotion, and especially upon the day devoted to God's name and worship.

"There is," said Bishop Hall, "a reverence due to God's house for the Owner's sake; for the service's sake. Secular and profane actions are not (fit) for that sacred roof. . . . The fairest pretences cannot bear out a sin with God. Never could there be more plausible colours cast upon any act: the convenience, the necessity of provisions for sacrifice: yet through all these do the fiery eyes of our Saviour (Rev. i. 14) see the foul covetousness of the priests, the fraud of the money changers, and the intolerable abuse of the temple." To those who manage the secular concerns, either of churches or of chapels, would we particularly recommend these admonitions.

Let us attend, however, to the chief priests and scribes who saw "the wonderful things that Jesus did," and heard the wonderful things that the people said, and especially the Hosannas of the children, when pretending to be shocked at their profaneness, they said to him, "Hearest thou what these say?" as if they had been uttering blasphemy; and such, indeed, they construed it to be, for our Lord to ascribe to himself the prophecies respecting the Messiah, though they saw he did the works which none but God and his Christ could do. Instead of censuring his followers, and especially the children, Jesus refers the objectors to another Scripture, which speaks not only of praise, but of strong and perfect praise, as coming CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. To Bethphage.—A small village at the foot of the mount of Olives.—And Bethany:—The latter is the village "opposite," to which the disciples were sent, and both were very near Jerusalem.

Ver. 5. Daughter of Sion—That is, all the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

Ver. 8. Spread their garments, &c.—This account agrees with the customs of the Jews at the feast of Tabernacles, and on other times of rejoicing (See 1 Mac. xiii. 51. 2 Mac. x. 7.) The like ceremonies were used by the heathen toward kings and conquerors, on great occasions. See Orient. Lit. No. 1214

Ver. 9. Hosanna!—Save now, I beseech. Psalm cxviii. 25.—Blessed is he that cometh, &c.—Campbell, "Blessed BE," &c. Bp. Chandler remarks, that the prophecy of Zechariah, here referred to, is twice explained in the Talmud, of Messiah. The same learned prelate quotes from a Rabbinical book the following tradition: That at the Paschal feast, a man who personated the Messiah, bursting open a door, used to ride into the room upon an ass, another following with a horn, to proclaim and anoint him. Zechariah's prophecy was by the Jews understood of Messiah, and could not justly be applied to any other.

Ver. 12. Into the temple.—Campbell observes, that the word here used for the temple is hieron, not naos: the latter being confined to the sanctuary, the former comprehending all the courts of the temple, in the outermost of which (entering from the eastern gate) Jesus found the money-changers and the pigeon-dealers, who were no better than "a den of thieves." *Orient. Ver. 13. The house.—Doddridge and others, "A house."

saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna [j] to the son of David; they were sore displeased,

17 ¶ And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany; and he lodged there.

18 Now in the morning as he returned into the city, he hungered.

19 And [l] when he saw [m] a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered [n] away.

20 And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, How soon is the fig tree withered away!

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, If [o] ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou [p] removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done.

22 And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask [q] in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.

23 ¶ And [r] when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By [s] what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

33 ¶ Hear another parable: There was a cerfrom the lips of babes. (Ps. viii. 2.) The simpler our praises, the more acceptable are they in the sight of God.

"But the chief priests and scribes were sore displeased." Jesus taught the people, and healed them, at which every humane and benevolent person would have rejoiced. Jesus purified the temple from thieves and robbers, which the priests themselves ought to have done. The multitude, and especially the children, glorified God our Saviour for these displays of his grace and mercy; but with all this, these hypocritical priests and scribes were "sore displeased."

One circumstance in this narrative has given great offence to infidels; namely, the animal on which Jesus rode—an ass. The riding upon this creature was characteristic, since patriarchs, judges, and kings of Israel, thus rode; and it was even forbidden to the Jews to cultivate the breed of horses. (See Deut. xvii. 16. Josh. xv. 18. Judges v. 10. 2 Sam. xvi. 2.) This precept had been, however, so much neglected, that in the time of our Lord it was certainly a mark of meekness and humility, to ride on this much-injured and despised beast; as, indeed, is intimated in the prediction quoted from Zechariah.

Next morning occurred another circumstance, which has been very freely censured by those who have evidently not understood it. Jesus coming to town, from Bethany, in the morning, and being hungry, noticed a fig-tree, which, as it grew on the highway, was public property, and therefore went to it, to look for fruit, but found leaves only, and in consequence pronounced against it a sentence of perpetual barrenness, and it was immediately blighted, and withered away! This has been misrepresented, as done in a fit of spleen, or passion; but it was, in fact, a symbolic action, such as we frequently meet with in the ancient prophets. This tree was a type or emblem of the Jewish nation, and particularly of the Scribes and Pharisees, who, with the greatest professions of religion, (like the green foliage of this fig-tree,) were utterly barren of good fruit. The malediction pronounced against it, represented the curse of God against the Jews, who, after the preaching both of John and of Christ, were still impious and impenitent; and growing worse and worse, were, in a few years afterwards, cut down by the Roman axe, and thrown into the fire.

The speedy withering of this fig-tree having attracted the admiration of the apostles, Jesus (verse 22) re-inculcates his former doctrine, on the importance of prayer as well as faith, in working miracles. (See chap. xvii. 20; xviii. 19.) "All things, whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." A maxim, however, of such importance as to require some consideration before we proceed, and the more so, as commentators in general seem to pass it over very slightly.

So far as the passage relates to the faith of working miracles, we have already considered it; but the expression is here so strong and general, that we cannot confine our interpretation to this extraordinary gift: we feel it necessary, however, to guard the passage from abuse. 1. It does not warrant our presumption on things trifling and ridiculous; nor does it warrant us to attempt what we know is impossible to us. The pious author of "The Pilgrim's Progress," when young and inexperienced, was tempted to work a miracle to prove his faith. He states in his own life, that one day, walking between Elstow and Bedford, it was strongly suggested to him to say to some puddles in the horse road, "Be dry;" and to say to the dry places, "Be puddles." But just as he was about to speak, the thought came into his mind to go under the hedge to pray that God would enable him. On the other hand it occurred to him, that if he tried and could not effect it, it would discourage and sink him into deep despair: for this reason he prudently declined it, concluding that he was not warranted to put his faith to such a test.

2. We are warranted to ask nothing in prayer, but with a deference to the will of God. Our Lord himself has taught us this, who, with unlimited miraculous powers, and having more than twelve legions of angels at his command, thus prayed, (chap. xxvi. 39,) "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Indeed, as respects ourselves, there are but two things we are taught to ask unconditionally; the pardon of our sins, and the aid of God's Holy Spirit: and these we know it is the good pleasure of God to give to them that ask him. But temporal blessings should always be asked with the deepest submission to the divine will.

Ver. 23—46. Jesus attacked by the priests and elders, answers them by another question, and warns them in parables.—While Jesus was teaching and working miracles in the temple, the priests and elders demanded by what authority he did these things. An absurd demand, because miracles carry with them their own authority: Jesus, however, instead of a direct reply, answers them by another question, which much embarrassed them; because, had they admitted John the Baptist to be a prophet, they must have admitted Jesus to be the

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The parable of the marriage of the king's son. 9 The vocation of the Gentiles. 12 The punishment of him that wanted the wedding garment. 15 Tribute ought to be paid to Cesar. 23 Christ confuteth the Sadducees for the resurrection: 34 answereth the lawyer, which is the first and great conmandment: 41 and poseth the Pharisees about the Messias.

AND Jesus answered and spake unto them again by parables, and said,

2 The [a] kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a [b] marriage for his son,

3 And [c] sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come.

4 Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

5 But they made light [d] of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise:

Messiah, for he "bare witness of him;" and they dared not say any thing against the former, for "all men held John to be a prophet." They were therefore silent, and Jesus avoided their ensnaring questions. But he answered them by parables.

"A certain man had two sons." These sons, we think, do not so properly represent the Jews and Gentiles, as they do the two great classes among the Jews. Those who had made little or no profession of religion, as the publicans and harlots, who yet repented at the preaching of John and of Jesus; and those who made high professions of religion, as did the Scribes and Pharisees, but were in fact hypocrites in heart, and did nothing.

The parable of the vineyard plainly refers to the Jewish church, which had been designated by Isaiah and other prophets under the same image. (See Ps. lxxx. 15. Isa. v. 1; xxvii. 2, &c.) The husbandmen to whom this vineyard was let out, were the Jewish rulers, who, instead of listening to the messages of the prophets, evil entreated, and killed them. (Chap. v. 12; xxiii. 34—37.) At length, "God sent forth his Son," as if he thought they would pay more regard to him, instead of which, they treated him more despitefully than the rest; at which he is represented as justly exasperated, so as to destroy them, and place his vineyard in other hands, the hands of Gentiles.

To bring this home closer to their consciences, our Lord cites a passage from the 118th Psalm, part of which they had heard chaunted by the multitude, but a few hours before, and then warns them, that the consequence of their refusing the corner stone, on which God had determined to build his church, would be their utter destruction; they should be crushed to atoms; which was fully accomplished by the Romans.

Upon this, "the chief priests and Pharisees perceived that Jesus spake of them;" they wanted therefore to lay hands on him, but "they feared the multitude."

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—14. The parable of the marriage feast, and the wedding garment.—The gospel dispensation is here compared to a feast, which a certain king made on occasion of the marriage of his son. It is necessary to keep in mind the royalty of the occasion, to account for "oxen and fatlings being killed," which implies great preparation for a numerous company. The persons first invited were the Jews, who were "bidden" by the early prophets. "In this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast," &c. (Isa. xxv. 6.) He then sent forth his servants, the later prophets, to invite again them that were bidden; but "they would not come." Next he sent forth John the Baptist and the apostles, who announced that "all things (were) ready." One part of the company, the laity, made light of this, and went, "one to his farm, and another to his merchandise;" but the remnant, namely, the priests, and the Scribes, and the Pharisees, "entreated" the servants of this great king "despitefully, and slew them." When the king, however, heard this, he was justly provoked with such conduct, and sent forth his armies—for all the armies in earth and heaven are his—and slew them. Seeing, however, that the feast was ready, the king was determined to have guests; and seeing those who had been hitherto invited were utterly unworthy of the feast, the king sends forth into the public roads, that is, among the Gentiles, and gathers together all that could be found, "good or bad, till the wedding was furnished with guests:" and now came the hour of discrimination. The king, who had given the invitation, came in, as was customary, to view his guests. (See Luke xiv. 10.) On this occasion, it seems, his eye immediately marked one of the company, who "had not on a wedding garment," and immediately demanded, "Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless," and was immediately expelled. This circumstance makes it important for us to know what is intended by this "wedding garment," and how it might be procured? for might this stranger have replied, he could not procure one, a just and good prince would not have excluded him on that account. It is most certain that persons were expected, on such occasions, to put on their best apparel, as, indeed, is the universal practice; but Doddridge mentions several instances, among the Greeks, of great men, on such occasions, providing proper habits for their visiters; and such appears to be the custom, even now, in Asia. An Eastern "king sent to invite the Ambassadors to dine with him once more. The Mehemander told them it was the custom that they should wear, over their own clothes, the best of those garments which the king had sent them." Some scrupled this, till they were told that it was a general custom, "and that no doubt the king would take it very ill at their hands, if they presented themselves before him without these marks of his liberality." On this, they all agreed to comply. (Orient. Cust. No. 1202.)

Ver. 33—41. A prophetic parable, shadowing forth the unkindness of the Jewish nation to their prophets—their rejection and murder of the Messiah; and their consequent rejection and ruin. It also foretels the calling of the Gentiles to the distinguished blessings of the gospel.—Digged a wine-press—That is, a place for a wine-fat, (or vat,) over which the press was placed. These circumstances respecting the press and the tower, only signify that every thing had been done that was necessary for a vineyard. Isa. v. 2—4.

Ver. 35. Stoned.—Properly, "pelted with stones."

Ver. 37. They will reverence my son.—This is spoken after the manner of men: God knew that they would not, as appears from the context, ver. 42. He was the "stone which the builders rejected."

Ver. 38. This is the heir—let us kill him.—This does not imply that the Jewish rulers generally, indeed, knew that Jesus was the Son of God, for "had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." (1 Co. ii. 8.) Some of them were ignorant zealots, and others downright infidels; but some, we fear, sinned against light and knowledge, and committed the unpardonable sin. See chap. xii. 31, 32.

Ver. 41. He will miserably destroy, &c.—Doddridge, "Wretchedly destroy those wretches." Those who gave this answer, seem not to have understood that the parable was aimed at them, till our Lord (45th and 46th verses) caused the passage from the 118th Psalm; then they were enraged.—[Our Lord here causes them to pass that sentence of destruction upon themselves, which was literally executed about forty years afterwards by the Roman armies.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 2. Made a marriage—Or marriage feast. The word here properly signifies a nuptial banquet." Doddridge.

Ver. 3. They would not come.—The reason why men do not embrace the gospel. (Lu. xiii. 34;) they choose another thing more loved.

Ver. 5. Made light.—Treated it as though it were of small value.

6 And the remnant took his servants, and entreated [e] them spitefully, and slew them.

7 But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed [f] those murderers, and burned up their city.

8 Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not [g] worthy.

9 Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10 So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together [h] all as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11 And when the king came in to [i] see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding [j] garment:

12 And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was [k] speechless.

13 Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take [l] him away, and cast him into outer [m] darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

14 For [n] many are called, but few are chosen.

15 ¶ Then [o] went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk.

16 And they sent out unto him their disciples with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men.

17 Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cesar, or not?

18 But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?

19 Show me the tribute money. And they brought unto him a [p] penny.

20 And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and [q] superscription?

21 They say unto him, Cesar's. Then saith he unto them, Render [r] therefore unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's; and unto God [s] the things that are God's.

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

23 ¶ The [t] same day came to him the Sadducees, which [u] say that there is no resurrection, and asked him,

24 Saying, Master, Moses said, If [v] a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

25 Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother:

26 Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the [w] seventh.

Another traveller tells us, that "in the palace of the sultan, every body who wishes to go into the audience chamber, must put on the garment of honour provided by the sultan; namely, the caftan, which they receive either in the palace of the grand visier, or at the divan. The caftan is a long robe, with loose sleeves, the white ground of which is of goat's hair, mixed with some silver; but the flowers woven in, are of a gold-coloured silk." (Orient. Lit. No. 1217.)

This wedding garment was "a garment of honour," and provided by the king. "This last circumstance (as Calvin remarks) is admirably suited to the method of God's dealing with us; who, indeed, requires holiness in order to our receiving the benefits of the gospel, but is graciously pleased to work it in us (on our repentance) by his Holy Spirit; and therefore may justly resent and punish our neglect of so great a favour." (See Doddridge in loc. note f.)

It is added, that when the king saw this man without a wedding garment, he was so incensed, that he ordered him to be cast "into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen." —"It is evident (says an ingenious writer) that by this parable our Lord chiefly intends to show the levity with which the Jews treated the gospel; and consequently the justice, as well as the goodness of God, in sending it to the Gentiles. The first would not come; the last furnished the table with guests, both bad and good: but that we may well understand the purity of Christianity, he informs us, that bad Gentiles, as well as wicked Jews, would be inexcusable, if they turned the grace of God into lasciviousness; if they put not on the wedding garment." (Robinson's Vill. Disc. xv.)

Ver. 15—46. The Pharisees, the Herodians, and the Sadducees, successively endeavour to entangle our Lord in his conversation.—This chapter furnishes several instances of the art with which these several parties attempted to ensnare our Lord, and of the wisdom and address with which he answered them. First, the Herodians endeavoured to embroil him with the Roman government, on the subject of paying tribute. The substance of his argument from the Roman penny is, "You own this to be Cæsar's coin, which, being current in your land, proves you to be under his government; while, therefore, you enjoy that protection, it is your duty to acknowledge it: at the same time, forget not that you are under higher obligations to the God of Israel, and owe him a more absolute obedience."

Next, the Sadducees endeavour to puzzle our Saviour, on a difficulty of their own raising, and attempt to expose to ridicule the doctrine of the resurrection. A woman is supposed to have been married successively to seven husbands; which of them can claim her at the resurrection? The reply is, "Neither:" that blessed state knows nothing of the matrimonial connexion: men then shall be as pure as angels. "But (adds our Lord) as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken to you by God (himself,) saying, I am the God of Abraham—of Isaac—and of Jacob? (Exod. iii. 6, 16.) God is not the God of the dead, but of the living;" that is, they must continue to exist, or he cannot be said to bear any relation to them. Dr. Doddridge here remarks, that "As it is expressly said, (Acts xxiii. 8,) they denied (the existence of) any spirit, (human or angelic,) and consequently the existence of the soul in a separate state; so our Lord's answer here, and much of St. Paul's reasoning in 1 Cor. xv., goes on the supposition of such denial on their part." God can bear no relation to what has no existence: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, must, therefore, still exist, or he would not acknowledge himself as their God. It is observable, that the passage here referred to is quoted from the Pentateuch, or the writings of Moses. Passages far more express, if not more decisive, might be found in the Psalms and Prophets; but the Sadducees, it is said, paid little or no regard to them. By the quotation from Moses, however, they were completely silenced. At this the multitude were astonished; and we might have expected the Pharisees would have been gratified, as our Lord's argument was in their favour: but so inveterate was their malice, that they were only thereby excited to attack him themselves.

One of them, who was a lawyer, that is, a professor of the Jewish law, now came tempting him with this question, "Master, which is the great commandment of the law?" On this occasion, our Lord divides the whole moral law into two tables; the love of God, and of our neighbour. This question, "Which is the first and great commandment?" had, it seems, been often argued by the Jewish doctors; "some contending for the law of circumcision, others for that of sacrifices, and others for that of the phylacteries:" and Dr. Lightfoot remarks, that our Lord answered this scribe from one of the sentences usually written on their phylacteries. (See chap. xxiii. 5.)

It is worthy of remark, that in all these instances, after our

Ver. 20. Whose is this image and superscription?—Doddridge, "Inscription."

Ver. 21. Which are Cesar's.—[This conclusion is drawn from their own maxims and premises. They held that "wherever the money of any king is current, there the inhabitants acknowledge that king for their lord."—Maimonides. Now, by admitting that this was Cesar's coin, and by consenting to receive it as the current coin of their country, they in fact acknowledged their subjection to his government, and of course their obligation to pay the tribute demanded of them. This answer was full of consummate wisdom; and it completely defeated the insidious designs of his enemies. He avoided rendering himself odious to the Jewish people by opposing their notions of liberty, or appearing to pay court to the emperor, without exposing himself to the charge of sedition and disaffection to the Roman government.]—Baxster

27 And last of all the woman died also.
28 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.
29 Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not [x] knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.
30 For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels [y] of God in heaven.
31 But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying,
32 I [z] am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.
33 And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished [a] at his doctrine.
34 ¶ But when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.
35 Then [b] one of them, which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying,
36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law?
37 Jesus said unto him, Thou [c] shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.
38 This is the first and great commandment.
39 And the second is like unto it, Thou [d] shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.
40 On these two commandments [e] hang all the law and the prophets.
41 ¶ While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them,
42 Saying, What [f] think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David.
43 He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him [g] Lord, saying,
44 The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?
45 If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?
46 And [h] no man was able to answer him a word, neither [i] durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Christ admonisheth the people to follow the good doctrine, not the evil examples, of the scribes and Pharisees. 5 His disciples must beware of their ambition. 13 He denounceth eight woes against their hypocrisy and blindness: 34 and prophesieth of the destruction of Jerusalem.

THEN spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples,
2 Saying, The [a] scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:
3 All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for [b] they say, and do not.
4 For they bind heavy burdens [c] and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.
5 But [d] all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their [e] phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments,
6 And [f] love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues,
7 And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.
8 But [g] be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.
9 And call [h] man your father upon the earth: for one is your [h] Father, which is in heaven.
10 Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ.
11 But [i] he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.
12 And [j] whosoever shall exalt himself shall

Lord had resolved each of the questions proposed to him, he, in return, proposes one to them. So, in this case, after explaining to them the law, he thus introduces the gospel:—"What think ye of Christ?" or of the Messiah? "Whose Son is he?" They reply, "The Son of David." "How then (rejoins our Saviour) doth David in spirit call him Lord;" referring to Ps. cx. 1. "The Lord said unto my Lord," &c. "If David called Messias Lord, how is he then his son?" This the Jews could not answer, nor can it be answered, but on the principle that, as John the Baptist said of Jesus, "He who came after him was before him," both in point of time and dignity. The Son of God, as to his divine nature, was David's Lord; though as to his human nature, he was David's son. (See Expos. Ps. cx. 1, &c.) But we cannot better close this section, than by proposing to our own meditation, and that of our readers, this very serious question—"What hink ye of Christ?"

> "What think ye of Christ? is the test
> To try both your state and your scheme;
> Ye cannot be right in the rest,
> Unless you think rightly of him."—Newton.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—22. Jesus commends the teaching of the Pharisees, but severely censures their conduct.—The Scribes and Pharisees, while they sat in the seat of Moses,—that is, while they delivered ti ε precepts of his law, were entitled to reverence and respect; and whatever they taught under that authority, commanded obedience; but it was a terrible drawback upon their character, when our Lord added, "Do not after their works; for they say, and do not." Let ministers of every denomination consider this. If they wish to obtain respect, let them, above all things, study moral consistency; that is, practise what they teach: for neither learning or eloquence on the one hand, nor rank or riches on the other, will balance the want of this. So Pope says,

> "Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
> The rest is all but leather, or prunello."

But even this respectability should not be the ultimate object of the preacher: he "must give an account of himself to God." And at the judgment-seat of Christ, it will not do for him to plead popularity among the multitude, or high promotion in the church: for many in that day will say, "Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils?" to whom he will certainly reply, "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. vii. 22, 23.)

But what did the Scribes and Pharisees? They "bound heavy burdens"—namely, of rites and ceremonies, and voluntary offerings—"upon the shoulders of men," which they contrived themselves to evade, without feeling any of the burden. They made a great parade of outward religion, "to be seen of men," without a particle of spiritual religion in their hearts. They loved the chief places at feasts and in their synagogues, greetings in the markets, and other places of public concourse,

Ver. 31. Have ye not read? &c.—Warburton maintained, that the doctrine of a future state was revealed to Abraham, Moses, &c., and a few more inspired men under the Old Testament, but not received by the pious Jews in general. This is sufficiently refuted by our Lord.

Ver. 34. They were gathered together.—Campbell, "Flocked about him."

Ver. 35. Tempting him—Means to entrap, to seduce, as illustrated in Ma. xii. 28.

Ver. 40. On these two commandments hang.—Doddridge, "Depend." So Campbell.

Ver. 42. What think ye of Christ?—Or, of "The Christ," or Messiah.—Doddridge. Campbell.

Ver. 43. David in spirit.—Ma. xii. 36, "By the Holy Ghost."

Ver. 44. The Lord said.—(This passage is expressly referred to the Messiah by several of the Jews. Rabbi Joden says, "In the world to come, the Holy Blessed God shall cause the king Messiah to sit at his right hand, as it is written. The Lord said to my Lord," &c. So Saadias Gaon, on Da. vii. 13. says, "This is Messiah our righteousness, as it is written, The Lord said to my Lord," &c.)—Bagster.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 2. Sit in Moses' seat.—They were accustomed to teach sitting; and considering themselves as the successors, or representatives of Moses, wished to be so considered by the people.

Ver. 3. Observe and do—That is, so far as they produce the authority of God's word. Doddridge justly observes, that "if this limitation be not supposed, this passage will be inconsistent with all those in which Jesus condemns the doctrines of the scribes and Pharisees."

Ver. 5. Phylacteries.—"These were four sections of the law, written on parchments, folded up in the skin of a clean beast, and tied to the head and hands. The four sections were the following: Ex. xiii. 1—10; Ditto, 11—16; De vi. 4—9, and xi. 13—21. Those that were for the head, were written on four pieces of skin, rolled up separately, and fastened with strings to the crown of the head, towards the face. Those that were for the hands, were written in four columns on one parchment, which, being rolled up, was fastened to the inside of the left arm, between the shoulder and the elbow, that it might be over against the heart. The Jews call them Tephillin. The Greek term Phylacteries, means preservatives; namely, against evil spirits."—The borders, &c.—Doddridge, "Fringes." See note, chap. v. 20.

Ver. 6. Uppermost rooms.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Places."

Ver. 7. Rabbi, Rabbi—That is, "great," namely, in respect of learning; and is equivalent to our term Doctor, and was conferred with no less ceremony, on which occasion they were presented with a table book and a key; the latter, implying their ability to open the mysteries of the law, was afterwards worn as a badge of honour. Orient. Lit. No. 1220. Compare chap. xvi. 19.

Ver. 8. One is your master—Greek, Kuthegetes, teacher, or guide. Campbell says, a great number of MSS. here read Didaskalos; the Greek term usually answering to Rabbi. This is also sanctioned by the Syriac interpreter, by Origen and Chrysostom, and by many modern critics. He adds, "The internal evidence is entirely in favour of this reading."

Ver. 12. Whosoever shall exalt himself.—Doddridge remarks, "No one sentence of our Lord's is so frequently repeated as this, which occurs at least ten times in the Evangelists."

be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

13 ¶ But wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

14 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' [k] houses, and for a pretence make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

15 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child [l] of hell than yourselves.

16 Wo unto you, ye blind [m] guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor!

17 Ye fools [n] and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?

18 And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is [o] guilty.

19 Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth [p] the gift?

20 Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by him [q] that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne [r] of God, and by him that sitteth thereon.

23 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for [s] ye pay tithe of mint and [t] anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters [u] of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

24 Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.

25 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for [v] ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess.

26 Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

27 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto [w] whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

and the high sounding titles of Rabbi, Father, and Master, to distinguish them from other men. Such men only act a character to which they have no claim; they are literally hypocrites.

Our Lord's precepts must not, however, be taken too rigidly. It is the spirit, and not the letter of them, to which we must adhere. The doctrine of this chapter is humility. We may be called to fulfil all the duties of father, master, and Rabbi, or teacher, without a vain-glorious parade of such titles; nor do we consider the titles themselves improper, when not assumed without due authority. Some persons, indeed, have hence contended against the use of literary degrees: and nothing can be more contemptible than the obtaining of such distinctions by improper means; yet when acquired in a course of liberal education, we consider them neither useless nor improper. If the degree of Doctor in Divinity be taken only as a teacher of Scripture doctrines, it is well; but Christ is the only Master, the only Rabbi, the only Doctor, to whom we may listen on his own authority.

But we have still greater charges against these hypocrites. They assume the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but they lock the door against mankind; and, instead of promoting the knowledge of truth and righteousness, they neither enter in themselves, nor suffer others. They "devour widows' houses;"[1] or, according to the English proverb, when they once get into a widow's house, they will "eat her out of house and home," covering their real designs with long and florid prayers; and by these pretences of piety, only increase their condemnation.

They put on zeal, but it was only as a cloak to their crimes; and when they made a proselyte to their corrupt system of Judaism, they led him into all their follies and their vices, and made him, if possible, even worse than themselves. They introduced a system of shuffling and evasion into their religion, even into their oaths, and trifled with the sacred name and character of God! This was truly awful; but we must not quit this topic without confessing that we verily believe the trade of swearing, or evasive perjury, is carried to a greater length in England than ever it was in Judea. We will briefly refer to three classes of oaths. 1. Judicial oaths: it is too well known, that but a few years ago, there were many persons who made a livelihood in the purlieus of our (English) courts of judicature, by being always ready to swear to any thing that might be required. Some of our judges have, indeed, laudably attempted to correct this evil; but we fear that their success hitherto has been very partial; we hope, however, that they will persevere.

2. Customary (or custom-house) oaths, which are so numerous and complicated, that it is to be feared the greater part of those who take them, pay little regard to their contents. The writer was much shocked, some years since, with being informed by one of the partners in a respectable wholesale house in the city, that they kept a simple, half-witted man on purpose to go through this drudgery of swearing, which none of their better informed servants would undertake!

And, 3dly, Electioneering oaths, which many, both candidates and electors, seem to suppose merely matters of course, and that at such times all moral obligations are suspended. And after the election is closed, it is not at all unnatural for members who have bought their seats, to suppose they have a right to sell their votes.

Let it not be thought the writer is wandering from the province of an expositor, in feebly attempting to enforce a topic on which, not only the Old Testament prophets repeatedly insisted, but likewise our Lord himself. It is a dangerous error to consider any point of moral truth inculcated by our Saviour as below the dignity of a Christian teacher; yet, at the same time, preachers should be very careful not to set the law in the place of the gospel.

Ver. 23—39. Farther proofs of Pharisaical hypocrisy; and warnings respecting the destruction of Jerusalem.—Nothing can be more just than the remark often made, that those who are most minute and exact in ritual observances, are at the same time often the most negligent in the weightier matters of God's law. This is instanced in the case of the Pharisees, who while they were very exact in tithing their medicinal herbs, were very deficient in the moral virtues of "justice, mercy, and fidelity." Again, our Lord represents these hypocrites as persons very particular in exterior cleanliness, but equally negligent of moral purity; within, "full of extortion and excess." Thirdly, he resembles them to whited sepulchres, clean and white without, but internally "full of rottenness and dead men's bones:" like the tombs of the prophets whom their fathers had slain, and which they builded and embellished. "Hypocrisy," says Mr. R. Robinson, "is well characterized by its affected veneration for virtuous predecessors. Dion says, the emperor Caracalla, one of the worst of men, hated good men as long as they lived, and honoured them after they were dead. Herod, who murdered Aristobulus for his virtues, paid him the highest funeral honours after his death. Thus the Jews dealt with the prophets; and thus papists erect statues of the apostles, procure fine pictures of Jesus Christ and

---

Ver. 13. Hypocrites.—Dr. More observes, that "this word, in its most exact application, signifies players, who, according to the unnatural custom of the ancients, acted a part under a mask."

Ver. 14. The greater damnation.—Campbell, "Punishment." So Boothroyd.

Ver. 15. Ye compass sea and land.—The zeal of the Jews in making proselytes, even at Rome, was so remarkable, that it became almost proverbial. See Orient. Cust. No. 1207.

Ver. 16. It is nothing—That is, "it has not the power of binding." Campbell. So in ver. 18.

Ver. 17. Ye fools and blind.—See chap. v. 33—37, and notes. Our Lord here subjoins a specimen of the various ridiculous subterfuges adopted by these men to cheat their consciences, and evade the guilt of perjury.

Ver. 23. Ye pay tithe of mint and anise.—Campbell, "dill," a medicinal herb resembling fennel. But Doddridge and others retain the term anise, which is said to be a native of Tartary, though brought to us from the Philippine islands; it resembles fennel, and is sometimes called the Chinese fennel, and used by them in the preparation of their tea. With us it is only used medicinally.—And cummin.—This was another medicinal plant, cultivated by the Jews, (see Is. xxviii. 25, 27,) and very similar to the preceding. See Dr. Harris's Nat. Hist. of the Bible.—Faith.—Rather "fidelity." The word (pistis) Doddridge remarks, "has undoubtedly this signification in many places;" he refers to Tit. ii. 10. Gal. v. 22. Rom. iii. 3.

Ver. 24. Strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.—Doddridge, "Strain out a gnat, and swallow down a camel;" i. e. you affect to scruple little things, and disregard those of the greatest moment. "In those hot countries, gnats were apt to fall into wine, if it were not carefully covered; and passing liquor through a strainer, that no gnat, nor part of one, might remain, grew into a proverb for exactness about little matters." Orient. Cust. No. 412.

Ver. 25. They are full—That is, the cup and platter, the emblems of their own characters.—Excess.—Many MS. versions read (adikias) injustice.

Ver. 27. Whited sepulchres.—Harmer says, the Turks whitewash their sepulchres against the feast of Ramadan; perhaps the Jews might do the same against the passover. The primary object with the latter is supposed to be, to prevent ceremonial defilement; afterwards, probably, the object was embellishment. See ver. 29. According to Dr Shaw, the practice is still continued.

28 Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

29 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,

30 And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.

31 Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed [x] the prophets.

32 Fill [y] ye up then the measure of your fathers.

33 Ye serpents, ye generation [z] of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

34 ¶ Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill [a] and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge [b] in your synagogues, and persecute them from city [c] to city:

35 That [d] upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel [e] unto the blood of Zacharias [f] son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar.

36 Verily say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

37 O [g] Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered [h] thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

38 Behold, your house is left unto you [i] desolate.

39 For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, [j] Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Christ foretelleth the destruction of the temple: 3 what, and how great calamities shall be before it: 29 the signs of his coming to judgment. 36 And because that day and hour is unknown, 42 we ought to watch like good servants, expecting every moment our master's coming.

AND [a] Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to show him the buildings of the temple.

2 And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There [b] shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the [c] world?

4 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take [d] heed that no man deceive you.

5 For many shall come in my [e] name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

6 And when ye shall hear of [f] wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet.

7 For [g] nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.

8 All these are the beginning of sorrows.

9 Then [h] shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill [i] you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake.

10 And then shall many be [j] offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

11 And [k] many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive [l] many.

his renowned disciples, and cherish the same bloody dispositions that brought them all to the grave." (Claude.)

Some difficulty has been felt in the words, (verse 32,) "Fill ye up the measure of your fathers." The expression is evidently elliptical, and we think, with Dr. Campbell, spoken ironically; as our Lord said to the Pharisees in another instance, "Full well (do) ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own traditions!" (Mark vii. 9.) So here it is as if our Lord had said, "Go on in this your fatal career of sin, till you fill up the measure of your iniquities, as did the Canaanites of old, (Gen. xv. 16,) and bring upon yourselves, as they did, the full vengeance of the Almighty, which shall certainly fall on this generation!"

The heart of Jesus was, however, so far from being insensible of these calamities, that we find him immediately lamenting over the woes he had predicted. "O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

We shall have a farther occasion to consider these words more fully; (on Luke xix. 41, 42;) at present we shall conclude this section with a short practical remark from the excellent Howe: "The principal intention of this lamentation, though directly applied to a community, is equally applicable to persons living under the gospel; or to whom the ordinary means of their conversion and salvation are vouchsafed, but are neglected by them, and forfeited. We may, therefore, thus sum up the meaning of these words: that it is, in itself, a thing very lamentable, ... when such as, living under the gospel, ... have had an opportunity of knowing the things belonging to their peace, (but) have so lost the opportunity, that the things of their peace are now hidden from their eyes!" and that for ever!

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—28. Christ foretels the utter destruction of the temple and city.—This second temple, (so called,) as repaired and beautified by Herod, though not equal to that of Solomon, was certainly a very grand and splendid building; and must appear the more so to the apostles, who, being chiefly fishermen of Judea, had none of them, probably, at this time, seen any of the elegant buildings of Greece or Rome. So solid and durable also appeared the materials of which it was formed, that when their Master spake of its overthrow, they immediately connected it with the end of the world, and with the day of judgment: our Lord, therefore, in the manner of the double prophecies of the Jews, connects these events in the following discourse, making the one typical of the other.

To begin with the former, namely, the destruction of Jerusalem, Bp. Newton, in his valuable dissertations, has shown the most striking correspondence between the several predictions and the corresponding events, as related by Josephus. and a series of so many surprising coincidences, is perhaps unparalleled in the history of prophecy, and of the world: our room will admit only of very brief particulars. Josephus, it should be remembered, was contemporary with the events, and saw what he describes; nor is he opposed by any conflicting evidence; but, on the contrary, is confirmed by Tacitus, and other Pagan writers.

In the preceding chapter, we find Jesus in the temple, reproving the Pharisees for their hypocrisy, and other crimes. Now he had left the temple, and was seated opposite to it, on the mount of Olives, when his disciples, having withdrawn from the multitude, came privately to inquire of him, "When

Ver. 31. Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that, &c.—Doddridge, "So that ye bear witness to yourselves, that you are the sons of those that murdered the prophets."

Ver. 32. Fill ye up then, &c.—Add ye to their perversity and guilt, perpetuate the crimes that they have left undone.—Rob Wahl.

Ver. 33. Ye serpents.—See chap. iii. 7.—How can ye escape the damnation (Campbell, "punishment") of hell.—(Gr. Gehenna.) See chap. xxv. 41.

Ver. 34. Behold, I send.—This refers to the ministers and writers of the New Testament, who were "scribes well instructed." Ch. xiii. 52.

Ver. 35. Son of Barachias.—We have no hesitation in referring this to Zacharias, son of Jehoiada, mentioned 2 Ch. xxiv. 20, 21, whose father might possibly have two names, as was not uncommon.

Ver. 39. Till ye shall say—That is, until ye are ready to join in those Hosannas with which, but a few days since, ye were so much offended. See ch. xxi. 15, 16.

CHAP. XXIV Ver. 1. To show him the buildings of the temple—Their magnitude and beauty

Ver. 2. One stone upon another.—Some of these stones Josephus describes as forty-five cubits long, five high, and six broad; yet these stones were not only broken and dislodged, but the very ground on which they were erected, was dug up, and afterwards ploughed by one Turnus Rufus. [Cesar gave orders that they should demolish the whole city and temple, except the three towers Phasælus, Hippicus, and Mariamne, and a part of the western wall, all the rest was laid so completely even with the ground, by those who dug it up from the foundation, that there was nothing left to make those who came thither believe it had ever been inhabited.]—Baxster.

Ver. 3. The end of the world—i. e. the end of the present age, or period of the world. The Jews were accustomed to dispute concerning the two ages of the world, viz. the present age or world, i. e. the age antecedent to the coming of the Messiah, and the age or world to come, when the Messiah should come in majesty to establish his kingdom, and should introduce a new era, distinguished by knowledge, liberty, piety, and felicity of every kind.

Ver. 6. Wars and rumours—That is, wars at home, and rumours of wars abroad.

Ver. 9. Then shall they deliver.—[We have ample evidence of the fulfilment of this prediction in the Acts of the Apostles, but we have a more melancholy proof of it in the persecutions under Nero, in which fell, besides numberless others, those two great champions of our faith, St. Peter and St. Paul It was, as Tertullian says, a war against the very name.]—Baxster.

Ver. 10 Be offended—i. e. desert and abandon his cause.

12 And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax [m] cold.

13 But [n] he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 And this gospel of the kingdom shall be [o] preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

15 When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken [p] of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand:)

16 Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains:

17 Let him which is on the house-top not come down to take any thing out of his house:

18 Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes.

19 And [q] wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

20 But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day:

21 For [r] then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

22 And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but [s] for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.

23 Then [t] if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not.

24 For [u] there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and [v] shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if [w] it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

25 Behold, I have told you before.

26 Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not.

27 For as the lightning [x] cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

28 For [y] wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" It is of importance to observe here, (as Dr. Pye Smith remarks,) "that this is the language of the disciples, and not of Jesus; and that it must therefore be interpreted in consonance with what we have reason to believe was the then present state of their knowledge. The disciples viewed the coming of Christ, and the end of the world, (or age,) as events nearly related, and which would indisputably take place together; but no one can suppose that they had any idea of the dissolution of the Jewish polity, with the attending miseries, as really signified, or included in either of these events. . . . .The occasion upon which they proposed their question was, our Lord's assuring them of the ruin of the magnificent building which they were admiring; one of the principal subjects of their national pride and boasting." "From their very childhood, (says the judicious and penetrating Calvin,) they imagined that the temple would stand to the end of time: and this notion was so deeply fixed in their minds, that they regarded it as impossible for the temple to be overthrown, while the structure of the universe remained. As soon, therefore, as Christ told them that the temple would be destroyed, their thoughts instantly ran to the consummation of all things. Thus they connect with the destruction of the temple, as things inseparable, the coming of Christ, and the end of the world. A fond hope, which they had conceived without any authority, that the final perfection of the reign of Christ was very near, and actually present, led them to indulge the extravagant expectation of springing all at once to happiness."

Our Lord's answer, however, so far from confirming this prejudice, goes in some measure to rectify this mistake, by informing his disciples of a great variety of calamitous events which must intervene; of which we shall now take a brief review, interpreting them by the history of Josephus, who, it should be remembered, was no Christian, though he seems to have been half convinced.

The first sign announced to precede these events, was that of false Christs, or pretenders to the character of Messiah; Josephus mentions many, of which the following are expressly noticed in the Acts of the Apostles: Theudas, Judas of Galilee, Simon Magus, and the Egyptian impostor. (See Acts v. 36, 37; viii. 9, 10; xxi. 38.)

2. Josephus's History is full of "wars and rumours of wars," (as predicted verse 6,) particularly during the reigns of Caligula, Claudius, and Nero, whereby great numbers were destroyed.

3. "Famines," particularly one mentioned by St. Luke, (Acts xi. 28,) also by Josephus and Suetonius. Earthquakes in divers places, as in Crete, Smyrna, Miletus, and various other places, as mentioned by the Jewish and Roman historians.

4. "Fearful sights and great signs:" Josephus mentions, among other sights, a comet in the form of a sword, hanging for a long time over Jerusalem; armies fighting in the air: one night the massy brazen gate at the east side of the temple opened of its own accord; and at another time a voice was heard at midnight from the inner temple, saying, "Let us go hence;" and above all, most unaccountable was the conduct of one Jesus, supposed to be an ideot, or insane, who, for several years before the capture of the city, went about exclaiming, "Wo to the city, wo to the people, and wo to the temple;" and could by no means be silenced; at length, the last time of repeating these words, he added, "Wo to myself," and was immediately killed, as it were by accident.

5. Persecution for Christ's sake is another sign here mentioned, and which the Apostles experienced, both from Jews and Gentiles, more or less, in all countries to which they carried the gospel, which indeed, before the destruction of Jerusalem, extended to the boundaries of the Roman empire, and of the then known world.

6. Our Lord then admonishes his followers to leave Jerusalem, and flee for their lives, immediately as they "see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet," erected in "the holy place." This seems evidently to refer to the eagles on the Roman standards, which were planted on the walls of the city, and eventually, as Josephus informs us, within the temple itself. And not only were these standards worshipped and sworn by, but idolatrous images were also often introduced. The appearance of these was the appointed signal for flight to those within the walls; and that flight was to be so sudden, as not to allow them to return home if they were absent, or even to return within their houses to take aught from thence; only to flee over their terraced roofs till they reached the walls, and escaped without. This many did, and particularly the Christians, who escaped, some to mount Libanus, and the others to Pella, a small town beyond Jordan, in the territory of Agrippa; insomuch that it is not known that any Christians perished in the final destruction of the city. To the Jews, however, this was the most calamitous event that ever they experienced; indeed, the history of Josephus perfectly agrees with the prediction of our Lord, who says, "Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be." Josephus reckons that 1,100,000 Jews perished in Jerusalem; and above 250,000 in other parts of Judea, besides 97,000 captives, and innumerable others, who perished by starvation, and other means. And he sums up all by saying, in remarkable conformity to our Saviour's words, "If the misfortunes of all, from the beginning of the world, were compared with those of the Jews, they would appear much inferior upon comparison."

After some farther cautions against false Christs and pretended prophets, our Lord predicts the destruction of the Jewish government and city, in terms highly figurative and poetical. The Jewish polity he compares to a corrupted carcass—"the carcass of dead piety," as Dr. Watts expresses it. And as the eagle scents from afar his prey, and pounces upon it

Ver. 17. On the house-top.—A traveller of the name of Willyams has remarked, that the houses in Judea "are all flat-roofed, and communicate with each other; (so that) a person might proceed to the city walls, and escape into the country without coming down into the street." Orient. Cust. No. 1210.

Ver. 18. To take his clothes.—The ancients performed their field-work in summer almost naked. Ibid. No. 1211.

Ver. 20. Neither on the sabbath day.—A sabbath day's journey was about a mile only. The sense of the verse is, Pray that your flight may be in a time when you are likely to meet with no impediments.

Ver. 22. Except those days should be shortened, &c.—That is, "If such times were to continue, no flesh of that nation could be preserved; but for the elect's sake, those who had believed, or who should believe hereafter, those days were shortened; so that some of the seed of Abraham were preserved to be witnesses of the truth of the gospel, and to be called at last to enjoy its saving blessings." Compare Ro. xi. 26. Boothroyd. Nothing but a special providence can account for the people not being at this time wholly extirpated.

Ver. 23. Here is Christ.—Rather, "The Christ," or Messiah.

Ver. 24. False prophets.—That is, heretical and corrupt teachers, who should each another gospel, and another Saviour. See Gal. i. 6—8.—And shall show great signs and wonders.—This does not necessarily imply the working of real miracles, but only pretensions to such a power, as in the case of Simon Magus, Acts viii. 9—11.—If it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.—The words if possible, do not denote a natural, but a moral impossibility: a thing which God will not permit. Boothroyd.

Ver. 26. Behold he is in the desert.—It is remarkable, that several of the impostors named by Josephus assembled their followers in the wilderness, or desert particularly the Egyptian mentioned by Luke, Acts xxi. 38. Another pseudo prophet enticed a multitude of people into the chambers of the temple, where 6000 miserably perished.

Ver. 27. For as the lightning, &c.—The meaning appears to be, that as this surprising meteor shoots in the same instant from east to west, and pervades the whole horizon, so should the Roman armies, which attend the coming of the Son of man, like a mighty tempest, at once cover the whole land of Israel.

Ver. 28. Wheresoever the carcass is, &c.—We have here a proverbial expression, applied in allusion to the eagles of the Roman standard. Compare Job xxxix. 30. Mr. Ward, late Baptist missionary in India, remarks, that the vultures in Bengal are highly useful, in devouring the dead bodies of men and beasts; and adds, it is astonishing how swiftly these birds collect, wherever a dead body falls, though one of them should not have been seen in the place for weeks or months before.

29 Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall [z] the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens [a] shall be shaken:

30 And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man [b] in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and [c] they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

31 And he shall send his angels [d] with a great sound [e] of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect [f] from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

32 ¶ Now [g] learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh:

33 So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that [h] it is near, [i] even at the doors.

34 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled.

35 Heaven [j] and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

36 ¶ But [k] of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.

37 But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

38 For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until [l] the day that Noe entered into the ark,

39 And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

40 Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

41 Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 The parable of the ten virgins, 14 and of the talents. 31 Also the description of the last judgment.

THEN shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten [a] virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the [b] bridegroom.

2 And [c] five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

3 They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no [d] oil with them:

Ver. 29—51. Farther predictions of the destruction of Jerusalem.—Another set of images are next adopted from Isaiah and Joel, and are certainly the most sublime and beautiful that nature furnishes. The Jewish government is compared to the heavenly bodies, which are all represented as extinguished, and the whole political hemisphere as clothed in darkness and mourning. We have already, in a former volume, quoted, in illustration of this imagery, the sentiments of Sir Isaac Newton and Bishop Lowth, on this subject. (See our notes on Isa. xxiv. 21; xxxiv. 4.)

It has been customary to apply these passages to the end of the world, and to the day of judgment, and certainly the language is worthy of such an august event; but, as we are told most expressly and most solemnly, that the then present generation should not pass away till all these things should be fulfilled, we feel ourselves compelled (with Dr. Doddridge) to apply this language, in the first place, to the destruction of Jerusalem, though we feel no objection to its more distant reference to the final judgment, which double application is quite in harmony with the typical prophecies of the Old Testament. But what then, it may be asked, can be intended by "the sign of the Son of man in heaven?" The Old Testament frequently speaks of the Almighty as coming in the clouds of heaven, to administer his judgments. See Ps. xviii. 7—12. And the same imagery is used by the prophet Daniel, in reference to Messiah's receiving his kingdom at his ascension: "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, ... and there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom," &c. (Dan. vii. 13, 14.) And this we conceive to be the very sign here referred to; namely, the description given by Daniel of Messiah's "coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory," to receive his kingdom from the Father.

The following verse, which speaks of Messiah's sending his angels with the sound of a great trumpet, will apply equally to the sending forth his messengers (or apostles) with the gospel trumpet, to convert the world; and the sending forth the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, to awaken the dead, and summon them to judgment. But that the words refer, in their immediate and primary sense, to the former, as already mentioned, there can be no reasonable doubt, from the following words, "This generation shall not pass till all these things shall be fulfilled."

Chap. XXV. Ver. 1—13. The parable of the ten virgins.—"Thus our Lord, in different parables, compares the dispen-

---

Ver. 29. Immediately after.—There is here no doubt as to either the reading or translation of this passage, and as nearly eighteen centuries have passed since this time, it is most certain they cannot primarily apply to the day of judgment. See also ver. 33. By sun, moon, and stars, are meant temporal powers, as kings, princes, high priests, tetrarchs, &c.

Ver. 30. Tribes of the earth.—Doddridge, "Of the land," meaning the land of Israel.

Ver. 31. His angels.—There are angels celestial and terrestrial: the latter are generally styled "messengers;" but the Greek and Hebrew terms are the same for both. In this place both Doddridge and Campbell (with many others) use the term "messengers;" but we confess the change to us appears unnecessary, since we are accustomed to read of the angels of the churches (Re. i. 20, &c.) as well as of heaven; and we think the equivocal term better preserves the harmony of the double prophecy.——With a great sound of a trumpet—See Margin. This is an evident allusion to the Jews' manner of proclaiming their public festivals; and intends, first the trumpet of the gospel, by which both Jews and Gentiles are summoned to attend the standard of Messiah; and secondly, "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God," which shall summons all men to the bar of judgment.——They shall gather his elect from the four winds—That is, from all parts of the earth, as was in part fulfilled at the day of pentecost, Ac. ii. 7—11; continues still to be fulfilled in the propagation of the gospel, and shall be finally and completely accomplished in the last days.

Ver. 34. This generation shall not pass, &c.—We cannot but think with Doddridge, that the attempt of some to interpret this of the Jewish nation altogether, instead of the generation then living, as if the words only meant that they should never be extirpated, is a very forced and unnatural interpretation, and therefore not to be justified.

Ver. 35. Heaven and earth shall pass away.—We consider this as a strong asseveration that all things shall pass away sooner than the word of God shall fail.

Ver. 37. As the days of Noe—That is, Noah.

Ver. 38. Eating and drinking—That is, feasting, or carousing.——Marrying, &c.—That is, they were forming new connexions in life. So that all the awful predictions of Noah neither disturbed the festivities of the gay, nor in terrupted the social plans of the more sober.

Ver. 40. Then shall two.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Two men be (working) together in the field," &c.

Ver. 41. Two women shall be grinding.—[A handmill composed of two stones; "the uppermost of which is turned round by a small handle of wood or iron that is placed in the rim. When this stone is large, or expedition required, a second person is called to assist; and as it is usual for women alone to be concerned in this employment, who seat themselves over against each other, with the millstone between them, we may see not only the propriety of the expression, Ex. xi. 5. but the force of this." Dr. Shaw.]—Bagster.

Ver. 51. Cut him asunder.—This punishment has been confounded with being sawn asunder, (He. xi. 37.) but means, we apprehend, a severe scourging, such as shall "cut asunder" the flesh, and then the servant thus scourged is assigned to a prison, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; that is, sorrow without true repentance; for gnashing of teeth seems to imply the presence of evil passions.

6 And at midnight [g] there was a [h] cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out [i] to meet him.

7 Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

8 And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are [j] gone [k] out.

9 But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather [l] to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

10 And [m] while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was [n] shut.

11 Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, [o] Lord, Lord, open to us.

12 But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I [p] know you not.

13 Watch [q] therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

14 ¶ For [r] the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods.

15 And unto one he gave five [s] talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several [t] ability; and straightway took his journey.

16 Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

17 And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18 But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

19 After a long [u] time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth [v] with them.

20 And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more.

21 His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler [w] over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

22 He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

23 His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

24 Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard [x] man, reaping where thou hast not [y] sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed:

25 And I was afraid, [z] and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26 His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked [a] and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed:

sation of redemption to a marriage feast. Of all the attendants upon the marriage procession, he selects ten, five of whom deserved the name of wise, and the other five are denominated foolish. The marriage takes place in the night, at the house of the bride's father, where the bridegroom is expected about midnight. These persons, here called virgins, having provided their lamps, wait together at some proper resting place, expecting the arrival of the bridegroom and his friends, who may be supposed to be coming from an adjacent town. While the bridegroom delayed, all the ten virgins lay down to rest. But about midnight, the bridegroom is seen at a distance with his friends, and it is announced, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him." Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps; but the foolish (then too late) discovered their mistake, that they had forgotten to bring oil with them; and there being then no time to prepare, the wise virgins only were in circumstances to join the procession. "And they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and," as is the custom on these occasions, in order to keep out the crowd, "the door was shut." The other virgins came afterwards, but were denied entrance, as persons unknown to the master of the feast.

"The application of this to the case of those who wear a Christian profession, and pass for the friends of the Redeemer, is not difficult; and the pointed and most wholesome caution which it contains, to be ready for the coming of Christ, at death and judgment, has been felt by thousands. Do any ask, How may we know what is requisite in our preparation to meet the great Judge? we may say these things are essential—Repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, which, whenever it is genuine, produces, thirdly, that 'holiness without which no man shall see the Lord.'" (Acts xx. 21. Heb. xii. 14.) (Ward's Reflections, p. 71, 72.)

Ver. 14—30. The parable of the talents.—This parable, without straining it to support any peculiar system, clearly teaches the following important points: 1. That all the talents we possess, however natural we may consider them, are derived from God, the author of our being; and to deny this, is nothing short of Atheism. 2. That these talents are bestowed in great variety upon mankind, some possessing ten (i. e. many) times the abilities and advantages of others, both natural and acquired. 3. That these talents, and the improvement of them, must be accounted for to him, from whom they were received. 4. That no excuse will be admitted for the non-employment even of a single talent: much less such an excuse as reflects upon the character of our great Benefactor. 5. That the rewards which the great Judge bestows, will not be so much in proportion to the talents bestowed, as according to the improvement which we are enabled to make of them. Every talent improved, though it were but one, will be graciously rewarded by him, in whom are united the characters of our Redeemer and our Judge. Lastly, that all pretensions to merit, like those of the unprofitable servant, will not only be rejected, but be resented as arrogant and unfounded. This man not only neglected to improve his talent, but made a merit of the care which he had taken to preserve without improving it; and at the same time reflected upon his Lord as a hard master, because he expected such improvement. And thus it is with all the pretenders to human merit. Vain and presumptuous creatures! they think to lay the Almighty under obligation by the mere performance of their duties; and not only so, but they think him a hard master if he do not acknowledge himself their debtor, though, in fact they bury in the earth the talent they ought to have improved.

Instead, however, of making a merit of our demerits, and openly boasting, as this man did, of our neglect, let us inquire into our improvement of the various talents with which we have severally been intrusted. Do we possess natural talents,

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 6. Behold, the bridegroom cometh.—It appears to have been a custom among the Greeks to conduct their new married couples home at night with torches and lamps:

> "Along the streets the new-made brides are led,
> With torches flaming, to the nuptial bed."
> Iliad, xviii. 569.

So also the Roman ladies; and a like custom prevails in Persia and the East Indies to the present time. See Orient. Cust. No. 418. The wicks of the lamps used on these occasions in the Indies, are only rags, very tightly pressed into a copper mould, and these are carried in one hand, and a simnar vessel with oil in the other hand, with which they frequently wet the rags. Orient. Cust. No. 1214. Also, Orient. Lit. No 1230.

Ver. 9. Go . . . . to them that sell and buy.—See Isa. lv. 1, &c.

Ver. 10. And the door was shut.—The late Missionary Ward mentions being once present on such an occasion, when many of the circumstances agreed with those in the parable, particularly the last. After the bridegroom "went into the house, the door was immediately shut, and guarded by Sepoys. I (says Mr. W.) and others expostulated with the door-keepers, but in vain." Orient. Lit. No. 1231.

Ver. 13. Wherein the Son, &c.—This last clause of the verse is wanting in many MSS. and versions; but the sense is certainly implied.

Ver. 14. For the kingdom, &c.—Some words must here be necessarily supplied; instead of those inserted by our translators in Italic, Drs. Doddridge and Campbell supply "the Son of man!"

Ver. 21. Well done.—Dr. Doddridge says, "the original word has a peculiar force and energy, far beyond what I can express in English. It was used by auditors, or spectators, to express the highest applause." It answers to Euge! in Latin, and Bravo! in Italian.

Ver. 24. Then he which had received.—[Our Lord placed the example of negligence in him to whom the least was committed, probably to "intimate," says Doddridge, "that we are accountable for the smallest advantage with which we are intrusted; but it cannot imply that they who have received much will ordinarily pass their account best; for it is too plain, in fact, that most of those whose dignity, wealth, and genius, give them the greatest opportunities of service, seem to forget that they have any Master in heaven to serve, or any future reckoning to expect; and many render themselves much more criminal than this wicked and slothful servant, who hid his talent in the earth."]—Bagster.—Gathering where thou hast not strewed.—The charge implies, that God is unreasonable in his demands, unjust in judgment. See Rom. ix. 14, &c.

Ver. 26. Thou wicked and slothful servant.—The word used throughout this chapter for servant, means primarily a slave, and such were often advanced to the office of stewards.

27 Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28 Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29 For [b] unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away [c] even that which he hath.

30 And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer [d] darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

31 ¶ When [e] the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:

32 And [f] before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate [g] them one from another, as a shepherd [h] divideth his sheep from the goats:

33 And he shall set the sheep on his right [i] hand, but the goats on the left.

34 Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed [j] of my Father, [k] inherit the [l] kingdom [m] prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

35 For [n] I was a hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a [o] stranger, and ye took me in:

36 [p] Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited [q] me: I was in [r] prison, and ye came unto me.

37 Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee a hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38 When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39 Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

40 And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch [s] as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart [t] from me, ye cursed, into [u] everlasting fire, [v] prepared for the devil and his angels:

42 For I was a hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink:

43 I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

44 Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee a hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

45 Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch [w] as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

46 And [x] these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.

the omniscience of the Judge, that he can separate them from each other with the same ease and certainty that a shepherd distinguishes sheep from goats: but the description here given is founded on the difference of their qualities and conduct; the meek and simple sheep, and the filthy goat. Both classes evince their true character, by their conduct: and the award is given accordingly. To the former class the Judge seems to lay himself under obligations of which they have no conception; the latter, indeed, like the worthless steward in the preceding parable, appear to be sensible of no neglect or want of duty, though rejected by their judge on that account.

But let us attend carefully to the respective and widely different sentences of the two classes brought before us. To the righteous, who are called his sheep, the King, their Shepherd and their Judge, will thus address himself, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." On this we may remark, 1. That their reward is great—it is a "kingdom." 2. That their kingdom is "prepared" for them. And, 3. That it was so prepared "from the foundation of the world." The munificence of the King of heaven will not be disputed by any of his children; but how can this kingdom have been thus early prepared for them, even "from the foundation of the world?" To this we answer, (and presume it will not be denied,) that the Almighty formed the heavens in which himself resides, and where he intends his people to reside with him, even long before the foundation of these lower worlds, our planetary system. 2. That all the plans and designs of God are, like himself, eternal; without, therefore, here entering at all into the doctrine of decrees, we must admit, that all the happiness which God designs his people, he designed them from eternity.

or the means of improving them; genius, learning, or ministerial gifts; how have we employed them to promote the glory of God, or the instruction of our fellow creatures? Are we favoured with rank, and property, and influence; how do we lay out these to promote the cause of God, and the happiness of our fellow-creatures? What do we give to him who gave himself for us?

The degree of present and future blessedness, resulting from the proper improvement of the talents with which we are intrusted, is altogether incalculable. We feed the hungry, or give to the thirsty drink; and we thereby save the life of an individual; that individual, in the course of time, may be the instrument of giving life to many; and some of these, probably, may be eminent for usefulness to the bodies and souls of others. We clothe the naked, and visit the prisoner; possibly both may become useful and valuable members of society, and all the good done by them and their posterity results from a single act of kindness. When God blesses men, he makes them blessings to others; and thus is happiness propagated, like the flame from torch to torch.

Ver. 31—46. A solemn description of the last judgment.—This awful subject, which had been repeatedly alluded to in the preceding chapters, is here solemnly described, with the particular view to encourage Christian benevolence, and to warn mere professors against hypocrisy and self-deceit. The Son of man now comes, not to take possession of his kingdom, but to administer final judgment. The office of a judge is compared to that of a shepherd, which is also sustained by our Redeemer: and though his sincere followers may in this world be mixed with hypocrites and false professors, as tares with the wheat, in a former parable, (chap. xiii. 36,) yet such

Ver. 27 Exchangers.—Doddridge, "Bankers."—With usury.—Doddridge, "Interest." When that interest became oppressive, it became a crime.

Ver. 30. And cast ye.—If he be thus punished that neglects to improve one talent, how much more shall he be punished that neglects to improve, or misspends many?

Ver. 31. With his holy angels.—The expression seems designedly varied from ch. xxiv. 31., where angels may include human messengers; but these are called "holy angels."

Ver. 36. Ye visited.—Doddridge, "Looked after me." "Tended," or waited upon, seems to be the exact idea.

Ver. 43. Ye took me not in.—The charge here, is want of hospitality; a most heinous crime in the eastern countries.

Ver. 44. Then shall they also answer.—We must not take this too literally, as if sinners should then dare to dispute with their judge; it must be understood parabolically.

Ver. 45. Not to me.—See ch. xviii. 6.

Ver. 46. Everlasting punishment.—The word rendered everlasting, is rendered eternal in the concluding member of the sentence. The same word in the original is used to express the duration of the happiness of the righteous in heaven, and the duration of the misery of the wicked in hell. The words everlasting and eternal are to be understood by the nature of the objects to which they are applied: as, for example, when it is said that a disease cleaves to a man for ever, it obviously means, to the end of his life. So an everlasting priesthood, means that it shall continue to the end of the dispensation. Everlasting hills or mountains, means that they will continue till the end of the world. The terms are applied to the longest period of which the nature of the object will admit. The existence of the object being limited, so, of necessity in these cases, the words have a limited meaning. Upon the same principle of interpretation, it follows, that when applied to the soul and to God, who are immortal, they must literally mean without end. We read also that when this world is ended, and when successive duration is terminated, then the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into everlasting life; as nothing but eternity remains, the words can only mean never-ending existence. The following passages of scripture express the FINAL STATES OF MEN, and if their final, then there is no possibility of another state succeeding it. Ps. xvii. 14, 15. Pr. x. 26.; xiv. 32. Da. xii. 2. Mat. iii. 12; vii. 13, 14, 21; viii. 11, 12; xiii. 30, 40—43, 47; xxiv. 46—51; xxv. 23, 30, 34, 41, 46. Mar. xvi. 16. Lu. vi. 23, 24, 47, 49. Jn. iii. 16; v. 29. Ro. ix. 21, 23. 2 Th. i. 9, 10. Ga. vi. 7, 8. He. vi. 8, 9; x. 27. That the above texts do speak of the final state of men, is obvious: 1. The state of the righteous is allowed to be final, but the state of the wicked is all along put in contrast as to happiness or wo. 2. These texts are totally silent as to any other state following that of destruction, damnation, &c. 3. The language of the greater part of them is inconsistent with any other state to follow. Now examine the following list of passages, which speak of the duration of future punishment. Da. xii. 2. Mat. xviii. 8; xxv. 14—46. Mar. iii. 29. 2 Th. i. 9. Jude vii. 13. 2 Pe. ii. 17. Re. xiv. 10, 11; xix. 3; xx. 10. The Greek noun Aion, reckoning the reduplications of it, occurs in the New Testament 104 times; in 32 of which it means temporary duration. In 7, it may be taken for either temporary or endless. In 65 it plainly signifies an endless duration. The Greek adjective Aionios is found in 71 places in the New Testament; of these, 66 times it is used to express endless duration or existence. It will be easy to determine, according to the rule of interpretation given above, when the meaning is limited or otherwise. Another class of texts express by implication the duration of future punishment, as Mat. xii. 31, 32; xxvi. 24. Mar. iii. 29; ix. 43—48. Lu. ix. 25; xvi. 26. Jn. iii. 36; viii. 21; xvi. 9. Phi. iii. 19. He. vi. 6; x. 26, 27. Ja. ii. 13. 1 Jn. v. 16. To these add one more class of scripture, which declare that a change of heart and preparedness for heaven, are confined to the present life. Is. lv. 6, 7. Pr. i. 24—28. Mat. xxv. 5—13. Lu. xiii. 24—29. Jn. xii. 36. 2 Co. vi. 1, 2. He. iii. 7, 8; xii. 15—17. Re. xxii. 11. It should ever be borne in mind, that the doctrine of eternal punishment is one purely of revelation. That it is to be received upon the authority of God. If he clearly reveals it in his word, then it must be received, even if we are not able to reconcile all the difficulties which objectors may present.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 The rulers conspire against Christ. 7 The woman anointeth his feet. 14 Judas seeketh him. 17 Christ eateth the passover; 26 instituteth his holy supper, 36 prayeth in the garden; 47 and being betrayed with a kiss, 57 is carried to Caiaphas, 69 and denied of Peter.

A.M. 4033. A.D. 29.

AND it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples,

2 Ye [a] know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 ¶ Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4 And [b] consulted that they might take Jesus by subtlety, and kill him.

5 But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

6 ¶ Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper,

7 There [c] came unto him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he sat at meat.

8 But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9 For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

10 When Jesus understood it, he said unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me.

11 For [d] ye have the poor always with you; but [e] me ye have not always.

12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial.

13 Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

14 ¶ Then one [f] of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests,

But truly awful is the reverse of this scene; no less than the curse of God, and everlasting fire! Not, indeed, prepared for them, but for the devil and his angels, in whose misery they became involved, by listening to his temptations and uniting in his rebellion. But is the future punishment of sin eternal?

I am aware that modern Universalists refer all that is said in the chapter, respecting the final judgment, to the destruction of Jerusalem. But any one who knows the history of their treatment of this chapter, can have no doubt that their present interpretation of it is only a shift to avoid the awful truths it flashes upon a guilty conscience. First, they would have it, that by the goats we are to understand the devils; next, the sins of mankind; last of all, neither; but the Jews—yes, the poor Jews are the goats, who, eighteen hundred years ago, were sent into everlasting fire, and have ever since been suffering there with the devil and his angels, who, by the way, according to Universalists, are mere personifications, nonentities, nothing. Well, all this is about as wise, as when they tell us that the rich man stands for the Aaronic High Priest, and the pious beggar for the Gentiles; or that Judas's hanging himself, means only that he died by excess of grief; and his going to his own place, signifies only that he went to one of the twelve thrones on which the Apostles were to sit, to judge the twelve tribes of Israel.

But let the word of God speak, and such nonsense be still. What was there in the destruction of Jerusalem that corresponded with the scenes described in the 25th chapter of Matthew? Did the Son of man then "come in his glory and all the holy angels with him?" Did he then "sit upon the throne of his glory," and "gather before him all nations?" Did he "separate them one from another;" did he go into a judicial examination of their characters; awarding to the righteous everlasting life, and sending the wicked into everlasting punishment? I repeat it; the man who can interpret all this as referring only to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman army, is not to be reasoned with. He must be left to that "strong delusion" which loves darkness rather than light, and is more ready to "believe a lie" than the truth.

CHAP. XXVI., Ver. 1—16. The rulers conspire against the life of Jesus, and Judas betrays him.—Preb. Townsend unites the two first verses of this with the preceding chapter, and we think with considerable propriety. But the connective particle "then," which begins verse 3, probably implies that the chief priests, &c., assembled on the same evening to plot the death of our Saviour. So Doddridge and other harmonists. It is not unlikely that the supper at Bethany, and the anointing of our Saviour, might also take place on the same evening; and the reproof that Judas met with, for his censure upon Mary, the woman named, might prepare him for Satan's temptation to betray his Master on a principle of revenge, and induce him to go directly to the council at the high priest's palace and make the offer.

We consider the anointing here mentioned, from the great similarity of circumstances, to be the same more particularly related by the Apostle John, and shall therefore defer our observations thereon till we come to that evangelist's 12th chapter, and confine our remarks on this section to the murderous designs of the Jews, and the treachery of Judas.

The object of the council of priests, we know was, how they might take Jesus by subtlety, or stratagem, on which there appears to have been some debate; not as to the object itself, but the time, and the means to be employed. It probably never entered into their heads to think of bribing his disciples, nor that there was one amongst them base enough to betray him; when, however, Judas made the offer, it was readily embraced, though with the utmost contempt for the wretch himself; for a traitor can never be respected.

The character of this man (who should be carefully distinguished from Jude, the author of the Epistle) is an interesting subject of inquiry. "The treachery of Judas Iscariot, his remorse and suicide, (says Dr. Hales,) are occurrences altogether so strange and extraordinary, that the motives by which he was actuated require to be developed (as far as may be done) where the evangelists are in a great measure silent concerning them, from the circumstances of the history itself, and from the feelings of human nature. Judas, the leading trait of whose character was covetousness, was probably induced to follow Jesus at first, with a view to the riches, honours, and other temporal advantages, which he, in common with the rest, expected the Messiah's friends should enjoy. 'The astonishing miracles he saw him perform, left him no room to doubt of the reality of his Master's pretensions, who had indeed himself, in private, actually accepted the title from his apostles; and Judas must have been much disappointed, when Jesus repeatedly refused the proffered royalty from the people in Galilee, after the miracle of feeding the 5000, and again after his public procession to Jerusalem." So far we agree with this learned writer in his New Analysis of Chronology; but when he goes on to suppose that Judas meant to deliver his Master up to the Sanhedrim, "in order to compel him to avow himself openly as the Messiah before them, and to work such miracles as would convince, and induce them to elect him in due form, and enable him to reward his followers,"—we must withhold our credence, since we see no ground for such a surmise; nor, indeed, can we admit any of the poor apologies that some benevolent writers have attempted to form in his behalf.

Judas was certainly covetous; and for a covetous man to be honest and faithful to his trust, seems impossible: yet the paltry sum for which he betrayed his Lord, being only thirty shekels, (or, as we reckon it, about $15,) could hardly operate as a temptation to take the life of an ordinary man. It is possible the traitor may have expected more; but the wretches with whom he had to treat, seeing him eager to make the bargain, were not likely to treat him with generosity; neither of the parties, we may safely conclude, knew that they were acting under the control of the supreme Power, and actually contributing to fulfil prophecy, as was certainly the case. (See Zech. xi., 12, and note.)

But another motive probably rankled in his heart: his Master had openly reproved him before his fellow apostles, and not only justified, but applauded the woman whom he severely censured. Satan, always ready to encourage the evil passions of mankind, might now suggest how happily an opportunity was before him to revenge the supposed insult he had so recently received. Revenge is one of the master passions of a rebellious heart, and forms part of Milton's admirable portrait of the fallen fiend himself:—

> "——— Th' unconquerable will,
> And study of revenge, immortal hate,
> And courage never to submit or yield."
> (Par. Lost, bk. i., p. 106.)

Satan thus feeling himself, we can not doubt but that on taking possession of the traitor's heart, it would be his first

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 2. Is betrayed—That is, he is about to be betrayed: the treason is already begun.

Ver. 3. Caiaphas.—[This was Joseph, surnamed Caiaphas, who succeeded Simon, son of Camith, in the high priesthood, about A. D. 25. He married the daughter of Annas, who had also been high priest. About two years after our Lord's death, he was deposed by Vitellius, governor of Syria; and, unable to bear his disgrace, and perhaps the stings of conscience for the murder of Christ, he killed himself A. D. 35.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Not on the feast day.—As the word "day" is supplementary, Doddridge and Campbell render it, "not at the feast." The plan proposed seems to have been assassination; some objected, however, not to the murder, but to transacting it at a public festival, lest the people should raise a tumult, and fall upon themselves.

Ver. 6. Simon the leper.—Probably one of those whom Jesus cured, and a friend of Lazarus.—They had indignation.—Chiefly Judas; but at first, probably, others joined with him.

Ver. 10. When Jesus understood it.—Doddridge and Campbell, "But Jesus knowing (it.)" See Jn. ii. 25.

Ver. 12. She did it for my burial.—That is, "to embalm me, as it were, before hand," for my funeral.

15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they [g] covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

17 ¶ Now [h] the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?

18 And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples.

19 And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the passover.

20 Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve.

21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.

object to make it the image of his own. From this awful fact may we be taught to check, and if possible to pray down, the first risings of this diabolical passion, against which our Lord himself has so strongly guarded us in his sermon on the mount. (Matt. v. 45.)

When Judas had received the wages of iniquity, he sought an opportunity to effect the crime, and he soon found it. "Watch harm, catch harm," is an old and true proverb: for when people are seeking opportunities for mischief, the tempter will always be ready to assist them. It is a singular proof of the depravity of the human heart, that those who regard neither the engagements of honour nor of duty, can yet be faithful to their engagements to commit assassination or murder, even with the terrors of the law before their eyes.

Ver. 17—30. Jesus keeps the passover, and institutes his supper.—Before we enter on this very interesting subject, it may be proper to confess that there are several difficulties in the way of a critical arrangement of the time and circumstances. Sir Isaac Newton and Mr. Ferguson agree to fix the passover full moon, and the day of our Lord's crucifixion, on the 3d of April, A. D. 33.. But it is obvious that if our Lord, as the antitype of the paschal lamb, suffered at the precise time that lamb should be offered, he must have taken his passover on the preceding evening; and yet, as the Jews began their days in the evening, still it may be admitted that (according to that reckoning) he suffered on the same Jewish day, (Friday,) though according to the Roman method, (which was the same as ours,) he kept the passover on the Thursday evening previous to his death; whereas it appears the Jews did not keep theirs till after the crucifixion. (John xviii. 28.) On the passover itself we offered a few remarks at the time of its appointment, Exod. xii. 1—28. We shall here confine our attention to the Christian institution founded on it; and as that celebrated the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, so was it considered by the pious Hebrews as an anticipation of their future deliverance by Messiah.

The Christian institution pressed so closely upon the Jewish, as to appear its sequel or conclusion; being (as is remarked by Dr. David Hunter) "solemnized, not only in the evening of the same day, in the same chamber, and at the same table, but with the same bread and wine, with which it was usual to conclude the ceremony of the passover. The relation between the two, in these respects, served as a line of direction in tracing other points of resemblance. For instance, the passover was the memorial of a deliverance. By the present institution, the disciples were directed to regard in the same light the death of their Master. Their notions of deliverance by his death were erroneous and indigested. For this reason, in the body of the institution, he corrects them. Yet the fixing the general idea of a deliverance by the death of their Master, was doing not a little for the composing their minds, and inspiring them with comfort. . . . .

"The attention of Jesus to the comfort of his disciples in the prospect of his death, is strongly expressed by the solemn action itself. In all ages of the world, and in every nation, eating and drinking together has been one of the ordinary expressions of friendship. In forming associations, men had been also in the habit of sacrificing animals, sometimes human victims; when they did eat together of the flesh, and drink of the blood, accompanying the action with curses on themselves, if they departed from their engagements. The Jews were allowed, nay, were commanded by divine authority to partake of the sacrifices offered to the Deity, in testimony of their interest in his protection, and as a pledge of their fidelity. . . . . When (therefore) we see Jesus taking the bread and wine, and offering them to his disciples, as the symbols of his body and blood, can we conceive it possible for him to have given a stronger or more tender declaration of that union between them, the bonds of which were indissolvable? What purpose could this institution serve, if his death should prove the grave of their hopes? Or in what sense could they be partakers of a body which was to moulder into dust? The institution was intended to be the pledge of his love, and the cherishing of their hopes, when they should behold him stretched out on the cross, or consigned to the tomb. . . . .

"This institution was a preparatory exhibition of his own sufferings. He engages in it with a soul, not only superior to all uneasiness, but full of joy, from looking forward to the effects of his sufferings. . . . . He sits down with the twelve, having a cruel death before him. He had often told them of the event; but they would not believe it to be possible. In breaking the bread, and in pouring out the wine, he sets it most convincingly before their eyes. All this indicates an undisturbed state of mind. He offers to the disciples the symbols of his sufferings with the same composure which he displayed in enduring them; . . . . and concluded this solemnity with a hymn of praise, which, though a usual part of the passover service, enters into the other with great propriety; it reflects an agreeable light on the institution itself; it expresses the dignity of its Author, whose soul no fears, no certainties, could disquiet; especially if it be also remembered, that after singing the hymn, he immediately entered on the scene of his sufferings." (Observations on the Hist. of Jesus Christ, by the Rev. D. Hunter, D. D.)

We must not omit to remark, that on this occasion Jesus gave the first intimation that one of the twelve apostles should betray him; on which occasion. Grotius well observes the three steps of the discovery. First, the traitor is described as one of the twelve; then, that he was one who sat near him, and dipped his hand in the same dish; and lastly, to the beloved John, he pointed out the individual: "He to whom I shall give a sop," and he gave it to Judas. When he said, "One of the twelve," each made the inquiry, "Master, is it I?" Judas was the last to put the question, when he received an answer in the affirmative. Those who are the last to suspect their own hypocrisy, are generally the first to prove it.

Drs. Lightfoot and Gill, who of all commentators were the most deeply read in the customs and manners of the Jews, have minutely detailed their forms in celebrating the passover; but as these savour much of Pharisaical superstition, we much doubt whether our Lord conformed to them, except it may be in the hymn chanted on this occasion, which was called the Great Hallel, and comprised from the 113th to the 118th Psalms inclusive. As to the words of the institution, "This is my

Ver. 20. He sat down.—Or lay down, as the word signifies; for the posture of the Jews, at the passover table especially, was not properly sitting, but reclining, or lying along on couches, on their left side. This posture was reckoned so necessary, that it is said "the poorest man in Israel might not eat till he lies along." One of the Jewish writers says, "We are bound to eat lying along, as kings and great men eat, because it is a token of liberty." Gill in loc.

Ver. 23. He answered and said—i. e. privately. Ver. 26. As they were eating, Jesus took bread.—As none but unleavened loaves, or rather cakes, could now be eaten, it is most certain that no other could be used in this ordinance; yet few or no protestant churches consider this a circumstance of importance, though some are very particular in breaking instead of cutting it; a circumstance more natural and easy in cakes, or biscuits, (such as the Jews still use,) than in loaves like ours.——He blessed it. —The pronoun (it) is here supplied thrice (as in many other places, Mat. xiv. 19 Mu vi 41, &c. &c.) but whether it be understood that Christ blessed the food, or blessed his Father for it, the sense will be the same. Our food can only be blessed to us by God's blessing attending it. The margin of our English Bibles says, "Many Greek copies read, 'Gave thanks.'" body," and "this is my blood," it is well known that the Church of Rome founds thereon the doctrine of transubstantiation, believing that every particle of the bread and wine was literally converted into the flesh and blood of the Son of God; which is just as reasonable as to suppose Christ was literally a way, a door, or a vine. Figurative language was so popular in the east, that it is scarcely possible the Jews could make such a gross mistake; yet if the explication must be literal, it must be the cup, and not the wine, that was converted into the blood of Christ: for so the Evangelists Luke and John express it: "This cup is the New Testament (or covenant) in my blood!" It is somewhat singular, that those who are so exact and positive as to the conversion of the elements, should deny the benefit of one of them to the far greater part of the Christian church—that is, the laity. They may have consecrated wafers, as a substitute for bread; but the consecrated wine is only for the clergy! It is remarkable, however, that our Lord uses a term of universality respecting this: "Drink ye all of it." Mark adds, "They all drank of it," (chap. xiv. 23;) which term is not used in reference to the bread; as if the inspired writer had foreseen and wished to guard against a misapplication of our Lord's words.

Jesus predicted, not only that one of his disciples should betray him, but also that another should deny him, and that repeatedly, within a few hours, and in the most awful manner. But the event corresponded exactly with the prediction. Peter, the zealous, the courageous Peter, thrice denied his Master, and at last with oaths and curses! What a lesson does this teach us! "He that trusteth his own heart, is a fool." (Prov. xxviii. 26.)

Ver. 31—46. The agonies of Jesus in Gethsemane, and his earnest prayer.—Critics have remarked the very strong language of the original in these verses; and divines have speculated on the cause and nature of these sufferings of our Redeemer's soul; yet those who best know what soul-sufferings are, know but little, and can conceive but faintly, what our Saviour suffered "in the days of his flesh, when he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears," to God his heavenly Father. (Heb. v. 7.)

Let us, with Bp. Hall, treat the subject more devotionally. "What was it, what could it be, O Saviour, that lay thus heavy on thy divine soul; was it the fear of death? Was it the forefelt pain, shame, and torment of thine ensuing crucifixion? . . . . How many thousands of thy blessed martyrs have welcomed no less (bodily) tortures with smiles and gratulations, and have made a sport of those exquisite cruelties which their very tyrants thought unsufferable! Whence had they their strength, but from thee? If their weakness were thus undaunted and prevalent, what was thy power? No, no: it was the sin of mankind; it was the heavy burden of thy Father's wrath for our sin, that thus pressed thy soul, and wrung from thee these bitter expressions. "What can it avail, O Saviour, to tell thy grief to men? Who can ease thee, but He, of whom thou saidst, My Father is greater than I? Lo! to him thou turnest: O Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me!"

But what means this prayer? Could not Jesus tell whether his petition were possible? Or could he pray for an impossibility? Neither of these circumstances must be supposed; but the extraordinary language here used may serve to teach us, 1. That our Lord deeply felt the extreme nature of the sufferings he was about to endure for our salvation: it is as if he had said, O that there were some other way in which God could be glorified and sinners saved, without my drinking of this fatal cup! But, 2. That he felt the absolute necessity of his own obedience unto death for these ends; and therefore, though his flesh recoiled (as it were) from the impending stroke, his heart cheerfully submitted: "Father, nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt!" 3. When he says, "Father, all things are possible unto thee," shall we say, There is no other possible way in which God could have pardoned sinners? We dare not say this; but we think the result warrants us in believing, that this plan was the most honourable to God, and beneficial to us. Surely God would have "spared his only begotten Son," if our redemption could with equal propriety have been purchased by an inferior price. On such subjects, however, it becomes us rather to adore than speculate. And while we humbly accept God's best gift to man, in the person of his Son, let us also "honour the Son as we honour the Father."

"This was compassion like a God,
That when the Saviour knew
The price of pardon was his blood,
His pity ne'er withdrew."—Watts.

We must not, however, leave this interesting topic without remarking the circumstances of our Lord's disciples at this most awful and afflictive period. While the Saviour was agonized in prayer for them and us, instead of watching and praying with him, they all fell asleep—asleep for sorrow; for well we know that oppressive sorrow will sometimes stupify the faculties and overwhelm with sleep. But where is Peter, who so lately vaunted his attachment to his Master? "Sleepject, and for a most masterly refutation of it, we beg leave to refer to the 4th of Mr. Fletcher's "Lectures on the Rom. Cath. Religion," before cited.

Ver. 28. Of the New Testament.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Covenant."

Ver. 29. I will not henceforth drink, &c.—That is, I will celebrate with you no more passovers, &c. till we meet in heaven. See Re. xix. 9.——Of this fruit (Doddridge and Campbell, "produce") of the vine.—It is not (karpos) the usual term for fruit, which is here used. grapes are the fruit—wine the produce.

Ver. 30. They sung a hymn.—The Greek is literally, "they hymned." Campbell reads, "And after the psalm they went out," &c. The Jewish way of reciting their psalms and hymns, was in a kind of chant. The hymn here intended, was most probably what the Jews call the great Hallel.

Ver. 31. All ye shall be offended.—Literally, scandalized. Peter, for instance, was both ashamed and afraid to be thought a disciple of Jesus, though he had talked so boastingly. It is not unlikely, that the homely proverb, that "great talkers do the least," might originate from this instance of Peter's cowardice.

Ver. 34. Before the cock crow (Ma. xiv. 30, crow twice.)—Whitby has produced sufficient authorities to prove that there was a double crowing of the cock—at midnight, and at day-break; the latter answered, according to him, to the fourth watch of the night. though others say the third. On comparing the Evangelists, it appears to us that our Lord's meaning was, that Peter should deny his Master thrice between the present hour and that of the cock crowing; i. e. about the break of day.

Ver. 36. Gethsemane.—A private and retired garden at the foot of mount Olivet, whither Jesus often retired for prayer, and where (as the name implies) an oil press then, or formerly, had been used.

Ver. 38. My soul is exceeding sorrowful, &c.—Doddridge, "Surrounded with sorrow;" Campbell, (connecting this with the preceding verse,) "Being oppressed with grief he said to them, My soul is overwhelmed with a deadly anguish." This is explained to mean, a grief of mind sufficient to kill the body; "a sorrow that worketh (or produceth) death." See 1 Co. vii. 10.

Ver. 39. Let this cup pass from me.—In passing through the Psalms and prophetic Scriptures, we have had repeated occasion to illustrate this poetical form of speech. Whatever portion, whether of joy or sorrow, peace or punishment, God assigns to man, is "the portion of his cup." Ps. xxiii. 5; xi. 9.

Ver. 40. One hour.—The Greek term, besides its more limited meaning, is often used metaphorically, as with us, for any short time, or period.

Ver. 43. Their eyes were heavy.—Doddridge, "weighed down."

Ver. 44. The same words—Or, "words (or matter) to the same effect." Doddridge.

45 Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

47 ¶ And while he yet spake, lo, [b] Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48 Now he that betrayed him gave them a [c] sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he: hold him fast.

49 And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, master; and kissed [d] him.

50 And Jesus said unto him, [e] Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

51 ¶ And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear.

52 Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for [f] all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

est thou, Simon? Couldest thou not watch one hour?" Alas! Simon turns himself, and falls again, and again, to sleep. But still the merciful Saviour apologizes for them: "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." The only reproof is a gentle irony. At length the enemy approaches, "Sleep on now, and take your rest!" But even this he suddenly recalls, "Let us rise, and go to meet him."

Ver. 47—58. Jesus surrenders himself to his enemies.—From the manner in which Peter here acted, it appears that he was perfectly sincere in his resolution not to deny his Lord; and had even resolved to risk his life in his defence, with the hope, probably, that his Master, whose miracles he had often witnessed, would, when he saw his fidelity and zeal, in some way support him, and save both himself and his disciples. But Peter was grossly mistaken; his Master wrought no miracles but those of mercy; and even those not on his own behalf, but for others, even for his enemies, as in the case before us. Instantly he commands the rash disciple to put up his sword, and heals the wound he had made, by cutting off the ear of "the high priest's servant." At the same time he reproves his warlike disposition, and gives him to understand that those who use the sword must expect to perish by it; which applies particularly to the case of persons who, like Peter, have had recourse to it in order to defend themselves from persecution; as, for instance, the Hussites in Bohemia, and the Huguenots in France.

Why Peter struck at the high priest's servant, does not appear; perhaps he was armed, and might threaten him; perhaps he had seized hold of his Master; or possibly the blow was not aimed at him, but fell promiscuously: for had he aimed at any one, he most likely would have attacked Judas. But we should recollect this was before daylight.

Judas has immortalized his infamy, not only by betraying his Master, but by betraying him with a kiss. Dr. Guise and others have reasonably supposed, that Jesus permitted his apostles thus to salute him, on returning to him after absence; he might therefore think it would excite no suspicion of his design; but he has thereby become, in the Hebrew idiom, "the father of all those who betray their Master with a kiss:" a fraternity most unhappily numerous in the Christian world, and embracing all those who profess attachment to the Saviour, merely to promote their secular interests; and especially those who partake of the sacred institution of his supper, merely, (as Cowper expresses it,) as "the pick-lock of a place."

Our Lord Jesus is particularly careful to have it understood that his surrender was voluntary, for he had only to address his Holy Father, and were it consistent with his decree, an army of angels would be assigned for his protection, to which all human opposition would be utterly in vain; and yet what protection could be required for him whom the winds and seas obeyed? for him who hath the keys of death and the grave suspended at his girdle? (Rev. i. 18.)

Jesus remonstrates with the guard sent to arrest him, on the method taken to pursue him into his devotional retreat, when they saw him daily teaching in the temple: but when he says, "Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves?" our Saviour plainly intimates that swords and staves may be necessary in treating with such characters; but surely not with him as a prophet and teacher of religion: and though, indeed, he claimed a kingdom, it was of a nature so purely spiritual, that it required no support from the sword, much less could it be propagated by it. He then adds, upon the officers stating that himself personally was the object of their search, "Let these (disciples) go their way;" (John xviii. 8;) and they took the opportunity to fly. One young man in particular, having only a garment loosely thrown over him, left it in the hands of the officers and fled naked; and, one way or other, they all forsook him, and sought their own safety.

It has been thought strange, however, that Peter was suffered to escape, after cutting off the ear of Malchus, the high priest's servant. But how was the charge to be maintained? The ear was cured, and to examine the charge, would only be to call evidence in proof of our Saviour's miracles: and Malchus, we may well suppose, was too much affected with his cure to come forward as a witness against Peter.

As to Peter himself, though he deserted his Master for the present, he could not abandon him; but followed him afar off. It appears by John's gospel, (chap. xviii. 13,) that Jesus was first taken to Annas, the father-in-law of Caiaphas, to whom he immediately sent him; and thither Peter, and probably some other of the apostles, followed him at a distance, and by means of John, obtained admittance within the hall (or rather court) of the high priest. But we must leave Peter for the present, and attend to the circumstances of his divine Master, who is brought before the whole Sanhedrim, the highest court among the Jews, which, on this occasion, was hastily assembled in the high priest's palace.

Ver. 59—68. Jesus arraigned at the bar of the Jewish high priest.—Behold the Son of God now undergoing a mock trial, to gratify the malice of his enemies! We call it a mock trial, because on the preceding day a council had been expressly called for the purpose of murdering him. We call it so also in reference to the false witnesses, who were evidently suborned expressly for the purpose; but probably, through the hurry of the proceedings, were not properly trained, and therefore gave so confused and contradictory evidence that even such a court could not found any proceedings on it. At length two men came forward, who had heard Jesus say something respecting the temple of his body, which they applied to the temple at Jerusalem, contrary to his design. (See John ii. 19—22.) Even this, however, had the evidence been perfectly correct, the high priest himself saw, could not amount to a capital offence, since they only quote him as saying, he was able to destroy and to rebuild it; the high priest, therefore, in virtue of his office, administers an oath, or adjuration, respecting other words, which Ver. 58. And went in—Namely, into the court before the palace, which was always open to the sky, though sometimes with piazzas round it. It is not certain, however, that this palace was the private residence of Caiaphas, (which is understood to have been on Mount Sion,) but rather his official house, or apartments in the temple, where the Sanhedrim now sat, and into one of the courts of which Peter and John obtained admission. So the late Editor of Calmet, Fragments, No. cxxxvii.

65 Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what farther need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy.

66 What think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of [r] death.

67 Then [s] did they spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with [t] the palms of their hands,

68 Saying, Prophesy unto us, thou Christ, Who is he that smote thee?

69 ¶ Now [u] Peter sat without in the palace: and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee.

70 But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

71 And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, this fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

72 And again he denied with an oath, [x] I do not know the man.

73 And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.

74 Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew.

75 And Peter remembered the [y] word of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Christ is delivered bound to Pilate. 3 Judas hangeth himself. 49 Pilate, admonished of his wife, 24 washeth his hands. 26 and loseth Barabbas. 29 Christ is crowned with thorns, 34 crucified, 40 reviled, 50 dieth, and is buried. 66 His sepulchre is sealed, and watched.

WHEN the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel [a] against Jesus to put him to death:

some reported him to have uttered, and perhaps truly; for he had asserted his divine character, and neither could nor would retract it. Hitherto, it may be observed, Jesus had been silent, as thinking it beneath his character to notice charges so trivial, and (to say the least) unfounded. But when the oath of God is laid upon him by the high priest, reverence to truth, to himself, and to God's holy name, all induce him to speak out; especially as being about to suffer voluntarily, he had now no reason to shun the declaration. We think, however, as already intimated, that our Lord's prompt reply to the question here put to him upon oath, is a very satisfactory proof of the legality of judicial oaths, though too much care cannot be taken to preserve their solemnity, and guard against their trifling or improper use.

The form of adjuration is—"I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Christ, (or Messiah,) the Son of God;" on which we may in the first place remark, that the ancient Jews uniformly expected their Messiah to bear a divine character; and 2dly, that they considered it as blasphemy for any other person to assume it. Consequently, when Jesus admitted that he laid claim to this character, and added, that he should again visit earth in a manner suited to his rank, "sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven;" the high priest immediately rent his clothes, which he was allowed to do only on extraordinary occasions, and cried out, "He hath spoken blasphemy: what farther need have we of witnesses?" Caiaphas then appeals to the Sanhedrim, who all agree that Jesus had spoken blasphemy, and was guilty of death. In consequence of this, probably, his face was covered, (as was usual with condemned persons,) on which the petty officers and spectators treated him with every mark of contempt and ridicule. Some spat in his face, some buffeted him, and others ridiculed his prophetic character; and on his being blindfolded, jeeringly exclaimed—"Prophesy unto us, thou [pretended] Christ; who smote thee!" Thus do these unhappy creatures, while they vent their vilest passions in tormenting the Son of God, at the same time fulfil the decrees of God, and the predictions of the prophets. "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. He was despised, and we esteemed him not. He was oppressed and afflicted; yet he opened not his mouth." Isa. liii. 3, 7.)

> "Mistaken Caiaphas! ah! which blasphem'd, > Thou, or thy prisoner?—Which shall be condemn'd?"—Young.

But it is not for us to penetrate the secrets of eternal judgment: this we know, that among the redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, shall be some who persecuted and pierced him: nay more; which of us can plead, not guilty?

Ver. 69—75. Peter denies his Master, with oaths and curses.—There is nothing more important for us to learn than our own weakness. Who that saw Peter vaunting but the day before this—"Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I,"—could have supposed that in so short a time he could have forgotten, or at least have broken all his promises? What! an apostle prevaricate and lie; yea, and curse and swear, that he knew not the man to whom he had professed so strong an attachment; for whom, in fact, he had fought, and nearly committed murder? Alas, how weak is man! But all this arises from too much confidence in our own strength. This leads us into temptation, and throws us off our guard. As Paul said, "When I am weak, then am I strong?" Peter might reverse the phrase, and say, When I was strong, then was I weak indeed! The question of a silly damsel confused and terrified him; and the fear of being taken for one of the followers of Jesus, led him to prevarication, lying, and perjury.

But how was Peter recovered, and put to shame? His foolish vaunting is reproved by the crowing of a cock! How small the means by which the Lord often accomplishes the most important ends! This seemingly trivial incident brings to mind the prediction of his master: the recollection of his words "kindled his repentings," and led him to seek retirement; and a glance from his eye, in passing, penetrated, like a flash of lightning, to his heart: he went out and wept bitterly. And whereas his fall is recorded as a beacon, to warn us against apostacy, so is his repentance exhibited as a model to penitent backsliders. "He wept bitterly!" Such a bitter apostacy indeed requires bitter tears; and if they are not produced on earth, they will be mingled with "wailing and gnashing of teeth" in hell. "This deep sorrow is required (says Henry) not to satisfy divine justice, (as a sea of tears will not do that;) but to evidence that there is a real change of mind, which is the essence of repentance; to make pardon more welcome, and sin, in future, more loathsome." Peter, who wept so bitterly for denying Christ, never denied him again: but confessed him often and openly, and in the face of danger. So far from ever again saying, "I know not the man," he made all the house of Israel know assuredly that this same Jesus was both Lord and Christ. True repentance for any sin will be best evidenced by our abounding in the contrary grace and duty; that is a sign of our weeping, not only bitterly, but sincerely. Some of the ancients report, that as long as Peter lived, he never heard a cock crow but he burst into tears.

We may have never sinned with Peter in openly declaring we did not know him; but "actions speak louder than words;" and is there no part of our conduct which in effect says, "I know not the man?"—Conscience! do thy office.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1—10. The fatal end of Judas.—The repentance of Judas was an awful contrast to that of Peter. The one was a "repentance not to be repented of;" the other, a "worldly sorrow which worketh death." (2 Cor. vii. 10.)

Ver. 61. I am able to destroy.—[The words of our Lord were widely different from this statement of them; so that the testimony of these witnesses was false, though it had the semblance of truth.]—Bagster.

Ver. 63. I adjure thee.—Thus the high priest, in his magisterial capacity, lays the holy Jesus under a judicial oath, which in some cases, very different from the present, he was allowed to lay upon the accused party. See Nu. v. 19, &c.

Ver. 64. Thou hast said—i. e. I am the Christ, the Son of God.—The Son of man.—See Da. vii. 13, 14.

Ver. 65. Rent his clothes.—It has been said, that the high priest might never rend his clothes; but that he might, and did on extraordinary occasions, Dr. Lardner has given several instances.

Ver. 67. Then did they spit, &c.—This mark of contempt and malice is still continued in the East. In 1744, when a rebel prisoner was brought before Nadir Shah's general 'the soldiers were ordered to spit in his face; an indignity of great antiquity in the East." Hanway's Travels.—Buffeted him.—["Smote him with their fists," as Theophylact interprets.—Smote him with the palms of their hands.—"Smote him on the cheek with the open hand," as Suidas renders. They offered him every indignity in all its various and vexatious forms.]—Bagster.

Ver. 68. Who is he that smote thee?—Dr. Gill thinks this alludes to a play, resembling blind man's buff, called by the Greeks, Kollabismos. Thus was our Saviour made a jest of! But we rather think this was done in allusion to an ancient custom of covering the faces of condemned persons, as in the instance of Haman, Es. vii. 8. See also Je. xiv. 3. Likewise Harmer.

Ver. 69. Peter sat without in the palace.—The term aule, rendered palace, more properly signifies an open court. Faber's Heb. Archæology, and compare note on ver. 58.

Ver. 73. Thy speech bewrayeth—Or, betrayeth thee; meaning that his accent was Galilean. See Ma. iv. 79.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1. Took counsel—That is, consulted afresh; the preceding transactions took place during the night and early dawn. Their prisoner

2 And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him [b] to Pontius Pilate the governor.

3 ¶ Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4 Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent [c] blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

5 And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged [d] himself.

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day.

9 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken [e] by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, [f] whom they of the children of Israel did value;

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.

11 ¶ And Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.

12 And when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he [g] answered nothing.

13 Then said Pilate unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee?

14 And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

15 ¶ Now [h] at that feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.

16 And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

17 Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Who will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ?

18 For he knew that for envy [i] they had delivered him.

19 ¶ When he was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that [j] just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him.

20 ¶ But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask [k] Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

Conscience compelled Judas to tell the Jews, that he had 'betrayed innocent blood." Alas! for the thirty shekels of silver; had they been talents of gold, they could now have given him no satisfaction. Riches cannot purchase ease to the body, much less to the guilty mind. The wretch's only hope of relief, is by getting rid of them: but they were like a garment spotted with the plague; all were afraid to touch them. "I have betrayed innocent blood," says he: "What is that to us?" reply they, "see thou to that." Thus sinners attempt to shuffle off their guilt to one another. Judas may rid himself of the silver, by throwing it on the temple pavement; but guilt had seized his conscience, as a vulture fastens on his prey, and he fled to the last resource of hopeless misery: "he hanged himself!" And as he did this in the hurry of despair, he probably hung himself on the walls either of the temple or the city, where, the cord giving way, he fell into some part of the deep ravine beneath, when his bowels gushed out, and he perished miserably. (Acts i. 18, 19.) Surely, "it had been good for that man if he had not been born." (Chap. xxvi. 24.)

Suicide is a crime so awful and so frequent, that we must not pass it without an observation. In general, it proceeds either from insanity, or infidelity. In the former case it is much to be pitied; and all who have the care of persons constitutionally melancholy, owe a duty of constant vigilance over them, since we have an enemy who, "like a roaring lion, seeketh whom he may devour," and is never negligent in seizing such opportunities of doing mischief. The writer knew an instance of a good man—a minister of irreproachable character—who, in such a season of depression of mind, being alone, seized a razor and cut his throat; but immediately, as his friends came about him, he uttered this memorable sentence: "The Lord hath left me but one moment, and see what I have done!" Let us not be too severe in judging acts of unpremeditated suicide.

But it is much to be feared that the far greater part of self-murders are the fruit of infidelity. Among the higher classes of society, the writings of Hume, who justified the crime, may have deluded many; but among the lower classes, those of Paine have probably led astray many more. Not that he absolutely denied a future state; but he laboured to remove all the barriers of Christianity, and to persuade himself and others that there is nothing to be dreaded beyond the grave.

The suicide of an apostate is, of all others, the most awful; and that of Judas the most dreadful crime of this class.

> "Here we behold 'the rebel dead;
> Under the curse of God he lies;
> He seals the curse on his own head,
> And with a double vengeance dies!'"—Watts.

But what did the hypocritical priests, to whom the money was returned? They dare not put it into the treasury of the temple, because, they said, "It is the price of blood!" thus acknowledging that they had received it as the purchase of the blood of Jesus! But they aim to cover their flagitious crimes by an act of charity; they will buy with it "the potter's field, to bury strangers in." Ah! this was in perfect consistence with the character of their nation. They are famed for having killed the prophets, and then raised sepulchres to their memory. (Chap. xxiii. 29, 30.) They now buy a field to bury foreigners in, with the price of the blood of their own Messiah! Alas! how many professing Christians are there, who attempt to cover the sins of a whole life of injustice and oppression by a post-obit act of charity? very benevolently giving away that property which they can by no possibility retain a moment longer! Such is the charity of legacies in innumerable cases.

But God accomplishes his own will as well by the crimes as by the virtues of mankind; and those who oppose it with all their might, do but thereby fulfil it. This act of hypocrisy and villany had been predicted some centuries before. (See note on verse 9.) "Wherefore it was called the field of blood unto this day;" the time when Matthew wrote his Gospel, and probably much later. Indeed, the memorial is still preserved by tradition.

Ver. 11—25. Jesus brought before Pilate, who orders him to be crucified.—The Sanhedrim having condemned Jesus, would scarcely, we think, have hesitated to stone him imme-was now probably sent out of court, while they obtained some interval of rest or refreshment: but they again consulted together, so soon as the day was fully come.

Ver. 2. Pontius Pilate.—[Pontius Pilate governed Judea ten years under the emperor Tiberius, from his 13th to his 23d year, A. D. 26 to 36; but, having exercised great cruelties against the Samaritans, they complained to Vitellius, governor of Syria, who sent Marcellus, one of his friends, to superintend Judea, and ordered Pilate to Rome, to give an account of his conduct to Tiberius. The emperor was dead before he arrived; but it is an ancient tradition, that he was banished to Vienne in Dauphiny, where he was reduced to such extremity that he killed himself with his own sword two years after.—Euseb.]—B.

Ver. 5. And went and hanged himself.—Campbell, "Strangled himself," as the word certainly may mean; but Parkhurst also shows it is used for hanging, both by the LXX. and in the Classics; and we agree with Doddridge in preferring this interpretation.

Ver. 7. The potter's field—Which, according to Mr. Taylor, (the late Editor of Calmet,) was situated on the south, beyond the valley of Tophet, and at some distance without the walls. This had no doubt been formerly occupied as a pottery, (see Zec. xi. 12,) and the earth having been dug away for pottery, accounts for its being bought so cheap.

Ver. 9. By Jeremy (or Jeremiah) the prophet.—[The words here quoted are not found in Jeremiah, but in Zechariah; and a variety of conjectures have been formed in order to reconcile this discrepancy. The most probable opinion seems to be, that the name of the prophet was originally omitted by the Evangelist, and that the name of Jeremiah was added by some subsequent copyist. It is omitted in two MSS. of the 12th century, in the Syriac, later Persic, two of the Itala, and in some other Latin copies. Augustine also mentions that he name is wanting in some MSS. of his time. Griesbach marks it to be omitted. What renders it highly probable that the original reading was by the prophet, is, that St. Matthew frequently omits the name of the prophet in his quotations. See ch. i. 22; ii. 5, 15; xiii. 35; xxi. 4. This omission is approved of by Bengel, Dr. A. Clarke, and Horne.]—Bagster.——The price of him that was valued, &c.—We may either render these words, "of one who was sold, whom the children of Israel did sell," and so consider them as the price of a common slave; or, "of him that was sold, or valued, (Messiah,) whom the children of Israel sold," at the shameful price here named. See Doddridge, who considers these words as a parenthesis, and the words of Matthew.

Ver. 10. And gave them.—Doddridge, "And they were given," &c. Compare Zec. xi. 13, and notes there. Campbell renders it, "The thirty shekels, the stipulated price at which he was valued, I took, as the Lord appointed me, from the sons of Israel, who gave them for the potter's field."

Ver. 11. Art thou the King of the Jews?—Campbell, "Thou art the King of the Jews?" This form of the words is most literal, and ambiguity might be avoided by introducing the adverb then—"Thou art the King of the Jews then?" Answer, "Thou sayest;" i. e. "thou sayest truly."

Ver. 15. At that feast (the passover) the governor was wont to release . . a prisoner.—This was, it seems, in memorial of their being released from Egyptian bondage. The like custom, it seems, prevailed among some of the Greeks. Orient. Lit. No. 1241.

Verses 16, 17. Barabbas.—A thief, guilty also of murder and sedition. Origen says, that in many copies of his time, Barabbas was also called Jesus; and the Armenian version reads, "Whom will ye that I deliver up unto you, Jesus Barabbas, or Jesus who is called Christ?" Calmet and Michaelis.

Verses 18, 19. For he knew, &c.—Campbell considers these two verses as a parenthesis.

21 The governor answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas.

22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified.

23 And the governor said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let [l] him be crucified.

24 When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed [m] his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it.

25 Then answered all the people, and said, His [n] blood be on us, and on our children.

26 Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged [o] Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified.

27 ¶ Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the [p] common hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers.

diately, according to their law, but that they were restrained by the Roman power from capital execution, without the sanction of the governor; and no inferior punishment would satisfy the malice of the chief priests and scribes. They therefore bring Jesus before Pilate, and, in order the more to prejudice him against the prisoner, instead of accusing him with calling himself the Messiah, and the Son of God, to which Pilate was not likely to pay much attention, they bring another charge against him, more likely to offend the Romans, namely, that he styled himself "the king of the Jews." The first question, therefore, which Pilate proposes to Jesus is, "Thou art the king of the Jews, then?" Jesus admitted this under the explanation (John xviii. 36) that his kingdom was "not of this world;" which seems so far to have satisfied Pilate, that he laboured hard for his discharge, and therefore proposed, as it was customary for him to release to them a prisoner at the passover, that Jesus should be the man: they, however, were so bitter against their Messiah, that they prefer a robber and a murderer.

When the governor had again "sat down upon the judgment-seat," his wife sent to entreat him to "have nothing to do with that just man, (Jesus,) for (added she) I have suffered much because of him in a dream this day." The chief priests and elders, who had always great influence with the multitude, persuaded them, however, to ask for Barabbas, and for the death of Jesus; in so much that Pilate at length, in opposition to his own conscience, and to the entreaties of his wife, consented to their request, lest the Jews, who were prone to insurrection, should raise a tumult, which being reported to the emperor, might be fatal to his interests, and occasion his recall. We cannot, however, omit to regret that any man who was a governor and a judge, should sacrifice an innocent person (to say no more) to the clamour of a mob. This scene must one day be reversed. Pilate must stand at the bar of Jesus, and can it then be pleaded in extenuation of his guilt, that he was obliged to crucify Christ to save himself? We have nothing to do with the Roman governor now, but mention this merely to introduce the question—Have we, in any instance, sacrificed truth or justice to our temporal interests? 'God knoweth."

But O, how awful is the imprecation of the multitude: "Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children!" It may be recollected, that it was but a few days before, that "this same Jesus," whom they now execrate, was ushered into the city amidst the hosannas of "a very great multitude," (chap. xxi. 3,) many, very many of whom, it is to be feared, now joined in the cry of "Crucify him! crucify him!" So uncertain, so fleeting is the breath of popular applause! But what mean they by this imprecation, "His blood be upon us and upon our children?" Many, perhaps, knew not what they said; none, certainly, knew half the vengeance which they were now calling down from heaven upon themselves, and upon their country. This imprecation appears to have been remarkably fulfilled in the circumstances connected with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. Bishop Newton traces a striking correspondence between their sin and punishment. "They put Jesus to death when the nation was assembled to celebrate the passover; and when the nation was assembled to celebrate the passover, Titus shut them up within the walls of Jerusalem. The rejection of the true Messiah was their crime; and the following of false Messiahs to their destruction was their punishment. They sold and bought Jesus as a slave; and they themselves were afterwards sold and bought as slaves at the lowest prices. They preferred a robber and a murderer to Jesus, whom they crucified between two thieves; and they themselves were afterwards infested with bands of thieves and robbers. They put Jesus to death, lest the Romans should come and take away their place and nation; and the Romans did come, and took away their place and nation. They crucified Jesus before the walls of Jerusalem; and before the walls of Jerusalem they themselves were crucified in such numbers, that it is said room was wanting for the crosses, and crosses for the bodies. I should think it hardly possible for any man to lay these things together, and not conclude the Jews' own imprecation to be remarkably fulfilled upon them; 'his blood be on us, and on our children!'

"We Christians cannot, indeed, be guilty of the very same offence in crucifying the Lord of glory: but it behoves us to consider whether we may not be guilty in the same kind, and by our sins and iniquities "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame," (Heb. vi. 25.) and therefore whether, being like them in their crime, we may not also resemble them in their punishment. They rejected the Messiah, and we, indeed, have received him; but have our lives been at all agreeable to our holy profession? or rather, as we have had opportunities of knowing our Lord more, have we not obeyed him less than other Christians? And have not some of us (as in Heb. x. 29,) even "trodden under foot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith we are sanctified, an unholy thing, and done despite unto the Spirit of Grace?" (Newton's Dissert.)

Ver. 26—44. Jesus scourged, mocked, and crucified.—Were this narrative anonymous, or were it wrought into a scene in one of our most popular novels, how would it affect our sympathetic feelings! Were it then converted into history, and the name of some dear relative or friend inserted, to fill up the blank, how greatly would its interest be increased? But were it also discovered, that all this suffering had been occasioned by some fault of ours, and that all these miseries had been endured on our account, which of us could then read the narrative without agony and tears? That we can now read it

Ver. 24. He washed his hands before the multitude.—This rite of "washing the hands in innocency," appears to have originated in a Mosaical institution, De. xxi. 6, 7, is alluded to by David, Ps. xxvi., and was copied by the Gentiles. Ovid Fast. l. 2.

Ver. 26. When he had scourged Jesus.—This punishment was used both by the Jews and Romans. The latter being administered by military executioners, was no doubt severe, the flesh being generally cut by the whips used for this purpose; and some think it might be the more so in this instance, as Pilate hoped that the Jews, when they saw him scourged, might be pacified, without insisting on his crucifixion; but nothing could satisfy these cruel hypocrites, short of death, in its most tremendous form. See Doddridge.

Ver. 27. The whole band—What we might call his "body guard."

Ver. 28. Put on him a scarlet robe—That is, no doubt, a decayed and left off robe Mark calls the robe purple. See Ma. xv. 20. Scarlet and purple are not unfrequently interchanged. Such pieces of mockery were not uncommon in those times. When Herod Agrippa wished to display his royal dignity to the people, the mob, in ridicule, dressed up a half crazy man, with a pasteboard crown, a reed for a sceptre, and a robe of matting. Orient. Lit. No. 124; compare No. 1243.

Ver. 29. A crown of thorns.—The species of thorns here employed is doubtful, and of no consequence The object was, to inflict pain and ridicule; but, query, Have not all crowns more thorns than jewels in them?——A reed—Most probably a common walking cane. (Calamus.)

Ver. 30. They spit upon him.—See note on ch. xxvi. 67.

Ver. 31. And led him away.—Capital punishments were, both by Jews and Romans, generally inflicted without their cities; especially crucifixion. Orient. Cust. No. 1230.

Ver. 32. To bear his cross.—St. John informs us, that at first Jesus went forth bearing his cross; it may be, however, this referred only to the transverse beam, and that Simon carried the upright part after him; or if the cross was formed, that Jesus fainted under the weight, and it was then laid on Simon.

Ver. 33. Golgotha . . . . a place of a skull.—Campbell, "of skulls;" supposed to be so called from its having been a place of public execution. It is more usually called Mount Calvary; but of the mount there are no remains, nor do the Scriptures mention it; though as a place of execution it might probably be an elevated spot. The present Calvary is covered with religious buildings pretending to enclose our Saviour's tomb, and other Christian antiquities, all of which are doubtful, and some gross impositions; though they afford a rich revenue to monks and priests, both Greek and Roman Catholic. See Dr. R. Richardson's interesting Travels along the Mediterranean.

36 And sitting down they watched him there;

37 And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

38 Then were there two thieves [w] crucified with him, one on the right hand, and another on the left.

39 ¶ And they that passed by reviled him, wagging [x] their heads,

40 And saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

41 Likewise also the chief priests mocking [y] him, with the scribes and elders, said, 42 He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him.

43 He trusted in God; let [z] him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, [a] I am the Son of God.

44 The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.

45 ¶ Now from the sixth hour there was darkness [b] over all the land unto the ninth hour.

46 And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, [c] My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

47 Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias.

48 And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with [d] vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

49 The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

50 Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.

51 ¶ And, behold, the veil [e] of the temple was rent [f] in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; with so little feeling or effect, can be attributed to nothing so justly as our want of faith. Not that we are positive infidels, or reject the facts of Scripture history as fabulous; but we want that faith of appropriation that might enable each of us to say, "This was my friend, or brother! and all this he endured for me!"

> "'Twas for my sins, my dearest Lord
> Hung on the cursed tree;
> And groan'd away a dying life
> For thee, my soul, for thee!"—(Watts.)

Let us, by divine help, attempt briefly to review his sufferings under these impressions. 1. They preferred Barabbas! Ah! was that wretch, who had been convicted of insurrection, robbery, and murder, released in preference to my dear and benevolent friend? the worst of men spared, and the best given up to punishment, and all to appease an infatuated mob? O how are our resentments kindled at such base injustice!

2. They scourged Jesus. Who? The soldiers! Much has been said of the severity of military punishments, even when justly inflicted, and upon hardy soldiers; but was this severity exercised upon an innocent and benevolent individual, upon my dearest friend and benefactor? Alas! what language is sufficient to express our compassion and our grief!

Again, 3. They mocked him. Yes: while bleeding from the lashes of the Roman scourge, and from the crown of thorns with which his temples were environed, they array him in the faded and dirty robe, probably of some former Roman governor, and having placed a reed, or cane, in his right hand, by way of sceptre, they bow the knee, and hail him as their king, in ridicule. Thus injury is heaped on injustice, and insult upon injury, till they amount to an accumulation of crime altogether unprecedented. Yet this is but the beginning of sorrows! For,

Lastly, They crucify him. With the form of the cross, painters have made our eyes familiar; and they seem generally correct. Arrived at the place of execution, the pieces of the cross being put together, the criminal was laid naked upon it, and commonly nailed to it, through the nerves and sinews of his hands and feet. After being thus fastened, the cross was raised erect, with exquisite agony to the sufferer. Yet these wounds being all at the extremities, life departed but very slowly. Cicero calls crucifixion a "most cruel and horrid punishment; a punishment which must be far, not only from the body of a Roman citizen, but also from his eyes, and even his thoughts." It was indeed never inflicted, but upon the vilest criminals and the basest slaves. (See Orient. Lit. No. 1246.)

And is this the manner in which our friend, our brother, and our Saviour died? And was he thus tortured "for us men, and for our salvation?" "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, they that passed by him, mocked him, wagging their heads and saying, Save thyself;" also the chief priests, and scribes, and elders, (who ought to have been far from this scene,) said, "He saved others; himself he cannot save!" This, indeed, is the only truth they uttered; for had he saved himself, he could not have saved us. Also one of the thieves crucified with him, and at first probably both of them, joined in the reproach and ridicule, even in their dying moments. But let us confine our present meditation to the illustrious sufferer in the centre. There he hangs!

> "See from his head, his hands, his feet,
> Sorrow and love flow mingled down:
> Did e'er such love and sorrow meet,
> Or thorns compose so rich a crown?"—(Watts.)

Ver. 45—54. Prodigies attending our Saviour's death.—These were, 1. A preternatural darkness in the middle of the day, which could not proceed from a solar eclipse at passover time, because that was always at the time of the full moon: nor could the sun be eclipsed for any such length of time as is here specified. 2. An earthquake, whereby the veil of the temple was rent in twain; "the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened." Whether any monument of this event now remains, or whether the fissure in the rock now exhibited in the church of the sepulchre occurred at this early period, we presume not to decide; nor is it reasonable to demand ocular demonstration of an event which occurred nearly eighteen centuries ago. 3. Many bodies of the saints which slept, arose and came out of their graves after his (our Lord's) resurrection, and went into the holy city (Jerusalem) and appeared unto many. The expression "after his resurrection," demands our particular notice, as it secures to our Lord the honour of being the first-fruits of the resurrection. Who these individuals were, or to whom they appeared, are secrets as impenetrable as the foundations of the world; nor can we guess the object of their resurrection, unless it were to bear witness to the resurrection of our Lord. Their going to show themselves in the holy city, seems to imply that they were persons recently deceased, and well known there. The design of providence in all the previous circumstances appears to have been to prepare the minds of the spectators for the acknowledgment which immediately follows: "Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, (namely, the Roman guard,) saw the earthquake, and those (vinaigre, French) mingled with myrrh, bitter as gall. Myrrh itself, says Dr. Harris, is "extremely bitter." Nat. Hist. of the Bible. This mixture, or something like it, is said to have been given to criminals to deaden the sense of pain; which might be the reason why our Lord refused to drink it. See Orient. Lit. No. 1249.

Ver. 35. That it might be fulfilled.—Ps. xxii. 18.—Persons crucified were always stripped of their clothes, which became the perquisites of the executioners. Orient. Lit. No. 1250. This quotation, according to Campbell, is "wanting in a very great number of MSS." He thinks it was introduced here from Jn. xix. 24, to which place it belongs; but as it belongs there, the question is of no importance.

Ver. 37. This is Jesus, &c.—On this inscription, see Jn. xix. 19, &c.

Ver. 40. Thou that destroyest.—See note, chap. xxvi. 61.

Ver. 42. We will believe him.—So unbelievers argue. Could they see a miracle, they would believe; but our Lord says they would not, and facts confirm his words. They saw Lazarus raised from the dead, yet would not believe. See Jn. xi. 46. Compare Lu. xvi. 41.

Ver. 43. If he will have him—i. e. If he delight in him.

Ver. 44. Cast the same in his teeth.—Doddridge, "Upbraided him with the same reproach;" Campbell, "In the same manner."

Ver. 45. Now from the sixth hour.—Matthew and Mark reckon from sunrise, which at this time (about the equinox) was six o'clock, by our reckoning. Christ was then crucified at nine in the morning (the third hour, Ma. xv. 25;) the darkness came on at noon, the sixth hour, and continued till three in the afternoon, which was the ninth hour. See Jn. xix. 14.—[That this general darkness was wholly preternatural is evident from this, that it happened at the passover, which was celebrated only at the full moon, a time in which it was impossible for the sun to be eclipsed, natural eclipses happening only at the time of the new moon.]—Bagster. Dionysius the Areopagite, when in Egypt, noticed this unnatural darkness, and exclaimed, "Either the God of Nature suffers, or the machinery of nature is dissolving."

Ver. 46. Eli, Eli, &c.—This is a quotation from Ps. xxii. 1. These are not the precise Hebrew words, but in the Syro-Chaldaic dialect, which accounts for the words being misunderstood by some of the bystanders, (ver. 47.)—Why hast thou forsaken me?—In the application of this psalm to Christ, the words must not be understood as the language of unbelief; but as Bp. Horne explains them, Christ complains "that he was deprived, for a time, of the divine presence, and comforting influence, while he suffered for our sins."

Ver. 48. With vinegar—Or sour wine (see note on ver. 34,) which was used for the drink of the poorer classes. The method of giving this in a sponge to quench the thirst, appears to be still practised in Egypt. It is said that the thirst occasioned by crucifixion is the greatest of its torments, a circumstance, we believe, common to persons that bleed much.

Ver. 50. Yielded up the ghost.—Doddridge, "Dismissed his spirit." But Campbell remarks, the same phrase is used by the LXX. respecting Rachel. Ge. xxxv. 18; also frequently by Josephus, and several Greek writers.

Ver. 51. The veil was rent.—Ancient writers tell us that there were two veils: one in the entrance to the outer temple, and the other between that and 53 And came out of the graves [i] after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.

54 Now [j] when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God.

55 And many women were there beholding afar off, which [k] followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto him:

56 Among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

57 ¶ When [l] the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple:

58 He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered.

59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60 And [m] laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed.

61 And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre.

62 ¶ Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, 63 Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver [n] said, while he was yet alive, After [o] three days I will rise again.

64 Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and [p] steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

65 Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can.

66 So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing [q] the stone, and setting a watch.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Christ's resurrection is declared by an angel to the women. 9 He himself appeareth unto them. 11 The chief priests give the soldiers money to say that he was stolen out of his sepulchre. 16 Christ appeareth to his disciples, 19 and sendeth them to baptize and teach all nations.

things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was a good man: this was the Son of God." Here let us briefly consider the persons before us; what they saw and heard; what they felt, and what they said.

The persons were, the Roman centurion and his soldiers; men accustomed to view scenes of blood and horror, whose feelings, whatever they might naturally have been, we may reasonably suppose to have been greatly blunted by their profession, and the last feeling likely to possess them, was that of fear; yet they "feared greatly." What did they see? They saw a man of the most unblemished character treated as the very chief of sinners, and that merely to gratify a few bigoted and cruel priests, and their blind, infuriated adherents. They saw those men transformed into worse than beasts—into monsters; for none other could surely ridicule a man in the article of death, and jest with his dying agonies. They heard their taunts and their revilings; they heard, too, the dying prayers of the illustrious sufferer: they heard him address the Almighty as his father and his friend; they heard him (so Luke informs us) pray for mercy to his murderers, and then patiently resign his soul into the hands of God. But what effect had all these extraordinary scenes upon them? "They feared greatly," being convinced by what they had seen and heard, that Jesus could be neither an enthusiast nor an impostor, nor merely a wise and good man; they believed him to be truly what he declared himself to be, "the Son of God!"

"I think (says Dr. Boothroyd) that the centurion could not be ignorant of what our Lord had so often said of himself, (that he was the Son of God,) and that under the impression which these awful events had made on his mind, he speaks, not as a heathen polytheist, but as admitting the claim which our Lord had made to be just."

Ver. 55—66. The burial of our Saviour.—It is much to the honour of the female sex, that the evangelists have taken so much notice of the attachment and fidelity of those women who attended on the ministry of our Lord; and who themselves ministered to his necessities and comfort. It was not a woman that betrayed him, or that denied him; nor is it said of them, "they all forsook him, and fled." Dr. Doddridge, who remarks the pious attachment of these females, is inclined to think that their sex, "in the sight of God, constitute by far the better half of mankind: and to whose care and tenderness the wisest and best of men generally owe and ascribe much of the daily comfort and enjoyment of their lives." Ledyard, the celebrated American traveller, has remarked, that "women, in all countries, are civil, obliging, tender, and humane. In wandering over the barren plains of Denmark; through honest Sweden, and frozen Lapland; rude and churlish Finland; unprincipled Russia; and the regions of the wandering Tartar; if hungry, cold, wet, or sick, the women have ever been friendly to me, and uniformly so." Mungo Park, the unfortunate African traveller, bears a like testimony in favour of female benevolence. But when to this natural virtue (if we may so call it) the grace of God is added, to direct and to improve it, it is difficult to speak in too high terms of the female character.

But the faithful followers of Jesus were not all females; nor were the men always of the lower class. Joseph of Arimathea was a rich man, though his disciple: and seeing his Master dead, knew not how better to show his attachment and respect, than by begging his body of the governor, in order to deposit it in a new tomb, which he had hewn out for himself in a rock in his own garden. Nicodemus, another ruler of the Jews, and secretly a disciple, (John xix. 39,) brought also a large quantity of spices, and having obtained leave of Pilate, they took down his body from the cross, and having swathed the body in fine linen, and covered it with spices, (or perfumes,) they closed the door, and placed a heavy stone against it. The hypocritical Pharisees were at this time busy with their passover, or it is probable they would have tried to prevent this. Next morning, however, recollecting (what all his disciples seem to have forgotten) that Jesus promised to rise again, they beg that the governor will make sure the sepulchre, lest his disciples should steal the body, and by the substitution of a living person, pretend that he had risen from the dead. Pilate, however, having on his part no apprehensions, leaves this to themselves. "So they went, and made the sepulchre sure; sealing the stone, and setting a watch."

These circumstances, fortuitous as they may seem, were doubtless all arranged in providence, not only for the accomplishment of our redemption, but also for the fulfilment of divine prophecy. Isaiah had said, "He made his grave with the wicked," or, as we render it, "He was placed with the wicked in his death; but with the rich was his sepulchre." Upon the cross "he was numbered among transgressors," but he was honoured in his tomb; (see Isa. liii. 9, 12, expos. and notes;) but he fell only to conquer; he died to rise and reign, and thus fulfil another prophecy, "O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy destruction!" (Hos. xiii. 14.)

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—15. The resurrection of Jesus.—Very "early," that is, about break of day, on the first day of the week, (corresponding with our Sunday,) Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, mentioned ver. 56 of the preceding chapter, came to the sepulchre, with a view of embalming the body of Jesus, not knowing that the stone had been sealed, and a Ver. 54. Truly this was the Son of God.—[Since they were Romans that said this, some think it evident that they meant to say that he was not only an innocent, but altogether a just man, as in Lu. xxiii. 47. But in fact that expression is explained by this; for, as Jesus was crucified by the Jews for saying that he was "the Son of God;" so if he were a righteous man, and unjustly condemned, he must be 'the Son of God." Some render "a son of a God," that is, according to the pagan notions, a hero, or demi-god, such as Hercules, &c. But in this, and in some other places, the article is omitted before huyos, son, when it is used in the highest sense; and Bp. Middleton, on the Greek article, has shown, that theou huyos, son of God, and huyos tou theou, "the son of God," are used without any exact discrimination. "The centurion," as he observes, "could not fail to know the alleged blasphemy for which our Saviour suffered; and had he intended, in heathen phraseology, to express his admiration of our Saviour's conduct, he would not have called our Saviour Son of God."]—Bagster.

Ver. 61. Sitting over against the sepulchre.—Among the Greeks, as well as the Jews, women were accustomed to sit at the graves of their deceased friends. See Orient. Lit. p. 360.

Ver. 62. The day of the preparation—Viz. Friday.

Ver. 64. Until the third day—That this, and "after three days," (ver. 63,) were convertible terms, we have here decisive proof, the Jews themselves being witnesses.

Ver. 65. Ye have a watch—Perhaps referring to the Roman guard in the castle of Antonio, which is here offered them.

Ver. 66. Sealing the stone.—This was usually done with clay. Norden, in his Travels in Egypt, Nubia, &c. speaking of sealing a granary, says, "The doors are shut only with wooden locks; but the inspectors of the granary, after having shut the door, put on it their seal, on a handful of clay, which they make use of as wax. Query, Was this the kind of seal used to secure our Lord's sepulchre?" [Every thing was here done which human policy and prudence could, to prevent a resurrection, which these very precautions had the most direct tendency to authenticate and establish.]—Bagster.

came [o] Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.

2 And, behold, there [c] was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

3 His [d] countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

4 And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

5 And the angel answered [e] and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for [f] I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

6 He is not here: for he is risen, as he [g] said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

7 And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen [h] from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there [i] shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

8 And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word.

9 ¶ And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All [j] hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

10 Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my [k] brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

11 ¶ Now when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and showed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12 And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers, 13 Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole [l] him away while we slept.

14 And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

15 So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

16 ¶ Then [m] the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.

17 And when they saw [n] him, they worshipped him: but some doubted.

18 ¶ And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All [o] power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

19 Go [p] ye therefore, and [q] teach [r] all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

20 Teaching [s] them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I [t] am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

military guard placed thereat, or they doubtless would not have ventured to come. The guard, however, had been so terrified by the appearance of an angel from heaven, and the earthquake that took place at the same time, that part of them had run into the city, to tell what had happened, while the rest lay around the sepulchre, terrified and insensible. The angel, who had rolled away the stone from the mouth of the sepulchre, was sitting on it, and had courteously invited the women to look in, and see the place where their Lord had lain, who was now risen from the dead. At the same time they were directed to go and tell this joyful news to his disciples, (especially the apostles,) and to inform them that he would give them all an interview with him in Galilee.

The women accordingly, with a mixture of fear and joy, ran to seek the eleven, and impart to them the joyful tidings. By the way, however, Jesus himself meets them, and after discovering who he was, directs them to proceed with their message, and confirm his promise by the angel, that he would be with his disciples in Galilee. The women of course proceeded to Jerusalem; and about the same time, some of the soldiers who had kept watch at the sepulchre, ran and informed the chief priests of "all the things that were done." So that between the women and the soldiers, considerable agitation must have been excited, among both the friends and enemies of Jesus: the former elevated to hope and joy; the latter alarmed, and justly, lest their malice should be defeated, and the Roman governor excited against them.

The excuse here invented by the guard, though a very common one, was not only highly improbable, but very dangerous to the guard themselves, to be advanced. If they slept, how could they tell what became of the body? and besides, this was the confession of a capital offence, and at the same time laid them open to the suspicion of treachery and collusion. But it was the only apology they could think of, and to this day the Jews have not been able to suggest a better ground for their infidelity.

In all this, however, we may see the hand of Providence. Had no guard, or only a guard of Levites, been appointed to the sepulchre, such a pretence might have had the colour of possibility; but even then it was not likely that men who were themselves so hard to believe, should unite in a plot to persuade others. Certainly the extreme reluctance of the apostles of Jesus to admit the fact, is a strong presumption that they were compelled to it, by ocular demonstration, and with Thomas even that was scarcely found sufficient. (See Jn. xx. 25—27.)

Ver. 16—20. Christ's final exaltation, and last commission to his disciples.—Jesus had, previously to his death, appointed afterwards to meet his apostles in Galilee, which was repeatedly fulfilled. Doddridge, Wesley, and others, think it was on this occasion that our Lord appeared to 500 brethren at once, (1 Cor. xv. 6;) but this is by no means certain. To us it appears that this was the last interview which our Lord had with his disciples, previous to his return to heaven; so Mr. Preb. Townsend. In our Lord's words we remark the following important points.

1. The dignity to which Jesus Christ was now about to be exalted, on his ascension to the Father. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." This must refer to that delegated authority conferred upon the Messiah, which was the reward of his passion, and the ground of his authority, as King of the church. (Ps. ii. 7—9; cx. 1, &c. Matt. xi. 27. John xiii. 3; xvii. 2. Phil. ii. 9—11, &c. &c.) Whether that authority could be exercised by a mere creature; that is, whether such creature could be every where present—every where reign, protect, and bless his people; is another question, which we leave to be resolved by those who wish so to degrade the Son of God.

2. The commission which Messias gives to his apostles and others, to disciple, to proselyte, to Christianize, or as Milton better expresses it, to evangelize the world. "I (says the divine Saviour) have all power in heaven and on earth; go ye, therefore, and proclaim the glad tidings of mercy to every human creature." This did the first disciples and apostles of our Lord, to the extent of their means; and this, more or less, have all their true successors done, up to the present day; and this is still the doing of what, in common parlance, is called, the Missionary enterprise. (Dr. Morrison's Parting Memorial, 1826.)

The introduction of the Christian doctrine of the Trinity into this institution, may suggest to us, that the great point which concerns us therein, is to render equal honour to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, in their respective offices in the economy of human redemption: a subject better studied upon our knees than in the schools. But when it is added, "Teach-being over, and the first day of the week beginning to dawn." This agrees with Ma. xvi. 1. The Jewish sabbath began on Friday evening (when stars of the second magnitude arose,) and ended at the same time on Saturday evening.

Ver. 3. His countenance.—Not his face only, but his whole appearance.

Ver. 9. As they went to tell his disciples.—Many MSS. omit these words.

——All hail.—Campbell, "Rejoice!" Doddridge, however, retains the term 'hail," without the word all, to which there is nothing answerable in the original. ——Held him by the feet, &c.—" Exactly this kind of reverence may be seen daily among the Hindoos. A Hindoo disciple meeting his religious guide in the public street, prostrates himself before him, and rubs the dust off his feet, on his forehead and breast." Ward's Hindoos.

Ver. 11. Now when they were going.—Doddridge, "While they were going;" Campbell, "When they were gone."

Ver. 12. Gave large money.—Doddridge, "A large sum of money;" more literally, "of silver," i. e. shekels.

Ver. 14. And secure you.—The Roman (as well as Greek) punishment for sleeping on duty, was death. Orient. Lit. No. 1260.

Ver. 15. Until this day.—When Matthew wrote. Justin Martyr says, "that the Jews sent chosen men of considerable rank over all the world, not only in the general to represent the followers of Christ as an impious sect, but to assert that the body of Jesus was stolen out of his tomb by night; and that the persons who thus fraudulently conveyed him away, took occasion thence to report that he rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven. And this message is spoken of as having been sent before the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ver. 17. But some doubted.—"Though some (of the company) had (at first) doubted." So Doddridge explains it. Paley says, "It is to be supposed that Christ appeared at first at a distance, when the greater part worshipped him; but some doubted, till Jesus came up, and spoke to them." So Dr. Townson.

Ver. 19. Teach all nations.—The word teach here, is quite different from the one used in the next verse. This word signifies to "disciple," or make disciples (or Christians) of all nations; and is so rendered in our margin, and to the same effect, we believe, by all modern translators. Doddridge employs the term "proselyte;" but Campbell justly objects to this phrase, as too technical; to the verb "disciple" he objects, as not found in the English language; but it is hard to say this of a word used both by Shakspeare and Spenser, (see Johnson,) and among divines, by Bishop Beveridge, Dr. Scott, Mr. Wesley, &c.

Ver. 20. Unto the end of the world.—Some render this, "to the end of the age," meaning the Jewish state; but Abp. Newcome understands it of the gospel dispensation, which will indeed run parallel with the duration of the world. "Nothing seems more unreasonable, (says Doddridge,) than to limit these words to the end of the Jewish state."

ing them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," we should never forget to give a prominent situation to that peculiar and comprehensive precept of our Saviour, "These things I command you, that ye love one another." (John xv. 17.)

The promise annexed to this command is certainly of the most encouraging nature; and, so far as it relates to the aids of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of the heart, must no more be limited to any age than to any nation: "Lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

3. With the propagation of the gospel among the heathen is here intimately connected the initiatory ordinance of Christian Baptism, as a distinguishing mark of separation from the heathen world. Much more attention has been paid to this part of our Lord's address than to the preceding. Many volumes have been written as to the quantity of water necessary to the due administration of this ordinance, the manner of its application, and the parties to whom it should be administered. These controversies we are very far from wishing to revive. We are fully persuaded that Christians, the more they enter into the spirit of their Master's institutions, the less will they be inclined to dispute respecting circumstantials.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW.

[MATTHEW being one of the twelve apostles, and from the time of his call, a constant attendant on our Saviour, was perfectly well qualified to write the history of his life. He relates what he saw and heard with the most natural and unaffected simplicity, and in a plain and perspicuous style. That for which he is eminently distinguished, says Dr. Campbell, "is the distinctness and particularity with which he has related many of our Lord's discourses and moral instructions. Of these, his sermon on the mount, his charge to the apostles, his illustrations of the nature of his kingdom, and his prophecy on mount Olivet, are examples. He has also wonderfully united simplicity and energy in relating the replies of his Master to the cavils of his adversaries. Being early called to the apostleship, he was an eye and ear witness of most of the things which he relates. And, though I do not think it was the scope of any of these historians to adjust their narratives by the precise order of time wherein the events happened, there are some circumstances which incline me to think, that Matthew has approached at least as near that order as any of them." The consideration, that the gospel of St. Matthew is a history of what he heard and saw, merely allowing him to be a man of integrity, would of itself fully prove that he would make no mistakes in his narrative; and when we add to this the influence and superintendence of the Holy Spirit, under which he constantly acted, and which our Lord promised to his disciples, (John xiv. 26.) it must be allowed to possess the utmost degree of credibility and authority with which any writing could be invested. It is a piece of history which, it must be acknowledged, is "the most singular in its composition, the most wonderful in its contents, and the most important in its object, that was ever exhibited to the notice of mankind. For simplicity of narrative, and an artless relation of facts, without any applause or censure, or digressive remarks, on the part of the historian, upon the characters introduced in it; without any intermixture of his own opinion, upon any subject whatsoever; and for a multiplicity of internal marks of credibility, this Gospel certainly has no parallel among human productions." "There is not," as Dr. A. Clarke justly remarks, "one truth or doctrine, in the whole oracles of God, which is not taught in this Evangelist. The outlines of the whole spiritual system are here correctly laid down: even Paul himself has added nothing: he has amplified and illustrated the truths contained in this Gospel; but, even under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, neither he, nor any of the other Apostles, have brought to light one truth, the prototype of which has not been found in the words and acts of our blessed Lord as related by Matthew."]—Bagster.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MARK.

[MARK is generally supposed to be the same with John surnamed Mark, who was "sister's son to Barnabas,' (Col. iv. 10.) and the son of Mary, a pious woman of Jerusalem, at whose house many were assembled together praying when Peter was delivered from prison. (Ac. xii. 12.) St. Peter (1 Ep. v. 13.) calls him "Marcus my son," probably implying that he was converted by his ministry, and served with him in the gospel. He accompanied St. Paul in his travels, (Ac. xii. 25; xiii. 5, 13; xv. 36—41. 2 Ti. iv. 4. Phil. 24;) and he is said to have been particularly intimate with St. Peter, under whose inspection, it is generally agreed, he wrote his gospel at Rome, between the years A. D. 60 and 65. Eusebius informs us, (Hist. Eccles. l. ii. ç. 15.) from Papias and Clement of Alexandria, that St. Mark composed his gospel at the earnest request of St. Peter's hearers at Rome; and that the Apostle being informed of what was done by the revelation of the Holy Spirit, authorized it to be introduced into the churches. With this agrees the internal evidence furnished by the Gospel itself; for many things honourable to St. Peter are omitted in it, which are mentioned by other Evangelists, while his weaknesses and failings are freely exposed to view. It is also undeniable, that from the earliest ages of the church, this Gospel was received, not only as genuine and authentic, but as a divinely inspired writing. Some learned men, in opposition to the unanimous voice of antiquity, have represented it as an abridgment of that of St. Matthew. But, though he doubtless relates many of the same facts, and some of the parables and discourses, in common with St. Matthew; yet he omits many important particulars, and adds others, dilates upon some facts but concisely mentioned by Matthew, not without considerable variation, and now and then departs from the order of time observed by that apostle. Hence there is no reason to suppose, that he intentionally took any thing from Matthew, but that he wrote such things as were especially brought to his knowledge, and impressed on his mind; and the coincidence seems to have arisen, rather from the circumstance of their writing the history of the same grand and interesting events, than from any design in the one deducing his materials from the other. That St. Mark wrote his gospel in Greek, is attested by the uninterrupted voice of antiquity, and is now generally admitted; and the occurrence of several Latin words, which has led some to contend for a Latin original, may easily be accounted for, by supposing it was written for the use of the Roman people, by a person then resident among them; and it is on this account that he omits the genealogy of our Lord, and some other matters, as being of no importance to Gentile converts, though very necessary for the Jews.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

1 The office of John the Baptist. 9 Jesus is baptized, 12 tempted, 14 he preacheth: 16 calleth Peter, Andrew, James, and John: 23 healeth one that had a devil, 29 Peter's mother-in-law, 32 many diseased persons, 41 and cleanseth the leper.

THE beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the [a] Son of God;

2 As it is written in the [b] prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

3 The [c] voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 John [d] did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance [e] for the remission [f] of sins.

5 And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing [g] their sins.

6 And John was clothed with camel's hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts [h] and wild honey;

7 And preached, saying, There [i] cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

8 I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize [j] you with the Holy Ghost.

9 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized [k] of John in Jordan.

10 And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens [l] opened, and the [m] Spirit like a dove descending upon him:

11 And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved [n] Son, in whom I am well pleased.

12 ¶ And immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—15. The baptism of John.—Mark, as well as John, (ch. i. 1.) begins his narrative of the Gospel history with asserting the dignity of his divine Master, as the Son of God; and this will appear the more clearly if we examine the prophetic announcement with which he is here introduced. Passages are quoted both from Isaiah and Malachi, announcing his approach in the name of the Lord, and clothed with his authority; and at the same time predicting the arrival of a prophet in the spirit and power of Elias (or Elijah) to prepare the way before him. (Isa. xl. 3, 4. Mal. iii. 1; iv. 5.) That John the Baptist was Elias we have the explicit testimony of Jesus Christ himself, (Mat. xi. 14;) and that Jesus was the august person whose way he was to prepare, we have the no less express declaration of the Baptist. "This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me, for he was before me; and I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water." (John i. 30, 31.)

As we have already briefly noticed the character and mission of this prophet of the New Testament, (Mat. chap. iii.) we shall carefully avoid repetition; but our readers will certainly be gratified by the parallel between Elijah and John the Baptist, as sketched by the masterly hand of Bishop Horne, though we have been obliged somewhat to condense, and to abridge it. "An ambassador of heaven, sent to preach truth to those who are captivated by error, and righteousness to those who are enamoured of sin, will never proceed far in the discharge of his trust, unless he be endued with a fervent zeal

CHAP. I. Ver. 2. In the prophets.—[Several MSS., the Syriac, Persic, Coptic, Armenian, Gothic, Vulgate, and Itala versions, and several of the fathers, have, "by Isaiah the prophet," which should probably be adopted instead of the common text.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. The latchet of whose shoes.—See note on Mat. iii. 11.

Ver. 10. Compare this verse and next with Mat. iii. 16, 17.

Ver. 12. The spirit driveth him.—This refers, doubtless, to the Holy Spirit, and is, perhaps, too forcibly rendered. Campbell, "Conveyed." Ver. 43 and elsewhere it is rendered "sent." Compare Mat. iv. 17. [Or, "sendeth him

13 And [o] he was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto him.

14 ¶ Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus [p] came into Galilee, preaching the gospel [q] of the kingdom of God,

15 And saying, The time [r] is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent [s] ye, and believe [t] the gospel.

16 ¶ Now [u] as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

17 And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18 And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little farther thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

20 And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

21 And they went into Capernaum; and straightway on the sabbath day he entered into the synagogue, and taught.

22 And [v] they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.

23 ¶ And [w] there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,

24 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God.

25 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26 And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27 And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him.

28 And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29 ¶ And [x] forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

30 But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her.

31 And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.

32 ¶ And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

for the cause and for the honour of him that sent him. Every holy person is not blessed with a spirit, any more than he is invested with a commission, to appear in a public capacity to reprove rulers and kings, to look an angry world in the face, and overcome all the opposition it can raise against him. Zeal, without holiness to support it, like a meteor, will blaze and expire. Zeal, without knowledge to limit and direct it, will waste and destroy, like the element from the effect of which it takes its name, when that has burst its bounds, and rules where it ought to be in subjection. But when knowledge and holiness are first obtained, it is zeal which must quicken and diffuse them, as the sun doth light and heat, for the benefit of the universe. Then stood up Elias as fire, saith the son of Sirach, and his word burnt like a lamp. And our Lord, speaking of the Baptist, gives this account of him. He was a burning and a shining light. His zeal was tempered with knowledge, for it gave light; and his knowledge was actuated by zeal, for it was burning as well as shining. His sermons came warm from the heart of the speaker, and therefore found their way to that of the hearer, which was inflamed by them with the love, as well as enlightened with the knowledge, of heavenly things." But for the rest of this beautiful parallel, we must refer to our original. (Bishop Horne's Considerations on the Life and Death of John the Baptist, Sect. v.)

Nor must we again here enter on the subject of Christ's baptism, farther than to subjoin from the same pious author the following remark: "No sooner was Jesus baptized, but he came up straightway out of the river, like another Joshua, leading his people through the waters of Jordan to the land of promise. And as he was praying, doubtless for the success of the great work he had undertaken, 'Lo! the heavens were opened, and the Spirit of God, encompassed, we may presume, with a blaze of glory, 'descended in a bodily shape, like a dove,' speaking better things than that of Noah. In this form, emblematical of innocence and purity, it 'lighted,' settled, and abode upon him; the Father thus consecrating him to his office, by anointing him with the Holy Ghost and with power, as the legal ministers were anointed with oil. And that no doubt might remain, the appearance was farther explained by a voice from heaven, saying, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased!'"

Ver. 21—39. Jesus preaches in a synagogue; casts out a demon, and retires for prayer early in the morning.—Here are two interesting facts on which we have not before remarked, for the demoniac here mentioned is evidently not one of those sent into the herd of swine, though their exclamation was to the same effect. (Matt. viii. 29.) Satan and his demons doubtless knew that one great object of Christ's incarnation was to destroy his power upon earth, or in the language of the first oracle, to "bruise his head." (Gen. iii. 15.) When, therefore, they saw the miracles that Jesus did, they trembled on that account, and cried out, "What have we to do with thee?" or, as Dr. Campbell renders it, "What hast thou to do with us?" The phrase, taken either way, seems equivalent to saying, "Why shouldest thou interfere with us? We do not interfere with thee: we know and acknowledge thee to be the Holy One of God: let us therefore alone, and interfere not with us." Satan is at all times ready to make a truce with Christ, knowing that he would gain at least time thereby: but there is no neutrality in this warfare. Our Prince and Captain has declared, "He that is not with me is against me," (Matt. xii. 30;) and all who do not fight under his banners, he will consider as confederate with his enemies. Let those who endeavour to divide their affections between Christ and the world, and so to "serve God and Mammon," duly consider this. Such persons may, indeed, be ready to say to Christ, "We know that thou art the Holy One of God:" we know that thy religion is holy; but let us alone, for we are sinners, and "desire not the knowledge of thy ways."

The cure of Peter's wife's mother we may pass over, as having been already considered, (Matt. viii. 14, 15;) but we cannot omit observing the absurdity of the church of Rome, in making a married man (as we see Peter was) the head of their church, and then denying marriage to all their clergy! But on this subject, more hereafter.

The principal topic on which we would here remark, is the extreme diligence and ardent piety of our Saviour. Late on the preceding evening we find him occupied in healing the sick, and casting out demons; and yet on the next morning, at the early dawn, before it was well day, we find him hurrying out of the town (where it was in vain to look for it) to find a solitary place for prayer; and as this was the morning after the sabbath, there is reason to think that it might have a particular reference to his public work. Here, therefore, our Saviour may be especially considered as a model for public teachers, whose time is often so much engrossed by their benevolent exertions as to tempt them to neglect personal religion, though that is certainly no less indispensable than the performance of public duties. These should be done, and the other not left undone. The only method to accomplish both, forth." The expression does not necessarily imply any violence, but seems to intimate the energy of that impulse on the mind of our Lord, by which he was inwardly constrained to retire from society.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Capernaum.—[Capernaum was a city of Galilee, (Lu. iv. 31.) situated on the confines of Zebulun and Naphtali, (Mat. iv. 13.) on the western border of the lake of Tiberias, (Jn. vi. 59,) and in the land of Gennesareth, (chap. vi. 53. Mat. xiv. 34.) where Josephus places a spring of excellent water, called Capernaum. Dr. Lightfoot places it between Tiberias and Tarichea, about two miles from the former; and Dr. Richardson, in passing through the plain of Gennesareth, was told by the natives that the ruins of Capernaum were quite near.]—B.

38 And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore [z] came I forth.

42 And as soon as he had spoken, immediately [b] the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

44 And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things [c] which Moses commanded, for a testimony [d] unto them.

45 But he went out, and began to [e] publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and [f] they came to him from every quarter.

CHAPTER II.

1 Christ heareth one sick of the palsy, 14 calleth Matthew from the receipt of custom, 15 eateth with publicans and sinners, 18 excuseth his disciples for not fasting, 23 and for plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath day.

AND again he entered into Capernaum, after some days; and it was noised that he was in the house.

2 And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and he preached [a] the word unto them.

3 ¶ And [b] they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5 When Jesus saw their [c] faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts,

7 Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? who can forgive sins [d] but God only?

8 And immediately when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9 Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power [e] on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy,)

11 I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thy house.

12 And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We [f] never saw it on this fashion.

is by redeeming time, though it may be at the price of many of our comforts and indulgences. One way to do this is by early rising, of which our Lord is the first and great pattern, though there are not wanting brilliant examples among ourselves, even in the first ranks of society. George III., of England, was distinguished through life by his early rising; his grandfather, George II., set him the example; and during the long German war, constantly rose at a very early hour to implore the divine blessing on his armies and government. Col. Gardiner, after his conversion, constantly spent two hours in religious exercises every morning, before he entered upon any other engagement; and when called to be on duty at five o'clock, would not sleep later than three. Many examples might be adduced also from the clerical profession, of whom the late Mr. John Wesley was one of the most remarkable, and no one, perhaps, has more forcibly recommended it. All men have not this gift. Disease and constitutional infirmities prevent many, but indolence and indulgence many, very many more. Let us not, however, spend our zeal in reforming others, and forget ourselves.

Some considerable time (as it should seem) after this, the apostles followed, but it was at an humble distance, as we follow them. It is a mercy to us all that we have an indulgent master, who will make for us those excuses that we might be ashamed to make for ourselves. "The spirit," says he, "is willing, but the flesh is weak." His kindness, however, should not be abused, but should rather stimulate our exertions.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—28. "We cannot deliver our fellow-sinners from the maladies of the body, much less from those of the soul: but we may, in various ways, be helpful in bringing them to Christ

Ver. 34. Suffered not the devils to speak, &c.—"'It is not the office of the devil to preach the gospel . . . . who is never more to be feared by us, than when he transforms himself into an angel of light.' Beza.—'He suffered not the evil spirits to profess their knowledge of him; because he would not have him, who is the father of lies, to slander and disgrace the truth by his testimony.' —Bp. Hall."—T. Scott.

Ver. 35. A great while before day.—Doddridge, "In the morning, before it was light;" i. e. at the first dawn of day.

Ver. 39. Galilee.—[Galilee was a province of Palestine, being bounded, says Josephus, on the west by Ptolemais and Mount Carmel; on the south by the country of Samaria and Scythopolis, on the river Jordan; on the east, by the cantons of Hippos, Gadara, and Gaulon; and on the north by the confines of the Tyrians. It was divided into Lower and Upper Galilee:—Upper Galilee, so called from its being mountainous, was eminently termed Galilee of the Gentiles, (Mat. iv. 15.) because it abounded with them, being inhabited, says Strabo, by Egyptians, Arabians, and Phœnicians, and comprehended the tribes of Asher and Naphtali;—the Lower Galilee contained the tribes of Zebulun and Issachar, and was sometimes termed the Great Field. It was, says Josephus, very populous and rich, containing 204 cities and towns.]—Bagster.

Ver. 45. Could no more, &c.—"The total want of inclination, or an entire aversion, forms as real an impossibility, as to the event, as a total want of physical power; but an impossibility, which in no degree interferes with our free agency, or responsibility."—T. Scott.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. After some days.—The omission of any number here, seems to have occasioned a variety of supplements. Some copies supply "eight," others "many," but some appears to be the most general and unexceptionable.—It was noised.—Gr. "heard;" i. e. the report of it.

Ver. 2. About the door—That is, in the porch.

Ver. 3. Borne of four.—Carried by four men.

Ver. 4. For the press—That is, of people; Campbell, "the crowd."—They uncovered the roof.—The Gr. (stege) seems applicable to any kind of covering from sun and shade. According to Dr. Shaw, and other eastern travellers, the houses in Judea are all low, and flat-roofed, and built somewhat like our ancient inns, with a square in the centre, into which all the windows opened, and often with stairs on the outside. (See note on Mat. xxiv. 17.) In the court within, large companies were often entertained, and over it was then spread a large curtain, or awning, to keep off the sun. The Greek reads literally, "they uncovered the covering;" but Dr. Campbell, in better English "They uncovered the place where Jesus was, and through the opening let down the couch on which the paralytic lay."

Ver. 5. Thy sins be forgiven thee.—[The Jews believed that not only death, but all disease, was the consequence of sin.—"There is no death without sin, nor any chastisement without iniquity." (Shabbath.) And that "no diseased person could be healed of his disease till his sins were blotted out." (Nedarim.) Our Lord, therefore, as usual, appeals to their received opinions, and asserts his high dignity, by first forgiving the sins, and then healing the body of the paralytic.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Who can forgive sins but God only?—Pope Leo X., in the year 1517, published general indulgences throughout all Europe, to such as would contribute to the building of St. Peter's, at Rome. According to a book called the Tax of the Sacred Roman Chancery, in which are contained the exact sums to be levied for the pardon of each particular sin, we find some of the fees to be thus:

	l.	s.	d.
For procuring abortion,	0	7	6
For simony,	0	10	6
For sacrilege,	0	10	6
Taking a false oath,	0	9	0
For robbing,	0	12	0
For burning a neighbour's house,	0	12	0
For defiling a virgin,	0	9	0
Lying with a mother, sister, &c.	0	7	6
Murdering a layman,	0	7	6
Keeping a concubine,	0	10	6
Assaulting a priest,	0	10	6
	*l.*5	6	6

So that for 5*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* or about $24 of our currency, a Roman Catholic could purchase the remission of all these abominable sins. See Buck's Theological Dictionary, under the head of Indulgences.

Ver. 8. When Jesus perceived in his spirit.—Campbell, "Jesus knowing in himself." He adds, "There is something particular in the expression of the Evangelist. To me it appears manifest, that the intention of the sacred writer was, to signify that our Lord, in this case, did not derive his knowledge from the ordinary and outward methods of discovery, which are open to all men; but 13 ¶ And he went forth again by the sea side; and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 And [g] as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alpheus sitting [h] at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15 ¶ And [i] it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans [j] and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

16 And when the scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

17 When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, they [k] that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners [l] to repentance.

18 ¶ And the disciples of John and of the Pharisees used to fast: and they come and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bridegroom [m] is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then [n] shall they fast in those days.

21 No man also seweth a piece of [o] new cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse.

22 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles: else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be [p] marred: but new wine must be put into new bottles.

23 ¶ And [q] it came to pass, that he went through the corn fields on the sabbath day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck [r] the ears of corn.

24 And the Pharisees said unto him, Behold, why do they on the sabbath day that which is not lawful?

25 And he said unto them, Have ye never read what David [s] did, when he had need, and was a hungered, he, and they that were with him?

26 How he went into the house of God, in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the [t] shew-bread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?

27 And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for [u] man, and not [v] man for the sabbath:

28 Therefore [w] the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

CHAPTER III.

1 Christ healeth the withered hand, 10 and many other infirmities: 11 rebuketh the unclean spirits: 13 chooseth his twelve apostles: 22 convinceth their blasphemy in casting out devils by Beelzebub: 31 and showeth who are his brother, sister, and mother.

AND [a] he entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

2 And they watched [b] him, whether he would heal him on the sabbath day; that they might accuse him.

3 And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, [c] Stand forth.

4 And he saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath days, or to do evil? to save [d] life, or to kill? But they held their peace.

5 And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the [e] hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he stretched it out: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

6 ¶ And the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the [f] Herodians against him, how they might destroy him.

7 But Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea: and a great [g] multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea,

8 And from Jerusalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9 And he spake to his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him because of the multitude, lest they should throng him.

10 For he had healed [h] many; insomuch that they [i] pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues.

for salvation; and should lose no opportunity, and shrink from no self-denial, in attempting it. The humbled sinner, who despairs of all help, except from the Saviour, will evince his faith by seeking to him, with all earnestness and without delay; and difficulties will only serve to increase his diligence and resolution. He will not attempt to heal himself, or expect to become better, before he comes to his Physician; but when he receives the blessing of forgiveness, it is accompanied by such a powerful operation of renewing grace on his soul, that he evidently becomes 'a new creature; old things pass away, behold all things become new!'"—T. Scott.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—35. "Acts of mercy and charity can never be unseasonable; for it is as lawful 'to do good' to man, as it is proper to attend on the worship of God on the Lord's day. But selfish and malicious men are especially glad to find something to condemn in those who are labouring to promote the salvation of souls, and to show the vanity of their assumed appearances of religion. While we steadily persevere in doing good, notwithstanding opposition, we may properly express an indignant abhorrence of wickedness; but it should be connected with compassion for the persons of opposers, and earnest desires of their salvation. We shall commonly find, that the rage and enmity of proud enemies will increase, in proportion as the power and grace of Christ are glorified; and that unbelievers of the most opposite sentiments and characters, will combine against the cause of evangelical godliness: but if we be at any time compelled to retire from their persecuting rage, we ought to seek for other scenes and opportunities of usefulness.

"If we were as earnest as our Lord, and 'instant in season from peculiar powers he possessed. . . . . May it not be reasonably concluded, that the information is here given to teach Christians . . . . that they are not warranted to pronounce on what passes in the hearts of others."

Ver. 14. Levi the son of Alpheus.—Evidently the same person as Matthew. See Mat. ix. 9, and compare Luke v. 29.

Ver. 15. In his house—That is, the house of Matthew, or Levi, who made a feast soon after he had been called, and invited his old acquaintances to come to see his new master. This might be a dangerous example to many persons; but we remember an instance somewhat similar in the life of the pious Col. Gardiner, who, after his conversion, finding that his former friends considered him as mad, invited them to meet him; and pleaded the cause of religion with such strength of reasoning, that one cut short the argument with saying, "We thought this man mad, and he is in good earnest proving us to be so."

Ver. 16—22. When the scribes, &c.—For the parallel histories to this, see Mat. ix. 10—17. "Superstitious and hypocritical persons, rashly place the sum of piety in things of an indifferent nature. . . . Not considering what the strength of each person can bear, they rashly enact any kind of laws about these things without discretion: . . . and they make no distinction between the laws which God made concerning them, and laws against things in themselves unlawful. . . . And they prefer the ceremonial law . . . to the moral; when, on the contrary, they ought to seek from the latter the true use of the ceremonial law."—T. Scott.

Ver. 23—28 And it came to pass.—See the parallel passage, Mat. xii. 1—8.

Ver. 26. Abiathar the high priest.—[It appears from the passage referred to here, that Ahimelech was then high priest at Nob; and from other passages, that Abiathar was his son. Various conjectures have been formed in order to solve this difficulty; and some, instead of untying, have cut the knot, by pronouncing it an interpolation. The most probable opinion seems to be, that both father and son had two names, the father being also called Abiathar; and this appears almost certain from 2 Sa. viii. 17. 1 Ch. xviii. 16, where Ahimelech seems evidently termed Abiathar, while Abiathar is called Ahimelech or Abimelech. Compare 1 Ki. ii. 26, 27.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. The sabbath.—The sabbath was made for the benefit and profit of man, not for mere external rest.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—12. And he entered again, &c.—The parallel passage to this will be found Mat. xii. 9—15.

Ver. 4. Is it lawful to do good, or to do evil, &c.—Dr. Campbell remarks, that in the style of Scripture, the mere negation of any thing is often expressed by the affirmation. Hence he infers, Not to do good when we can, is to do evil: not to save, (when we have opportunity,) is to kill.

Ver. 5. With anger.—[With anger at their desperate malice and wicked ness, and with commiseration for the calamities which they would thereby bring on themselves.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. From Idumea.—Hyrcanus, more than 150 years before this, had compelled the Idumeans to be circumcised. See Josephus' Antiq. bk. xiii chap. 9.

Ver. 10. Plagues.—Campbell, "Maladies."

11 And [j] unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

12 And he straitly charged them that they should not make him [k] known.

13 ¶ And [l] he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he [m] would: and they came unto him.

14 And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach,

15 And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils:

16 And Simon [n] he surnamed Peter;

17 And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of [o] thunder:

18 And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alpheus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite, 19 And Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him: and they went [p] into a house.

20 ¶ And the multitude cometh together again, so [q] that they could not so much as eat bread.

21 And when his [r] friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He [s] is beside himself.

22 ¶ And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He [t] hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils.

23 And he called them unto him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan?

24 And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25 And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26 And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

27 No [u] man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man; and then he will spoil his house.

28 Verily I say unto you, All [v] sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme:

29 But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost [w] hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation:

30 Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.

31 ¶ There [x] came then his brethren and his mother, and, standing without, sent unto him, calling him.

32 And the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee.

33 And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

34 And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren!

35 For whosoever shall do [y] the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The parable of the sower, 14 and the meaning thereof. 21 We must communicate the light of our knowledge to others. 26 The parable of the seed growing secretly, 30 and of the mustard seed. 35 Christ stilleth the tempest on the sea.

AND [a] he began again to teach by the sea side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.

2 And he taught them many things by [b] parables, and said unto them in his doctrine,

3 [c] Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow:

4 And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the [d] fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5 And some fell on stony [e] ground, where it had not much earth, and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6 But when the sun was up, it was scorched; and [f] because it had no root, it withered away.

7 And some fell among [g] thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8 And other fell on good [h] ground, and did yield fruit [i] that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some a hundred.

9 And he said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 ¶ And [j] when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve asked of him the parable.

11 And he said unto them, Unto [k] you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are [l] without, all these things are done in parables:

12 That [m] seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13 And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?

14 ¶ The sower [n] soweth the word.

15 And these are they by the way side, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, and out of season, in preaching the word,' in prayer, and in every good work; we should count no hour improper, no situation inconvenient, for these labours of love: but we also should find, that our carnal or injudicious friends would be ready to deem us 'beside ourselves,' and would use all their influence to moderate our ardour, and lessen our diligence. Prudence indeed is necessary and commendable; but it is extremely apt to degenerate into lukewarmness, indolence, and timidity: and zeal like that of Christ, will seldom escape the charge of being excessive and indiscreet, from the more decent part of mankind, or even from professors of the gospel, who can scarcely conceive, that invisible and future things require more earnestness, than our most important temporal concerns. But let men beware how they ascribe the operations of the Holy Ghost to the power of the devil, or how they deride and revile them: for in so doing, they may be guilty of such blasphemy as shall never find forgiveness, but expose them to eternal damnation. Let the servants of Christ go on with their work, in dependance on his power, and avoiding all contentions with each other, which only weaken the common

Ver. 13—19. And he goeth up, &c.—For the parallel narrative to this, see Mat. x. 1—4.

Ver. 17. Boanerges, the sons of thunder.—This term has been generally mistaken, as implying that John and James were noisy preachers, of which there is neither proof nor probability. According to the Hebrew idiom, lightning is the son of thunder, and may represent their natural quickness of temper, of which we have a remarkable instance, Luke ix. 54, 55.

Ver. 18. Canaanite.—So called from the Heb. kana, to be zealous. Whence he is also called Zelotes, from a Greek word which means to be zealous.

Ver. 21. He is beside himself.—But who were the friends that said this? Campbell, "His kinsmen," or other members of the family, who did not cordially believe on him; and who were disconcerted by not having their meals regularly, as ver. 20. He is beside himself, or "out of his wits," as we say; Doddridge, "transported beyond himself." Compare John x. 20.

Ver. 22—30. And the scribes, &c.—The parallel to this passage may be found Mat. xii. 22—33.

Ver. 29. Is in danger of eternal damnation.—Campbell, "Liable to eternal punishment." The Greek word (krisis) is used both for condemnation and subsequent punishment.

Ver. 30. Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.—"Is it not astonishing (says Wesley) that men who have ever read these words, should doubt what is the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost? Can any words declare more plainly, that it is the ascribing those miracles to the power of the devil, which Christ wrought by the power of the Holy Ghost?"

Ver. 31—35. There came then his brethren and his mother.—We are not to suppose that his mother joined in the charge of his being beside himself; but she might be alarmed for his health, from his exertions and long fasting. Compare parallel, Mat. xii. 46—50.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—20. And he began again to teach, &c.—The parable of the sower, which here follows, with its explanation, has been already considered on Mat. xiii. 1—23.

Ver. 10. Alone.—That is, the multitude being gone.

Ver. 12. That seeing.—[Rather, "So that seeing they see, and do not perceive, and hearing they hear, and do not understand," &c. The expression up-

Satan cometh [o] immediately, and taketh away [p] the word that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17 And have no root [q] in themselves, and so endure but [r] for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately [s] they are offended.

18 And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word,

19 And the [t] cares of this world, and the deceitfulness [u] of riches, and [v] the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh [w] unfruitful.

20 And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth [x] fruit, some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some a hundred.

21 ¶ And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a [y] bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick?

22 For [z] there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

24 And he saith unto them, Take heed what [a] ye hear: with [b] what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given.

25 For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from [c] him shall be taken even that which he hath.

26 ¶ And he said, So [d] is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

27 And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

28 For the earth bringeth forth fruit of [e] herself; first [f] the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29 But when the fruit is [g] brought forth, immediately he [h] putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.

30 ¶ And he said, Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31 It [i] is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32 But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater [j] than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

33 And with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as [k] they were able to hear it.

34 But without a parable spake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples.

35 ¶ And the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side.

36 And when they had sent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ship. And there were also with him other little ships.

37 And [l] there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and say unto him, [m] Master, carest thou not that we perish?

39 And he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And [n] the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40 And he said unto them, Why are ye so [o] fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?

41 And they feared [p] exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the [q] sea obey him?

cause: then they will have an almighty Helper ready to overcome their strong enemy, and to deliver sinners from his hateful dominion."—T. Scott.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 26—29. "This parable, which is not found in any other gospel, represents the manner in which the kingdom of God gains ground in the world. In this respect, he who faithfully and diligently preaches 'the word of the truth of the gospel,' may be likened to a husbandman, who sows his seed with suitable care and attention, and then leaves it. Accordingly, he sleeps by night, and rises in the morning to attend on his other business; not being solicitous about the seed, as if the increase depended on his constant attention. In the mean time it springs up, and by imperceptible degrees, grows to maturity; and he is so far from managing the process, that he does not comprehend it: for the earth, made fruitful by the Creator's power and goodness, and receiving the influence of the sun, rain, and varying seasons, as ordered by him, spontaneously produces the increase. A small blade first appears, and, during the changes of the weather, it sometimes appears more flourishing, and at others seems to wither: yet at length it ears, fills, and ripens; and the husbandman gathers in the crop, which God has given him as the increase of his seed sown. Thus faithful preachers sow 'the good seed of the word,' and use the other appointed means of obtaining success: 'but God alone gives the increase.' When they have the opportunity of watching the effects of their own labours, they find their hopes and fears continually fluctuate, they meet with disappointments which they can by no means prevent, and success where they had almost given up the hope of it: but much of the good done will generally be unknown at the time, and perhaps becomes visible after their death. However, the labour of that man, who is faithful and diligent, will not be in vain: the seed finds some hearts prepared by the preventing grace of God to receive it: under the influences of the Spirit it springs up; and from convictions of sin, and inquiries after salvation, it grows up into a more solid judgment, deeper experience and humility, and greater simplicity; and thus proceeds to increasing fruitfulness in good works. In this manner, souls are prepared for heaven: and when their measure of services and trials are completed, and they are made ready for the glory and felicity intended for them, the Lord will gather them as the wheat of his harvest into his garner: and they, who have been the instruments of their conversion and sanctification, will at last glorify God for the blessed increase of their patient labours, which perhaps at the time they concluded to be almost entirely unsuccessful. God, by his ministers, sows the seed; and he by ministering angels gathers in the harvest.

Ver. 30—32. "We should not despise feeble beginnings, either in individuals or in the diffusing of the light of divine truth in dark places; as 'the kingdom of heaven is like the grain of mustard-seed,' and as great consequences often spring from feeble causes and instruments. These things will not be obvious to others, but Christ will expound them to his disciples. and if we follow him closely, he will afford us his special presence; and he will teach us self-denial by his precepts and his example. Storms may indeed assail us, and our fears may be great; but faith will apply to him for help, and meet no disappointment. Even when he seems to slumber, he restrains the violence of the winds and waves, and the fury of wicked men and apostate spirits: and when he awakes for our help, he will speak every tempest into a calm, and turn all our terrors into adoring love and gratitude."—T. Scott.

pears to be proverbial: and relates to those who might see what they now overlook through inattention and folly. See the parallel texts.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Is a candle brought, &c.—See Mat. v. 15, where we have the same sentiment spoken on another occasion.

Ver. 28—29. So is the kingdom of God.—This seems to us connected with the parable of the tares, Mat. xiii. 24, &c.

Ver. 30—34. And he said, &c.—The parable of the mustard seed, and following remarks, will be found Mat. xiii. 31—36, &c.——Mustard.—[Mustard is a well known plant of the tetradynamia siliquosa class, distinguished by its yellow cruciform flowers, with expanding calyx, and its pods smooth, square, and close to the stem. Its seed was probably the smallest known to the Jews: and though its ordinary height does not exceed four feet, yet a species grows to the height of from three to five cubits, with a tapering, ligneous stalk, and spreading branches. See Scheuchzer.]—Bagster.

Ver. 36. Even as he was—That is, without rest or refreshment.—— In the ship.—Campbell renders the word bark: it was doubtless a small sailing vessel.

Ver. 37. It was now full—Namely, with water. See Luke viii. 22.

Ver. 38. On a pillow.—But Wesley renders it, "on the pillow in the stern;" understanding "a particular part of the vessel, near the rudder."

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. And they came over unto the other side, &c. - The parallel history to this has been considered, Mat viii. 28. &c.

2 And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

3 Who had his [b] dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains:

4 Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5 And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones.

6 But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped [c] him,

7 And cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8 For he said unto him, Come [d] out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

9 And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is [e] Legion: for we are many.

10 And he besought him much that he would not send them away out of the country.

11 Now there was there nigh unto the mountains a great herd of swine [f] feeding.

12 And all the devils besought [g] him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus gave [h] them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand;) and were choked in the sea.

14 And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

15 And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and [i] had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind: and they were [j] afraid.

16 And they that saw it told them how it befell to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17 And they began to pray him to depart [k] out of their coasts.

18 And when he was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil prayed him that he might be with him.

19 Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and [l] tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.

20 And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

21 ¶ And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, much people gathered unto him: and he was nigh unto the sea.

22 And, [m] behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet,

23 And besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point [n] of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live.

24 And Jesus went with him; and much people followed him, and thronged him.

25 ¶ And a certain woman, which had an issue [o] of blood twelve years,

26 And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing [p] bettered, but rather grew worse,

27 When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched [q] his garment:

28 For she said, If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole.

29 And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague.

30 And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that virtue [r] had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?

31 And his disciples said unto him, Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

32 And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33 But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and [s] told him all the truth.

34 And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith [t] hath made thee whole; go [u] in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

the varied glories of our Redeemer's power and love; and each of the instances here set before us, may be considered, not only as a miracle, but also as an emblem of his gracious operations on the souls of men.—If a legion of apostate spirits were combined against one man, who can conceive the numbers, which there are in this wicked world, of which their great leader is 'the god' and 'prince!'

Ver. 21—34. "Our blessed Lord will not obtrude himself on those who are not disposed to entertain him; nor refuse his presence and salvation to any whose hearts are prepared to welcome him. The example before us may instruct us to receive and encourage those, who seem humbly to rely on Christ for pardon and grace; though in many respects mistaken and defective.—In proportion as our faith in Christ brings peace into our conscience, and destroys the love and power of sin, it is proved to be genuine: and the more singly we depend on him, and expect great things from him; the more evidently we shall find that he is become our salvation. But, whilst we have the benefit, he will secure to himself the glory, of all that he does for us: and he will at length bring to light, in numberless instances, the 'virtue that hath gone forth from him,' to heal those hidden evils of the heart, under which his people had groaned for years before they sought to him. Yet, while multitudes throng around him, as it were, by crowding the places where the gospel is preached; only here and there one thus 'touches him,' in humble faith, as the lives of most too plainly testify.—Humble souls, therefore, in seeking to him, are apt to tremble and fear, lest he should abhor or destroy them; whilst his heart yearns with pity, and he is about to say to them, as to his children, 'Be of good comfort,

Ver. 2. A man with.—[St. Matthew gives a brief account of two demoniacs who were dispossessed on this occasion; but Mark and Luke omit the mention of one, (who was perhaps not so remarkable,) in order to record that of the other more fully. That these wretched men were not merely mad, as some suppose, but really possessed of evil spirits, appears clearly from the language employed, as well as from the narrative itself. St. Matthew expressly affirms, that they were "possessed with devils," or demoniacs. St. Mark says, he had "an unclean spirit," i. e. a fallen spirit: and St. Luke asserts, that he "had devils (or demons) a long time," and was called Legion, "because many devils were entered into him." With supernatural strength the demons burst asunder the chains and fetters with which he was bound; they address Christ as the "Son of the most high God;" they beseech him to suffer them to enter into the swine; and when he had given them leave, they "went out and entered into the swine," &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Down a steep place.—Wesley, "down the steep;" i. e. the shelving coast.

Ver. 16. Swine.—[These swine were in all probability Jewish property, and kept and used in express violation of the law of God; and, therefore, their destruction was no more than a proper manifestation of the justice of God.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Decapolis—That is, the ten cities, a district of country beyond Jordan, so called from its containing ten principal towns.

Ver. 22. One of the rulers.—Large synagogues had sometimes several elders, or rulers: the name of this man is here given—Jairus.

Ver. 26. Had suffered many.—[No person will wonder at this account, when he considers the therapeutics of the Jewish Physicians, in reference to diseases of this kind; (for an account of which, see Drs. Lightfoot and Clarke;) from some of their nostrums, she could not have been bettered; from others, she must have been made worse; from all, she must have suffered many things: and, from the persons employed, the expense of the medicaments, and the number of years she was afflicted, it is perfectly credible that she had spent all that she had. She was, therefore, a fit patient for the Great Physician.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Of that plague.—Campbell, "Delivered from that scourge," meaning the very distressing complaint called by physicians dysenteria sanguinea.

35 ¶ While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house certain which said, Thy daughter is [v] dead: why troublest thou the Master any farther?

36 As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he saith unto the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only [w] believe.

37 And he suffered no man to follow him, save [x] Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38 And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly.

39 And when he was come in, he saith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but [y] sleepeth.

40 And they laughed him to scorn. But when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.

41 And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talithi cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, [z] arise.

42 And straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment.

43 And he charged them [a] straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ is contemned of his countrymen. 7 He giveth the twelve power over unclean spirits. 14 Divers opinions of Christ. 18 John Baptist is beheaded, 29 and buried. 30 The apostles return from preaching. 34 The miracle of five loaves and two fishes. 48 Christ walketh on the sea. 53 and healeth all that touch him.

AND he went out from thence, and came into his own country, and his disciples follow him.

2 And [a] when the sabbath day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many hearing him were astonished, saying, From [b] whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3 Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of [c] James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended [d] at him.

4 But Jesus said unto them, [e] A prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

5 And [f] he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.

6 And he marvelled [g] because of their unbelief. And [h] he went round about the villages teaching.

7 ¶ And [i] he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two; and gave them power over unclean spirits;

8 And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no [j] money in their purse:

9 But be shod [k] with [l] sandals; and not put on two coats.

10 And he said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into a house, there abide till ye depart from that place.

11 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake [m] off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom [n] and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

12 And they went out, and preached that men should [o] repent.

13 And they cast out many [p] devils, and anointed with oil [q] many that were sick, and healed them.

14 ¶ And [r] king Herod heard of him; (for his name was spread abroad:) and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do show forth themselves in him.

15 Others [s] said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.

16 ¶ But when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

17 For Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife: for he had married her.

18 For John had said unto Herod, It is not lawful [t] for thee to have thy brother's wife.

19 Therefore Herodias had [u] a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not:

20 For Herod feared [v] John, knowing that he was a just man and a holy, and [w] observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.

"The Lord will not let any one, who waits on him, be a loser by his kindness to others: his delays are intended to render his favours more precious; he waits for our extremities, that he may manifest his glory, and encourage our faith and hope. He regards no application to him as a trouble, and no case can be desperate which he undertakes: we should not therefore yield to fear, but desire and pray to be strengthened in faith, in the most difficult circumstances; and he will then fulfil his word, and all our expectations grounded on it."—*T. Ver. 35. Thy daughter is dead.—This message is not mentioned in the account of Matthew, but is perfectly consistent with it.

Ver. 40. Them that were with him.—Namely, Peter, James, and John. (He took just so many as prudence required, and as were sufficient to prove the reality of the cure; to have permitted the presence of more, might have savoured of ostentation.)—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Is not this the carpenter?—Justin Martyr, in his dialogues with Trypho, expressly says, that Jesus assisted his father in his trade of a carpenter, making agricultural tools, &c.—It is also said that among the Jews it was infamous for a father not to bring up his children to some trade. (Grotius in Mat. xiii. 55.) But why then reproach Jesus on that account? It was probably on account of his mean line of business. He was not a master builder. Little did they think that this despised Jesus had made the world, and was born to judge it!

Ver. 5. And he could there do no mighty work, &c.—"We are not to understand . . . . as if the power of Christ was here disarmed; but rather . . . . that they brought few sick people to him for cure." Doddridge; who remarks also, that, so far as appears, "he never after this returned to Nazareth."

Ver. 8. A staff only.—Not staves. (St. Matthew says, that they were to take "neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves;" but this precept plainly means, "Go just as you are; take no other coat, shoes, or staff, than what you already have."]—Bagster. Perhaps the meaning is, that they were only, like Jacob, to take a staff for support in travelling, (Gen. xxxii. 10,) but no weapons of hostility.

Ver. 9. But be shod with sandals.—[The sandal consisted only of a sole, fastened about the foot and ankle with straps.]—Bagster. Matthew inhibits shoes.

Ver. 13. And anointed with oil many that were sick.—This is not mentioned by either of the other Evangelists; but it is evident from James v. 14. that in the age of miracles, oil was thus employed; yet the reason of this, as of many other things in Scripture, we are not able to assign.

21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his [x] birth-day made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;

22 And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and [y] danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he sware unto her, Whatsoever [z] thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head [a] of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger the head of John the Baptist.

26 And the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately the king sent [b] an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison,

28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his disciples heard of it, they [c] came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

30 ¶ And [d] the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.

31 And he said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32 And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

33 And the people saw them departing, and many knew him, and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him.

34 ¶ And Jesus, when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because [e] they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things.

35 And [f] when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed:

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, Shall [g] we go and buy two hundred [h] pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?

38 He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes.

39 And [i] he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40 And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, he looked up to heaven, and [j] blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42 And [k] they did all eat, and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

45 ¶ And [l] straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before [m] unto Bethsaida, while he sent away the people.

46 And when he had sent them away, he [n] departed into a mountain to pray.

47 And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land.

48 And he saw them toiling [o] in rowing; for the wind was contrary unto them: and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and would have passed [p] by them.

49 But when they saw him [q] walking upon the sea, they [r] supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out:

50 For they all saw him, and were troubled. And immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, Be of good cheer: [s] it is I; be not afraid.

51 And he went up unto them into the ship; and [t] the wind ceased: and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

52 For they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart [u] was hardened.

53 ¶ And [v] when they had passed over, they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew to the shore.

unto God,' and that we shall be the instruments of healing their souls by the unction of the Holy Spirit.

"No infidel principles, or hardness of heart, or worldly grandeur, can at all times preserve the enemies of God from terrors and anxieties. They are seldom wholly exempt from convictions of their own guilt, and they are often unable to exclude the dread of divine vengeance.

"Did men value the health of their souls as they do that of their bodies, and had they strong faith in the Redeemer's power and grace, they would flock to him from villages and cities, sparing neither trouble nor inconvenience, and beseeching him, that they might be enabled in faith to 'touch even the hem of his garment;' for certainly those who thus apply to him, will be made whole of their most inveterate diseases.

Ver. 27. Sent an executioner.—[As sentinels kept guard at the palaces of kings, and the residences of Roman governors, so they were employed in other offices besides guarding, and usually performed that of executioners. As, however, we learn from Josephus, that Herod was at this very time engaged in war with Aretas king of Arabia, in consequence of Herod having divorced his daughter in order to marry Herodias, his brother Philip's wife; and as this event occurred at an entertainment given at the castle of Machærus, while his army was on its march against his father-in-law, we are furnished with an additional reason why a sentinel should have been employed as an executioner; and are thus enabled to discover such a latent and undesigned coincidence, as clearly evinces the truth of the evangelical narrative. See Bp. Marsh's Lectures.]—Bagster.

Ver. 30—46. And the apostles, &c.—The first two verses of this paragraph (not in Matthew) show that our Lord was much more anxious for the rest and refreshment of his disciples than for his own. The parallel verses to the remainder of the section may be found Mat. xiv. 13—36.

Ver. 33. Saw them departing—That is, though they said nothing, and proceeded as quietly as might be, still the people perceived they were preparing to sail.—Knew him.—Jebb and Priestley, "it;" i. e. the place, or the fact that they were going.—A foot—Or "by land." Ver. 34. As sheep not having, &c.—See Mat. ix. 36.

Ver. 40. They sat down in ranks.—Campbell, "In squares," like plats, or square flower beds in a garden. See Eccles. xxiv. 31.—[It is generally supposed, that they were so arranged as to be a hundred in rank or depth, and fifty in front, or file; which would make the number just five thousand; and will reconcile this account with St. Luke's, who only speaks of their sitting down by fifties.]—Bagster.

Ver. 44. Were about.—Campbell says, "We have the authority of all the best MSS., editions, and versions, for rejecting the word (osei) "about."

Ver. 45. Bethsaida.—[Bethsaida, according to Josephus, was situated on the sea of Gennesareth, in the lower Gaulonitis, (consequently on the east of the lake, as Pliny states,) and at the beginning of the mountainous country, and it was raised from a village to the honour of a city by Philip, and called Julias in honour of the emperor's daughter. Some learned men, however, are of opinion, that the Bethsaida mentioned in the gospels was a different place: and that it was situated on the western shore of the sea of Tiberias, in Galilee, near Chorazin and Capernaum, with which it is associated; (Mat. xi. 21, 23. John xii. 21.) and Bishop Pococke mentions the ruins of a town or large village in the plain of Huttin, about two miles west of the lake, still bearing the name of Baitsida, which he thinks occupies its site.]—Bagster.

Ver. 48. Would have passed—That is, he made as if he would.

Ver. 51. Sore amazed, &c.—Doddridge, "Exceedingly amazed in themselves, and astonished beyond measure."

Ver. 52. Their heart was hardened.—Campbell, "Stupified," which is undoubtedly the sense.

54 And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew him,

55 And [w] ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was.

56 And whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might [x] touch if it were but the border [y] of his garment: and as many as touched [z] him were made whole.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The Pharisees find fault at the disciples for eating with unwashen hands. 8 They break the commandment of God by the traditions of men. 14 Meat defileth not the man. 24 He healeth the Syrophenician woman's daughter of an unclean spirit, 31 and one that was deaf, and stammered in his speech.

THEN [a] came together unto him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2 And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with [b] defiled (that is to say, with unwashen hands,) they found fault.

3 For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands [c] oft, eat not, holding the tradition [d] of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market, except they [e] wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and [f] pots, brazen vessels, and of [g] tables.

5 Then the Pharisees and scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

6 He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias [h] prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7 Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

8 For [i] laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

9 And he said unto them, Full well ye [j] reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For [k] Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso [l] curseth father or mother, let him die the death:

11 But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is [m] Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free.

12 And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother;

13 Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye.

14 ¶ And when he had called all the people unto him, he said unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and [n] understand:

15 There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man.

16 If [o] any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 And [p] when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable.

18 And he saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him;

19 Because it entereth not into his heart, but [q] into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats?

20 And he said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man.

21 For [r] from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

22 Thefts, [s] covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness:

23 All these evil things come from within, and defile the man.

24 ¶ And [t] from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into a house, and would have no man know it: but [u] he could not be hid.

25 For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet:

26 The woman was a [v] Greek, a Syrophenician by nation; and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

27 But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for [w] it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.

28 And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: yet [x] the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.

And here again let us learn to be doing good wherever we go, and to seek the salvation of Christ, for others as well as for ourselves."—T. Scott.

CHAP VII. Ver. 24—30. "This woman, of Canaan's devoted race, seems to have had no other instruction, than that derived from reading the Scriptures of the Old Testament alone. Yet, having heard concerning the miracles and doctrine of Jesus, and doubtless having compared what she heard with the prophecies of the Messiah, she assuredly knew that he was the Messiah; and without hesitation addressed him in that character!—She was not only a true, but a most eminent believer. What an inducement to disperse the Bible!"—T. Scott.

Ver. 54. They knew him—That is, the people of Gennesaret did.

Ver. 55. Carry about in beds.—Not feather beds; but a sort of mats, mattresses, or common carpets, carried upon hurdles.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—23. Then came together, &c.—This passage is a somewhat enlarged account of our Lord's address to the Pharisees on their hypocrisy, and respecting their ceremonies and traditions, as we have already seen in Mat. xv. 1—20. In this controversy it is important to observe, that our Lord by no means opposes personal cleanliness; but those ceremonial washings only, which they put in place of inward purity or holiness, as will appear in the following notes.

Ver. 2. Eat bread with defiled—i. e. with their hands in the usual state, without ceremonial cleansing. The object of the Jews was evidently a minute attention to traditional ceremonies, for which they had no warrant, either of Scripture or common sense.

Ver. 3. All the Jews—That is, generally.——Wash their hands oft.—See Marg. [Gr. the fist: which Dr. Lightfoot illustrates by a tradition from the Talmudical tracts, that when they washed their hands, they washed the fist up to the joint of the arm. The Jews laid great stress on these washings or baptisms, considering eating with unwashen hands no ordinary crime, and feigning that an evil spirit, called Shibta, has a right to sit on the food of him who thus eats, and render it hurtful.]—Bagster. There is no doubt but the Pharisees washed often and with superstitious exactness. On comparing the different commentators, it appears to us that they washed either at some fountain, of which they had many, or under the stream of a pump, &c., first filling their hands, and then by raising and closing them, let the water run down "to the elbows." See Godwyn's Moses and Aaron, and Macknight's Harmony.

Ver. 4. From the market.—The Greek term (agora) includes all promiscuous assemblies, as courts of judicature, &c.——Except they wash.—Gr. baptize. Daily bathing was, and is, frequently practised in the East, and it is probable that all the richer Pharisees had baths in their own premises; when, therefore, they came from the markets, where they were compelled to mix with Gentiles, and thereby contract ceremonial defilement, they probably bathed before they dressed for dinner: those who had not these conveniences, must be content with bathing their hands and arms, up to their elbows.——The washing (Gr. baptizing) of cups (for drinking) and pots.—The Greek word here used is from the Latin Sextarius, holding about a pint and a half, as the margin properly explains it.——Brazen vessels (probably culinary) and tables.

Ver. 5. Eat bread.—"Bread" is often used by the Hebrews for food in general; but according to Dr. Wotton, there was an exception as to dried fruits.

Ver. 9. Ye reject.—So Campbell, &c. Doddridge, "Make void"

Ver. 10. Die the death—That is, surely die.

Ver. 11. It is Corban.—See Mat. xv. 5. [Rather, "Let it be a corban,' a formula common among the Jews on such occasions; by which the Pharisees released a child from supporting his parents; and even deemed it sacrilege if he afterwards gave any thing for their use. See Lightfoot.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Of none effect.—i. e. void, as verse 9.

Ver. 15. There is nothing.—[Though it is very true, says Dr. Doddridge, that a man may bring guilt upon himself by eating to excess, and a Jew, by eating what was forbidden by the Mosaic law; yet still the pollution would arise from the wickedness of the heart, and be just proportionable to it, which is all our Lord asserts.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Covetousness, &c.—Doddridge, "Insatiable desires, malevolent affections."——An evil eye.—See note on Mat. xx. 14.

Ver. 24—30. And from thence, &c.—This incident is more fully related by Mat. chap. xv. 21, 28.

Ver. 26. A Greek.—Her nation is specified in the next word, "a Syrophenician." See note on Mat. xv. 22.

Ver. 28. Yes, Lord.—The same Gr. word (nai) is here used, as is in Mat. xv

29 And he said unto her, For [y] this saying go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone [z] out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

31 ¶ And [a] again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.

32 And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

33 And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and [b] he spit, and touched his tongue;

34 And [c] looking up to heaven, [d] he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened.

35 And [e] straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.

36 And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it;

37 And were beyond measure [f] astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: he maketh [g] both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Christ feedeth the people miraculously: 10 refuseth to give a sign to the Pharisees: 14 admonisheth his disciples to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod: 22 giveth a blind man his sight: 27 acknowledgeth that he is the Christ, who should suffer and rise again: 34 and exhorteth to patience in persecution for the profession of the gospel.

IN [a] those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them,

2 I have compassion [b] on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat:

3 And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

4 And his disciples answered him, From [c] whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?

5 And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.

7 And they had a few small fishes: and he [d] blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

8 So they did eat, and [e] were filled: and they [f] took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and he sent them away.

10 ¶ And [g] straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

11 And [h] the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

13 And he left them, and entering into the ship again departed to the other side.

14 ¶ Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15 And he charged them, saying, Take heed, beware [i] of the leaven [j] of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.

16 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have no bread.

17 And when Jesus knew it, he saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? perceive [k] ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your [l] heart yet hardened?

18 Having [m] eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not [n] remember?

19 When I brake the five [o] loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto him, Twelve.

20 And when the seven [p] among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven.

21 And he said unto them, How is it that ye do not understand?

22 ¶ And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they

Ver. 31—37. Christ cures a deaf and dumb man.—There is no circumstance, perhaps, more strongly confirmatory of the doctrine of possession by demons, than the marked distinction between cases apparently of the same nature. Had demons merely signified diseases, the term would be equally applicable to this case as to others; but here is a marked difference. Matt. ix. 32, 33, we have "a dumb man possessed with a demon: and when the demon was cast out, the dumb spake." But here is no mention of a demon, but a merely natural impediment, upon the removal of which he both hears and distinctly articulates. Again, the means here used are likewise different. A demon is expelled by a word speaking; but our Lord does not address himself to diseases, and natural impediments: he put his fingers in the patient's ears,—spat, and touched his tongue.

The medical use of spittle, in the East, is very remarkable to this day. Captain Light (in his Journey up the Nile, 1814,) says, "During my visit, I observed an old Imam (or Mahometan priest) attempt to perform a cure on one of the natives, who came to him on account of a head-ache, from which he suffered much pain: this was done in the following manner: The patient seated himself near the Imam, who, putting his finger and thumb to the patient's forehead, closed them gradually together, pinching the skin into wrinkles as he advanced, uttering a prayer, spitting on the ground, and lastly on the part affected. This continued about a quarter of an hour, and the patient rose up thoroughly convinced that he should soon be well." (Walpole's Memoirs relating to Turkey.) But this means of cure seems considered as peculiarly adapted to complaints in the eyes, as we shall have occasion to remark on the next chapter.

We are called to be grateful that we enjoy those faculties of which this poor object was deprived; and let us apply them to their proper use. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear," and attend to the word of God; and let him whose tongue is unloosed speak aloud his praises! Let us also compassionate and endeavour to relieve others, whom we may find in the circumstances of distress here mentioned. It is true, as Solomon remarks, that "money answereth all things," (Eccles. x. 19;) for though it cannot work miracles, in giving either ears or tongue, yet may it encourage that ingenuity which can devise plans, and in a great measure mitigate that evil, as we see in that most excellent Institution, The Deaf and Dumb Asylum, planned and founded originally by two benevolent

Ver. 32. One that was deaf.—This case is included with others in Matt. xv. 30, but is here particularized.

Ver. 33. Put his fingers.—[This was clearly a symbolical action; for these remedies evidently could not, by their natural efficacy, avail to produce so wonderful an effect. As the ears of the deaf appear closed, he applies his fingers to intimate that he would open them; and as the tongue of the dumb seems to be tied, or to cleave to the palate, he touches it, to intimate he would give loose and free motion to it. He accommodated himself to the weakness of those who might not indeed doubt his power, but fancy some external sign was requisite to healing. It was also thus made manifest that this salutiferous power came from Himself, and that He who by one word had healed the man, must be Divine.]—Bagster.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—10. In those days.—This is the same miracle related Mat. xv. 32—36.

Ver. 8. And were filled.—[This was another incontestable miracle—four thousand men, besides women and children, (Mat. xv. 38.) fed with seven loaves (or rather cakes) and a few small fishes! Here there must have been a manifest creation of substance—for they all ate, and were filled.]—B.

bring a blind man unto him and besought him to touch [q] him.

23 And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit [r] on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw aught.

24 And he looked up, and said, [s] I see men as trees, walking.

25 After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw [t] every man clearly.

26 And he sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

27 ¶ And [u] Jesus went out, and his disciples, into the towns of Cesarea Philippi: and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am?

28 And they answered, John [v] the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.

29 And he saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, Thou [w] art the Christ.

30 And he charged them that they should tell no man of him.

31 ¶ And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.

32 And he spake that saying openly. And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him.

33 But when he had turned about and looked on his disciples, he rebuked [x] Peter, saying, Get thee behind me, [y] Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

34 ¶ And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever [z] will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

35 For [a] whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

36 For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

37 Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

38 Whosoever [b] therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels.

CHAPTER IX.

2 Jesus is transfigured. 11 He instructeth his disciples concerning the coming of Elias. 14 casteth forth a dumb and deaf spirit: 30 foreteleth his death and resurrection: 33 exhorteth his disciples to humility: 38 bidding them not to prohibit such as be not against them, not to give offence to any of the faithful.

AND he said unto them, Verily [a] I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not [b] taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power.

2 ¶ And [c] after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into a high mountain apart by themselves; and he was transfigured before them.

3 And his raiment became shining, exceeding white [d] as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

4 And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus.

5 And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be [e] here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6 For he wist not [f] what to say; for they were sore afraid.

individuals of Bermondsey, the Rev. H. Cox Mason and the Rev. John Townsend, a Clergyman and a dissenting Minister, who have now both entered into rest; and whose memory is embalmed in the hearts of those unfortunates. Thus money, the love of which is the root of all evil, may be converted by Christian benevolence into the source of much good.

"Christ's curing this man, (says Mr. Henry,) was a specimen of the operation of the gospel on the minds of men. The great command of the gospel addressed to sinners is, Ephphata, "be opened!" Even Grotius himself applies it to the removal of our internal impediments to the reception of divine truth, by the influence of divine grace upon the heart.

Most admirable is the remark of the spectators of this miracle. Astonished beyond measure at the Saviour's miraculous powers, and at the benevolent manner in which those powers were employed, they exclaim, "He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak!"

> "O give us, Lord, the hearing ear,
> The tongue of praise to tell,
> When we within thy courts appear,
> Thou hast done all things well!"

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 23—38. Christ cures a blind man.—We saw, in the last chapter, our Lord's application of spittle to the cure of dumbness; the same means are here applied in the cure of blindness; and we then remarked, that there is in the East a strong persuasion of the efficacy of human spittle in such cases. Capt. Light, when at Erment, (the ancient Hermanthis,) mentions that an aged woman applied to him for a medicine for a disease in her eyes; "and on my giving her some directions, which she did not seem to approve, she requested me to spit on them: I did so, and she went away blessing me, and perfectly satisfied of the certainty of a cure."—(Walpole's Turkey.)

Dr. Lightfoot (on John ix.) gives the following specimen of Jewish notions on this subject:—"Is there ever a woman among you," said Rabbi Meir, "skilled in muttering charms over eyes?" The woman said, "Rabbi, I am not skilled." "However," saith he, "do thou spit seven times on my eyes, and I shall be healed." We are far from thinking, however, that our Lord would countenance such superstitious notions by his example: we think it far more probable, that Jews or Asiatics might copy such means, in hopes of finding the efficacy in the means themselves. In general, the miracles of Christ were wrought momentarily; but in this instance the cure was gradual. On first opening his eyes, the man saw confusedly, "as trees walking;" but on a second view, he saw distinctly. This is in perfect analogy with fact. On conversing with a gentleman who had been couched, (after having lost his sight from infancy,) he described his first attempt at seeing as very imperfect. The sight of objects with which he had been most familiar by the sense of feeling, did not at all bring them to recollection, till he had handled them afresh; and he could only judge of other objects by viewing them repeatedly, and by parts. Practice is as requisite to judge of the objects of sight, as of feeling.

This narrative admits also of a beautiful moral improvement, in reference to religious knowledge. Our first views of truth are commonly defective and incorrect; it is only by a careful perusal of the Scriptures, and a growing experience of their efficacy, that we can any way hope to obtain a correct and practical knowledge of divine truth. We should pray with the Psalmist, "Open thou mine eyes, that I may see wonderful things out of thy law!" (Ps. cxix. 18.)

"They who would go after Christ to heaven, must 'deny themselves, take up their cross, and follow him:' and they only are in the way of eternal happiness, who are willing to venture all, even their very lives, rather than deny Christ, or be ashamed of him in this evil world. Did we duly consider the worth and danger of our precious souls, for which no ransom could be found but the blood of Emmanuel, we should count the whole world contemptible, if the gain of it endangered our salvation; and the loss of life our greatest gain, if laid down for the sake of Christ and the gospel. May we then conscientually think of that season, when he will 'come in the glory of the Father, with his holy angels,' and may we now estimate every earthly object as we shall do on that important day!"—T. Scott.

Ver. 23. Led him out of the town.—Grotius thinks this was done to show our Lord's displeasure against the people of Bethsaida.

Ver. 26. Any in the town—That is, if he should meet any of them in his way Bethsaida was one of the places denounced by the Saviour.

Ver. 4. Elias with Moses.—[Moses was the founder of the Jewish polity, and Elias the most zealous reformer and prophet of the Jewish church; their presence implied, that the ministry of Christ was attested by the law and the prophets.]—Bagster.

them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This [g] is my beloved Son: hear [h] him.

8 And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead.

10 And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should [i] mean.

11 ¶ And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias [j] must first come?

12 And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written [k] of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be [l] set at nought.

13 But I say unto you, That [m] Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

14 ¶ And when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.

15 And straightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him saluted him.

16 And he asked the scribes, What question ye [n] with them?

17 And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb [o] spirit;

18 And wheresoever he taketh him, he [p] teareth him: and he [q] foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not.

19 He answereth him, and saith, O faithless [r] generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto me.

20 And they brought him unto him: and when he saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.

21 And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a [s] child.

22 And ofttimes it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us.

23 Jesus said unto him, If [t] thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

24 And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with [u] tears, Lord, I believe; help [v] thou mine unbelief.

25 When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26 And the spirit cried, and rent [w] him sore, and came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27 But Jesus took him by the [x] hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28 And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29 And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by [y] prayer and [z] fasting.

30 ¶ And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and he would not that any man should know it.

31 For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.

32 But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask [a] him.

33 ¶ And [b] he came to Capernaum: and being in the house he asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34 But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest.

35 And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If [c] any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36 And he took a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them,

37 Whosoever [d] shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me.

38 ¶ And John answered him, saying, Master, we saw [e] one casting out devils in thy CHAP. IX. Ver. 38—50. The nature and duration of future punishment.—Before we enter upon this awful subject, we must notice the incident by which it is introduced. The disciples of Jesus, in the course of their itinerancy, met with a person casting out demons, or at least attempting so to do, in their Master's name, who yet did not associate with them. Dr. S. Clarke supposes he might be a disciple of John the Baptist; but Dr. Doddridge inclines to think he might be some vagabond Jew, who, like the sons of Sceva, (Acts xix. 13,) attempted the practice of exorcism, with some sinister design. Our Lord's reply, however, imposes no censure; but seems to intimate, that he could hardly be an enemy, who should pay such honour to his name. He had, on a former occasion, laid down this maxim, "He that is not with me, is against me," (Matt. xii. 30;) and here he takes up the converse of the proposition, "He that is not against us, is on our part;" both maintaining the important principle, that there is no neutrality in religion, so far as respects the profession of Christianity. This, indeed, is one of its distinctive characters, as it was one of Judaism. The heathen considered it as a proof of their benevolence, and a mark of good breeding, (if we may so speak,) to show respect to the gods of other nations. Had Jehovah allowed of visible representations of his glory, they would doubtless have placed his statue in their died on a cross: yet tens and hundreds of thousands were saved by his means, to the glory of God by him! And was not this well worth his while?"—T. Scott.

Ver. 12. And how it is written of the Son of man, &c.—Doddridge remarks, the construction of this verse in the original, is as perplexed as almost any in the New Testament. Campbell, "satisfied that no proper meaning can be drawn from the words as they lie," follows a various reading (differing only in two letters,) which is supported by fourteen MSS., (three ancient,) and is adopted by Bps. Pearce, Marsh, &c., and produces the following translation: "And (as is written of the Son of man) must likewise suffer many things, and be contemned." So Boothroyd; who also transposes the last clause of verse 13 thus: "Elias is indeed come, as it is written of him, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed" (or chose.)

Ver. 15. Were greatly amazed.—Campbell, "Struck with awe." Whitby, Doddridge, and others, suppose, that as the face of Moses shone when he came down from the mount, so did the countenance of Jesus. See 2 Co. iii. 7.

Ver. 15—32. And straightway, &c.—See parallel, Mat. xvii. 14—23.

Ver. 18. Foameth.—[As these symptoms accord very much with those of epileptic persons, some have ventured to assert that it was no real possession; but the Evangelist expressly affirms, that he had "a dumb spirit," which tare him; that our Lord charged him to come out of him," &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. The spirit tare him.—Doddridge, "Threw him down and convulsed him;" Campbell, (better) "threw him into convulsions."

Ver. 24. Mine unbelief.—Literally, "want of faith," of which the most eminent believers find reason to complain.

Ver. 25. Thou dumb and deaf spirit, &c.—[If this had been only a natural disease, as some have contended, could our Lord with any propriety have thus addressed it? If the demoniacal possession had been false, or merely a vulgar error, would our Lord, the Revealer of truth, have thus established falsehood, sanctioned error, or encouraged deception, by teaching men to ascribe effects to the malice and power of evil spirits, which they had no agency in producing? Impossible! Such conduct is utterly unworthy the sacred character of the Redeemer.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. Rent him sore.—Campbell, "Severely convulsed him."

Ver. 29. Can come forth.—Doddridge, "Go forth." Campbell, "Be dislodged."

Ver. 32. But they understood not.—They could not understand how the Son of God should suffer death, or rise again from the dead. Their expectation of a temporal kingdom completely warped their understanding on these subjects.

Ver. 37. Receiveth not me—That is, "not me only."

Ver. 38. Casting out devils.—Greek, demons. It is difficult to account for the circumstance here related. Our Lord will at last refuse to acknowledge some who plead that they have cast out devils in his name; Mat. vii. 22. Yet the man that wrought, or pretended to work miracles in his name, could scarcely at the time speak lightly of him, however he might afterwards desert him.

name, and he followeth not us: and we forbade him, because he followeth not us.

39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not: for there [f] is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me.

40 For [g] he that is not against us is on our part.

41 For [h] whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

42 And whosoever shall offend [i] one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

43 And [j] if thy hand [k] offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

44 Where [l] their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

45 And if thy foot [m] offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

CHAPTER X.

2 Christ disputeth with the Pharisees touching divorcement: 13 blesseth the children that are brought unto him: 17 resolveth a rich man how he may inherit life everlasting: 23 telleth his disciples of the danger of riches: 28 promiseth rewards to them that forsake any thing for the gospel: 32 foretelleth his death and resurrection: 35 biddeth the two ambitious suitors to think rather of suffering with him: 46 and restoreth to Bartimeus his sight.

AND [a] he arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judea by the farther side of Jordan: and the people resort unto him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again.

2 ¶ And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.

3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

4 And they said, Moses [b] suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

5 And Jesus answered and said unto them For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept.

6 But from the beginning of the creation God made [c] them male and female.

temples, beside those of Jupiter and Mars; and it is even said they did offer, upon the spread of Christianity, to give Jesus a niche in their Pantheon. The priests of Baal were always willing to associate Jehovah with him; but to the latter, even the denial of his being was not a greater insult than such an association.

We have seen something very similar to this in modern times. Our polite philosophers have laid it down as a principle of good breeding, that "those who go to Rome, must do as they do at Rome:" that is, worship the Virgin Mary and all the Saints of the Roman Calendar; and so, by analogy of reasoning, acknowledge the gods of the country wherever they may travel—whether it be to Rome, Hindostan, or China. They worship "Jehovah, Jove, or Lord," with equal zeal. We have known a great man (so far as talents and power could make him great) who could be Protestant or Papist, Mahometan or Jew, with equal readiness, when his interest required; yet when this great man was requested to allow the neutrality of certain German states, he replied in the words of our Lord, above quoted, "He that is not for me, is against me."

If an earthly potentate could assume this style, and act upon it, much more may the King of kings. God is not a being to be trifled with. Justly to offend one of the least and meanest of his sincere disciples, is an offence that, without special mercy, will involve judgments the most terrible. If, therefore, a hand or a foot, or even an eye, (and what member can be dearer?) cause us to commit such offence, it were better that it were separated from us, bitter as must be the parting, than that we should be plunged into the guilt of such offence, or the misery to which it inevitably leads.

The language here used is metaphorical. Our Lord alludes to the valley of Hinnom, "a place near Jerusalem, where they cast things impure, and carcasses of dead animals; and where there was a fire continually kept to burn them." (Rabbi Kimchi on Psalm xxvii.) Nor is this all; here the idolaters caused their children to pass through the fire, and sometimes actually burnt them to their god, Moloch; so that it was at once the centre of crime and wretchedness.

The other image, of the worm, seems borrowed from the same scene. A place of filth and corruption, must be a place of worms and vermin. Now suppose these vermin to be immortal, and this fire unquenchable, and we have an image of everlasting misery, the most dreadful that we can conceive. The fire is interpreted to refer to the just wrath of Almighty God, who, when provoked, is a consuming fire, Heb. xii. 29; and the worm, to the tormenting reflections of a guilty conscience.

It is true, some ingenious critics have tortured the terms "everlasting" and "eternal," to reduce them to some terminable period: some benevolent divines have also endeavoured to persuade themselves that God will find some way to save his honour in the termination of these everlasting punishments; but who would risk his property or his life on such a precarious speculation? The terms used are as decisive and express as language can afford; and it is a reflection on his veracity to suppose, for a moment, that the Almighty means not as he has said.

As to the doctrine of Universal Restoration, we shall have a more suitable opportunity to inquire into the precarious grounds on which it rests; but let us not for a moment neglect to secure our eternal interests, on the rash presumption that they may possibly not be in so great danger as is represented. "Now is the accepted time,"—and "how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

The last two verses of this chapter have been variously explained, and are confessedly difficult of interpretation. Whitby thus explains them: "Every wicked man will be so seasoned by the fire itself as to become unconsumable, and shall endure for ever, to be tormented." But most assuredly God will not hold any of his creatures in existence for the mere purpose of tormenting them. Man was made immortal, and the perpetuity of his punishment must arise from the perpetuity of his existence; nor can he be relieved, but either by annihilation or forgiveness. Other explanations we shall pass over, as we should rather carry the connexion of these words farther back into the context. Our Lord had been recommending his disciples to sacrifice a hand, a foot, or an eye, rather than wholly to expose themselves to the danger of eternal fire. But as all sacrifices under the law were to be salted for the fire of the altar; so these sacrifices of a right hand, &c., must be salted (as it were) by integrity, (of which salt is the emblem, as being the great natural preserver from corruption,) to render them acceptable to God. So St. Paul teaches us, that it may

Ver. 41. A cup of water.—This is an instance of true Asiatic charity. Niebuhr mentions, that among the public buildings of Kahira are places for supplying water gratis to passengers, a cup being always placed ready in the window next the street.

Ver. 42. Whosoever shall offend.—The Greek means, literally, to put a stumbling-block in their way.

Ver. 44. Their worm, &c.—See Isaiah lxvi. 24, for its literal meaning. This figure in the text denotes great misery, and the certain and terrible and eternal destruction of the wicked.

"Conscience, the never-dying worm,
With torture gnaws the heart:

Ver. 49. For every one shall be salted with fire.—[Whitby supposes this to mean, "Every wicked man shall be seasoned with fire itself, so as to become inconsumable, and shall endure for ever to be tormented; and therefore may be said to be salted with fire, in allusion to that property of salt, which is to preserve things from corruption." Beza and Gilpin would read, "Every Christian is purified by the difficult and fiery trials of life, in the same manner as every sacrifice with salt." Lightfoot and Doddridge, "He that is a true sacrifice to God shall be seasoned with the salt of grace to the incorruption of glory; and every victim to Divine justice shall be salted with fire to endure for ever."]—Bagster. Or, "for the fire." Macknight, Parkhurst, &c.

Ver. 50. Salt is good.—Compare note on Mat. v. 13.—Have peace, &c.—"A covenant of salt," was a covenant of peace and amity, but salt itself was not the direct emblem of peace, but of integrity, the true foundation of peace.

12 And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

13 ¶ And [g] they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them.

14 But when Jesus saw it, he [h] was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such [i] is the kingdom of God.

15 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.

16 And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

17 ¶ And [j] when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

18 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but [k] one, that is, God.

19 Thou knowest the [l] commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

20 And he answered and said unto him, Master, all [m] these have I observed from my youth.

21 Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One [n] thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure [o] in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me.

22 And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, how hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

24 And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust [p] in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved?

27 And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for [q] with God all things are possible.

28 ¶ Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee.

29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's,

30 But he shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

31 But [r] many that are first shall be last; and the last first.

32 ¶ And [s] they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him,

33 Saying, Behold, we [t] go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles:

34 And [u] they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him: and the third day he shall rise again.

35 ¶ And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, come unto him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

36 And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you?

37 They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory.

38 But Jesus said unto them, Ye [v] know not be possible for a man to give his whole body to be burned, and yet if he do it not from a principle of integrity, or pure love to God, it will avail nothing, as not being seasoned for his altar. This integrity (of which divine grace is the radical principle) must be preserved through life, and it will prevent our apostacy from God, and preserve us from quarrelling with one another. This exposition is offered with diffidence, as we believe it is new; but not therefore to be rejected, till one be found less objectionable.

CHAP. X. Ver. 13—27. "'Little children should be suffered' and directed to go to the loving Saviour, as soon as they are capable of understanding his words: they should be assured that he will regard their lisping petitions; and all his ministers should copy his condescension, and attentive regard to the lambs of the flock, the young, the newly awakened, the weak believers, the poor, or the discouraged; that they may be his instruments in gathering them to him, and in leading them to establishment and comfort. While we consider the case of children, and remember that 'of such is the kingdom of God;' let us peculiarly attend to our Lord's declaration, that 'whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.' No learned scribe or philosopher, no man of the most distinguished learning or pre-eminent abilities, can be a true subject of the kingdom of grace here, or an heir of the kingdom of glory hereafter, who will not stoop to receive the instructions and blessings of the kingdom, in the simple, teachable spirit, with which a little child learns the first elements of knowledge, from its parent, nurse, or teacher. 'If any man therefore be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise' unto salvation.

Ver. 11. Against her—That is, his former wife; or it may apply to the latter, since he causes her to live in adultery with him.

Ver. 12. And if a woman shall put away her husband.—"It may be inferred from hence (says Dr. Lardner) that the Jewish women, as well as men, (though contrary to the law) did then (i. e. in our Lord's time) practise divorces, and after that, marry to others." He produces the instances of Herodias, and three of her daughters; and adds, "We may be assured their example would be followed by others, and it is likely, were supported by many precedents. If the women took this license, what would not the men do? Our historian, Josephus, affords a double example of this practice. His first wife left him, and he married another. Her he divorced, after having had three children by her, because he was not pleased with her manners; and then married a third, by whom also he had children."

Ver. 13—16. And they brought young children, &c.—Parallel to this, see Mat. xix. 13—15; with which compare chap. xviii. 3, &c.

Ver. 15. As a little child, &c.—With that humility, neglect of the world, freedom from malice, which is in little children.

Ver. 17. And when he was gone forth, &c.—Corresponding with this section, see Mat. xix. 16—30

Ver. 23. How hardly, &c.—When Garrick showed Dr. Johnson his fine house, gardens, statues, pictures, &c., at Hampton Court, what ideas did they awaken in the mind of that great man? Instead of a flattering compliment, which was expected, "Ah! David, David," said the doctor, "these are things which make a death-bed terrible!"

Ver. 30. A hundred-fold—Not in kind, but in value. See 2 Co. vii. 4.

Ver. 32—45. And they were in the way, &c.—Here Mark begins to relate our Lord's going up to Jerusalem the last time, which is related in nearly the same terms by Matthew, chap. xix. 17—28.

Ver. 32. They were amazed—To see our Lord going to meet his death with such cool intrepidity: and they were afraid to follow him, lest they should be involved in the same calamities; or, perhaps, their amazement refers to a sort of indefinable awe which the apostles began to feel for Jesus, which the mighty miracles he wrought, and the air of majesty and authority he now assumed, was calculated to inspire.

Ver. 35. James and John.—[St. Matthew says that this request was made by Salome their mother; but though she made the request as from herself yet it is evident that they had set her upon the business; and therefore Jesus, knowing whence it came, immediately addressed the sons.]—Bagster.

what ye ask, can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism [v] that I am baptized with?

39 And they say unto him, We can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye [x] shall indeed drink of the cup [y] that I drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized:

40 But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is [z] prepared.

41 And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

42 But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, Ye [a] know that they which [b] are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

43 But so shall it not be among you: but [c] whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister:

44 And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

45 For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but [d] to minister, and to [e] give his life a ransom for many.

46 ¶ And [f] they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, sat by the highway side begging.

47 And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more [g] a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy [h] on me.

49 And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; he [i] calleth thee.

50 And he, casting [j] away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, that I might receive my sight.

52 And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy [k] faith hath [l] made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Christ rideth with triumph into Jerusalem: 12 curseth the fruitless leafy tree: 15 purgeth the temple: 20 exhorteth his disciples to steadfastness of faith, and to forgive their enemies: 27 and defendeth the lawfulness of his actions, by the witness of John, who was a man sent of God.

AND [a] when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples,

2 And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him.

3 And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye that the Lord hath need [b] of him; and straightway he will send him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met; and they loose him.

5 And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt?

6 And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let them go.

7 And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and [c] he sat upon him.

8 And many spread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and strewed them in the way.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna; Blessed [d] is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom [e] of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the [f] highest.

11 And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: and [g] when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the even-tide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

12 ¶ And [h] on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry:

13 And seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing [i] but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet:

14 And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it.

15 ¶ And [j] they come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the [k] money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

16 And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple.

17 And he taught, saying unto them, Is it not [l] written, My house shall be called [m] of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den [n] of thieves.'

18 And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people was astonished [o] at his doctrine.

19 And when even was come, he went out of the city.

"Whatever increases pride, and an attachment to the world, must enhance the difficulty of a man's embracing the gospel. Few can possess riches without loving them and trusting in them; and it is extremely difficult to break the strong bands, which hold a carnal mind to large possessions. So that Jesus speaks to us 'as to children,' when he reminds us, 'How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven!' And instead of expressing our astonishment, or indulging our speculations, let us learn contentment in a low estate: or if a higher be allotted us, let us watch against confidence in riches, and the love of them, or any thing that can be purchased with them. Let us pray to be enabled to

Ver. 40. But it shall be given, &c.—Except it shall be given, &c.

Ver. 46. And they came to Jericho, &c.—[Luke says that this took place, "as he was come nigh unto Jericho," and afterwards records an event which took place in that city. But his words may be rendered, 'When he was nigh Jericho," which is equally true of him who is gone a little way from it, as of him who is come near it. Matthew mentions two blind men who received their sight on this occasion; but Bartimeus was probably the more remarkable of the two, and therefore mentioned by name.]—Bagster. On this miracle, see some farther remarks on Luke xviii. 35, &c.

Ver. 52. Made thee whole.—Campbell, "Cured thee."

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—11. And when they came nigh, &c.—The parallel text of Matthew occurs chap. xxi. 16. The limits of Bethany reached to the mount of Olives, and joined to those of Bethphage, which reached from the mount to the walls of the city.

Ver. 3. And straightway he will send him.—An evidence of the Lord's omniscience and power over the hearts and wills of men.

Ver. 8. Branches off the trees.—It is probable, from different kinds of trees. John, chap. xii. 13, mentions "palm trees." The late Mr. David Levi gives an extract from the Talmud, which mentions that at the feast of Tabernacles they carried branches of willow, and cried "Hosanna!" and the willows thus employed were called Hoshanuth.—Lingua Sacra, in Oreb. Mortier, in his travels through Persia, mentions the scattering of rose leaves, and Harmer conceives they might make a part of this ceremony.

Ver. 11. And now the even-tide was come, &c.—Our Lord and his disciples went to lodge at Bethany—probably at the house of Lazarus.

Ver. 12—14. And on the morrow—(That is, "Next morning") when they were come from Bethany, &c.

Ver. 13. If haply—That is, if it might so happen.—For the time of figs was not yet—i. e. of gathering figs; Campbell, "The fig-harvest." So we use the terms "hay-time, or hay-harvest, hopping-time," &c. This was the season to expect fruit. [This declaration, as Dr. Campbell observes, "cannot be the reason why there was nothing but leaves on the tree; for the fig is of that class of vegetables wherein the fruit appears before the leaf. But if the words be read as a parenthesis, the aforesaid declaration will be the reason of what immediately preceded, that is, of our Lord's looking for fruit on the tree. The leaves showed that the figs should not only be formed but well advanced; and the season of reaping being not yet come removed all suspicion that they had been gathered."]—Bagster.

20 ¶ And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots.
21 And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto him, Master, behold, the fig tree which thou cursedst is withered away.
22 And Jesus answering saith unto them, [p] Have faith in God.
23 For verily I say unto you, That whosoever [q] shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.
24 Therefore I say unto you, [r] What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.
25 And when ye stand praying, [s] forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.
26 But [t] if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.
27 ¶ And they come again to Jerusalem: and [u] as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders,
28 And say unto him, By [v] what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things?
29 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one [w] question, and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.
30 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me.
31 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him?
32 But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for [x] all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.
33 And they answered and said unto Jesus, We [y] cannot tell. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Neither do [z] I tell you by what authority I do these things.

CHAPTER XII.

1 In a parable of the vineyard let out to unthankful husbandmen, Christ foretelleth the reprobation of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. 13 He avoideth the snare of the Pharisees and Herodians about paying tribute to Cesar: 18 convinceth the error of the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection: 28 resolveth the scribe, who questioned of the first commandment: 35 refuteth the opinion that the scribes held of Christ: 38 bidding the people to beware of their ambition and hypocrisy: 41 and commendeth the poor widow for her two mites, above all

AND he began to speak unto them by parables. A [a] certain man planted a vineyard, and set a hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.
2 And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the [b] fruit of the vineyard.
3 And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.
4 And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast [c] stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled.
5 And again he sent another; and him they killed, and [d] many others; beating some, and killing [e] some.
6 Having yet therefore one son, his well beloved, he [f] sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son.
7 But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours.
8 And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out [g] of the vineyard.
9 What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do? he will come and [h] destroy the husbandmen, and will [i] give the vineyard unto others.
10 And have ye not read this scripture; The [j] stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:
11 This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?
12 And [k] they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people: for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them: and they left him, and went their way.
13 ¶ And [l] they send unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.
14 And when they were come, they say unto him, Master, we know that thou art true, and carest for no man: for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cesar, or not?
15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why tempt ye me? bring me a [m] penny, that I may see it.
16 And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cesar's.
17 And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Cesar [n] the things that are Cesar's, and to God [o] the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.
18 ¶ Then [p] come unto him the Sadducees, which say [q] there is no resurrection; and they asked him, saying, part with every earthly object for Christ's sake; and to use all, which we are allowed to keep, in his service, and as his faithful stewards.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 20—33. "Alas! how many professed Christians and ministers are barren fig-trees, covered with leaves, raising, and disappointing, the expectations of those who seek fruit from them; and exposing themselves to the doom of being withered, and remaining to all eternity unfruitful under the awful curse of the Lord! We should fear this sentence far more than death, and should rest in no religion which does not render us 'fruitful in good works.' This will be the sure effect of 'faith in God,' in proportion as it is vigorous and lively. Thus our feeble attempts to do good may be rendered more successful than we could have imagined, by a divine blessing on our labours of love: and though we may not possess superior abilities or station, influence or authority, we may yet make a useful stand against the prevalence of impiety and iniquity, by the silent efficacy of fervent, constant prayers, whilst 'we lift up holy hands, without wrath and doubting:' and, provided our petitions be dictated by a forgiving and loving spirit towards men, as well as by zeal for the honour of God, we may in this way, and by a Christian example and conversation, by 'a word spoken in due season,' and various other similar attempts, be useful; without any one having so

Ver. 20. And in the morning, &c.—[St. Matthew informs us that this tree grew by the way-side: and was therefore not private, but public property; so that the destruction of it really injured no one.—Our Lord was pleased to make use of this miracle to prefigure the speedy ruin of the Jewish nation, on account of its unfruitfulness under greater advantages than any other people enjoyed at that day; and, like all the rest of his miracles, it was done with a gracious intention—to alarm his countrymen, and induce them to repent.]—Bagster The passage parallel to this is Mat. xxi. 19—22.

Ver. 23. Be thou removed, &c.—[This appears to have been a proverbial form of speech, to signify the removing or conquering great difficulties. A rooter up of mountains, was a common epithet applied to any Rabbin who was an eminent and learned man.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27—33. And they come again to Jerusalem, &c.—Parallel text, Mat. xxi. 23—27.

Ver. 32. All men counted John, that he was a prophet.—Compare chapter vi. 20.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. Built a tower.—Mr. Buckingham, in his late travels, "was particularly struck with the appearance of several small and detached towers in the midst of vine-lands, from which watchmen looked out to gaurd the produce of the lands, even in the present day."

Ver. 10. The stone which.—[That this passage refers to the Messiah, some of the ancient Jews fairly acknowledge. It was literally fulfilled in our Lord, who was rejected by the Jewish builders, but is become the head of the corner; the head of principalities and powers, and of his body, the church.]—B.

Ver. 13—17. And they send—That is, the Pharisees, that were offended with this parable, as named at them, sent some of their disciples.

Ver. 18—27. Then come unto him the Sadducees, &c.—This conversation is related by Matthew, chap. xxii. 23—32.

19 Master, Moses wrote [r] unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother [s] should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

20 Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.

21 And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22 And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

23 In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24 And Jesus answering said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God?

25 For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but [t] are as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead, that they rise: have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, [u] I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?

27 He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye [v] therefore do greatly err.

28 ¶ And [w] one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, [x] Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this, Thou [y] shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

32 And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and [z] there is none other but he:

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is [a] more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him [b] any question.

35 ¶ And [c] Jesus answered and said, while he taught in the temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David?

36 For David himself said by [d] the Holy Ghost, The [e] LORD said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

37 David therefore himself calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his son? And the common people heard him gladly.

38 ¶ And he said unto them [f] in his doctrine, Beware [g] of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market-places,

39 And [h] the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts:

40 Which devour widows' [i] houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

41 ¶ And [j] Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast [k] money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much.

42 And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two [l] mites, which make a farthing.

43 And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That [m] this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:

44 For all they did cast in of their [n] abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all [o] her living.

much as a pretence for inquiring 'by what authority we do such things.'"—T. Scott.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 41—44. The widow's mite commended.—It is true that Mark introduces very few facts into his gospel that had not been mentioned by Matthew; but those few are valuable, and particularly this before us, which explains God's method of estimating charity, even when resulting from a good principle; and when it does not, he estimates it as nothing, or worse than nothing.

In remarking upon this incident, we may notice, 1. The benevolent object here proposed, which commentators are agreed was a fund for the support of the Temple worship. Such funds are commonly reckoned among our charities; but with the greatest impropriety, if by that term we understand any thing optional, which we may either do or let alone at pleasure, which seems to be the common notion of a charity. The support of divine worship, and the spread of divine truth, yea, and the relief of the distressed poor, are duties as forcibly enjoined on us as sobriety, chastity, or honesty; only God has left it to our honour and gratitude to apportion the measure to our means. And, 2. Jesus Christ sits opposite to the treasury box, and eyes every piece of money that is put in, whether gold or silver or copper: and though he is well pleased when he sees the "rich cast in much," he singles out the poor widow's mite for commendation. If we were to consider this fact, and we cannot deny it, without also denying the divinity of Christ, it would surely greatly enlarge our collections on such occasions: every one would be anxious to give the utmost he could afford. 3. The measure of our benevolence should be regulated by our means. "God loveth a cheerful giver;" but "if there be first a willing mind, a man's contributions are acceptable according to that he hath; not according to that he hath not." (2 Cor. viii. 12; ix. 7.) To give away the property of others for any private ends of our own, is a defraud, and not benevolence; but to hoard up riches under pretence of bestowing a large sum by legacy, is defrauding God and ourselves too. It defrauds Him of what should have been given to his cause long before; and defrauds ourselves of that reward which his grace might have bestowed on our timely charity. But surely no man can expect a reward for giving away that which he could by no possibility retain one moment longer. It is an awful thing for a professor of religion to die rich! especially when he has not a large and needy family to provide for. 4. We may remark that this good woman gave her all—"all her living"—all she had, which shows not only her gratitude, but her faith; she not only acknowledges that she had received all she had from God, but she could trust him in future for all she wanted; and if he gives "a hundred fold," as he has

Ver. 24. Do ye not therefore err.—[As the five books of Moses were the only Scriptures which the Sadducees admitted as divine, our Lord confutes them by an appeal to these Books, and proves that they were ignorant of those very writings which they professed to hold sacred. In Avoda Zara, and Sanhedrim, it is said, "These are they which shall have no part in the world to come: those who say, the Lord did not come from heaven; and those who say, the resurrection cannot be proved out of the Law." Our Lord not only rectified their opinions, but so explained the doctrine, as to overthrow the erroneous decision of the Pharisees, that if two brothers married one woman, she should be restored at the resurrection to the first.]—Bagster.

Ver. 28—40. And one of the scribes came, &c.—See Matthew xxii. 35; xxiii. 14.

Ver. 29. The Lord our God is one Lord.—This passage in the Greek is quoted literally from the LXX. of Deut. vi. 4. The word Lord in Greek is Kurios, but in Hebrew Jehovah. The passage in both Testaments is translated as a single proposition; but the best critics in both places divide it into two, (as in our note on Deut. vi. 4,) thus: "Jehovah our Elohim, Jehovah is one." So Ainsworth: or as in the LXX. and this verse, "The Lord is our God; the Lord is one;" Kurios here, as generally, answering to Jehovah. So Vitringa, Campbell, Doddridge, &c. Dr. Lightfoot remarks, that our Lord here quotes to the Jews one of the texts inscribed on their phylacteries.

Ver. 32. Well, Master, thou hast said the truth.—Doddridge, "Truly, Master, thou hast spoken well."—For there is one God.—"God" (Theos) is wanting in the Alexandrian and three other ancient MSS., besides many others; and in several ancient versions. It must, however, be necessarily understood, unless we supply, instead of it, Kurios, or Jehovah, as Parkhurst does.

Ver. 34. Thou art not far from the kingdom of God—Or from the doctrine of the gospel.

Ver. 41. Cast money into the treasury.—Marg. "Brass money;" answering to our copper; but it is difficult to state the exact value of these pieces, as they were of different sizes, and changed their value with time and circumstances. It is probable the Pharisees gave large pieces of brass, instead of small silver, as making a greater chink. These are supposed to be nearly of the value of our sixpence, and much, or many of these brass pieces, would make a great sound.

Ver. 42. Two mites, or "a farthing."—[The lepton, which we render mite, (probably from the French mitete, a crumb, or small morsel,) was the smallest piece of money in use among the Jews.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XIII.

[1] Christ foretelleth the destruction of the temple: 9 the persecutions for the gospel: 10 that the gospel must be preached to all nations: 14 that great calamities shall happen to the Jews: 24 and the manner of his coming to judgment: 32 the hour whereof being known to none, every man is to watch and pray, that we be not found unprovided, when he cometh to each one particularly by death.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29.

AND [a] as he went out of the temple, one of his disciples saith unto him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

2 And Jesus answering said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? [b] there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives over against the temple, Peter and James and John and Andrew asked him privately,

4 Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

5 And Jesus answering them began to say, Take [c] heed lest any man deceive you:

6 For many shall come [d] in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

7 And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be [e] ye not troubled: for such things must needs be; but the end shall not be yet.

8 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: these are the beginnings of [f] sorrows.

9 But take heed to yourselves: for they [g] shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them.

10 And [h] the gospel must first be published among all nations.

11 But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but [i] the Holy Ghost.

12 Now the brother [j] shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son; and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

13 And ye shall be hated [k] of all men for my name's sake: but he [l] that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of [m] by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains:

15 And let him that is on the house-top not [n] go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house:

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17 But wo to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

19 For [o] in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be.

20 And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days.

21 And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, [p] here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not:

22 For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall show signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect.

23 But [p] take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things.

24 ¶ But in those days, after that [q] tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light,

25 And [r] the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

26 And [s] then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory.

27 And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven.

28 Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near:

29 So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30 Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done.

31 Heaven and earth shall pass away: but [t] my words shall not pass away.

32 ¶ But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.

33 Take [u] ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

34 For the Son of man is as a man taking a promised, she was surely wise to make God her banker. Ah! had those silly speculators, who have sent their thousands and tens of thousands to the very ends of the earth, only given them to serve the cause of God, or preserve the lives of their starving countrymen—how many blessings would they have called down upon themselves!

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—37. "Ere long 'heaven and earth shall pass away,' and all the things which we behold will be dissolved; but 'the words of Christ shall not pass away.' A firm belief of his truth will be our only and our effectual preservative against those seducers, and our sure support under those trials which occasion the ruin of all, 'but the elect, whom God hath chosen.' At length we shall see 'the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory,'

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—23. And as he went out of the temple, &c.—For the corresponding predictions of Matthew, see chap. xxiv. 1—28.

Ver. 1. See what manner.—[Tacitus applies to the temple the terms immensæ opulentiæ: and Josephus says, "that it was, of all buildings he had seen or heard of, the most wonderful for its size, structure, and magnificence," and states that the "stones were white and strong, fifty feet long, twenty-four broad, and sixteen in thickness."]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. These are the beginnings of sorrows.—The margin of our Bibles remarks, that the original word for sorrows imports "the pains of a woman in travail." See Rom. viii. 22.

Ver. 9. Councils.—[Sanhedrims, the grand national council, and smaller courts of judicature in each city: see on Mat. v. 22.]—Bagster.——For a testimony against them.—So Doddridge. But Campbell renders it "to them;" referring to Mat. xxiv. 14. Both senses are just. The first preachers of the gospel were witnesses for Christ to "rulers and kings;" and when their witness was rejected, then they became witnesses against them. See chap. vi. verse 11.

Ver. 11. Take no thought beforehand.—See note on Mat. vi. 25. It would be a gross perversion of Scripture to apply this, as some have done, to ministerial studies, as an encouragement to idleness in preachers: but when prevented from study, either by the opposition of their enemies, or by the multiplicity of the labours to which they have in providence been called, and still more under circumstances of persecution these words have afforded rational support and consolation to many, and have been, in some instances, remarkably fulfilled.

Ver. 32. Of that day and that hour.—Campbell, "OR hour:" which he does not hesitate to admit as the true reading, supported by the most and best MSS., and ancient versions. Hour being distinguished from day, marks the precise time.——Neither the Son.—This is parallel to Matthew's expression, "But the Father ONLY;" the only question is, can this be explained in consistency with the doctrine of Christ's divinity? Many solutions of this difficulty have been proposed.

The more general, and, as we think, just interpretation is, that though the human nature of Christ was joined to the divine; yet, as infinite attributes could not be communicated to a finite mind, so the soul of Jesus could be no more omniscient than omnipresent; and therefore might not, at this period, know the precise day and hour here spoken of. This sense is so ably defended by Dr. Pye Smith, that we shall present our readers with a short extract or two from his valuable work.

After remarking that the "intellectual attainments of Jesus were partly acquired by diligence in the use of proper means," but chiefly communicated by the Holy Spirit (Isa. xi. 2, 3.) he adds, "All the knowledge which his offices required, or to the use of which his commission extended, he unquestionably enjoyed (on earth;) but beyond this sphere, there is an indefinite field for the acquisition of new knowledge, as well as of higher felicity in his glorified state.

"The Scriptures appear to us, on the one hand, to teach the existence of far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning:

36 Lest coming suddenly he find you [v] sleeping.

37 And what I say unto you, I say unto all, [w] Watch.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 A conspiracy against Christ. 3 Precious ointment is poured on his head by a woman. 10 Judas selleth him to Master for money. 12 Christ himself foretelleth how he shall be betrayed by one of his disciples: 22 after the passover prepared, and eaten, instituteth his supper: 26 declareth aforehand the flight of all his disciples, and Peter's denial. 43 Judas betrayeth him with a kiss. 46 He is apprehended in the garden, 53 falsely accused, and unjustly condemned of the Jews' council: 65 shamefully abused by them: 66 and thrice denied of Peter.

AFTER two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2 But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

3 ¶ And [a] being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of [b] spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.

4 And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred [c] pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For [d] ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always.

8 She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

10 ¶ And [e] Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray [f] him unto them.

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him [g] money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

12 ¶ And the first day of [h] unleavened bread, when they [i] killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover?

13 And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go [j] ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14 And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good man of the house, The Master [k] saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat [l] the passover with my disciples?

15 And he will show you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us.

16 And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found [m] as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

17 And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth [n] with me shall betray me.

19 And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

20 And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish.

21 The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but wo to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good [o] were it for that man if he had never been born.

22 ¶ And [p] as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, [q] eat: this is my body.

23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24 And he said unto them, This [r] is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many.

25 Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it [s] new in the kingdom of God.

26 ¶ And when they had sung a [t] hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

and then all his chosen people will be gathered from among the wicked into his heavenly kingdom. Instead, therefore, of curiously inquiring into 'the secret things, which belong to the LORD;' let us carefully improve the revelation of his will, by 'giving diligence to make our calling and election sure.' We know that the hour of our death cannot be very distant: our Lord, though not present to our sight, beholds our whole conduct, and will shortly come to call us to an account for it. And to every one of us he gives his proper work, by attending to which we may approve ourselves true believers, and both honour our Lord and serve our generation. Happy therefore is that servant, who continues sober, vigilant, and diligent in his place, without interfering with that of other men! He will be prepared for the coming of his Lord, whenever that may be: he will be found awake and employed in his service, according to the duty of his station; and his gracious recompense will be secure. But it will be an awful surprise to a professed Christian or minister, should he be found sleeping, supine, self-indulgent, and unprepared, by his Lord at his coming. He therefore speaks to us and to all, charging and warning us to 'take heed to ourselves,' to our duty, or our ministry, and to watch and pray always, 'lest coming suddenly he should find us sleeping.'"—T. Scott.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—72. "There is an essential difference between the general character of faulty disciples, and that of hypocrites. These often prove traitors, and deliberately join the enemies of Christ in opposing his cause: they conceal their crimes, by attending on ordinances and sacraments; and, whilst they presumptuously call Christ their Lord and Master, and express great affection for him, they betray him into the hands of his implacable enemies. Thus they hasten their own destruction, and 'it would have been better for them had they never been born.' In the conduct of our suffering Lord, we see the brightest pattern of meekness, patience, such a union as produces a personal oneness; and on the other, to exclude the notion of transmutation, or confusion, of the essential properties of either nature with respect to the other. It follows that, whatever communication of supernatural qualities, powers, or enjoyments, was made by the indwelling divinity to the man Christ Jesus," it was made in various degrees, and on successive occasions, as the divine wisdom judged fit; and this necessary limitation would apply to times or seasons which the Father has put in his own power, (Acts i. 7,) "as much as to any other conceivable class of objects." Ver. 26. A hymn—or "Psalm."

27 And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, [u] I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28 But [v] after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29 But [w] Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

31 But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

32 ¶ And [x] they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

33 And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

34 And saith unto them, My [y] soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.

35 And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed [z] that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him.

36 And he said, [a] Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless, [b] not what I will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest not thou watch one hour?

38 Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The [c] spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak.

39 And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40 And when he returned, he found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer him.

41 And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the [d] hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

42 Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

43 ¶ And [e] immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude [f] with swords and staves, from the [g] chief priests and the scribes and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall [h] kiss, that same s he; take him, and lead him away safely.

45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, master; and kissed him.

46 And they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me?

49 I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: but the scriptures [j] must be fulfilled.

50 And [k] they all forsook him, and fled.

51 And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him:

52 And he left [l] the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

53 ¶ And [m] they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes.

54 And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55 And the chief priests and all the council sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and found none.

56 For [n] many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.

57 And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying,

58 We heard him say, I will [o] destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

59 But neither so did their witness agree together.

60 And [p] the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

61 But [q] he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?

62 And Jesus said, I am: and [r] ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high priest rent [s] his clothes, and saith, What need we any farther witnesses?

64 Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And some began to spit [t] on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say fortitude, holiness, and compassion to sinners, that the earth or even the creation at large ever witnessed: we here perceive likewise the desert of sin, the worth of our souls, the foundation of our hope, and the nature of our Christian calling; which is to do good with unwearied perseverance, and to endure evil with fortitude, meekness, and patience, after the example of our gracious Saviour. Thus may we look forward with comfort to the time, when we [u] shall see the Son of man, sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven;' and hope to be numbered with his victorious army of glorified saints; when all his persecutors and enemies will be driven away into everlasting destruction. But when we hear Peter, after all his promises and resolutions, repeatedly denying his Lord with oaths and curses, we may well tremble to reflect on the weakness and depravity even of believers, if left to themselves; we may take occasion from the reflection to admire the mercy and patience of our God; we may be excited to thankfulness, that we have not yet been left utterly to for-

Ver. 27—42. And Jesus saith unto them, &c.—See the parallel text in Mat. xxvi. 26—46. But the order is somewhat different.

Verses 33, 34. Sore amazed, &c.—"Being seized with grief and horror, said to them, My soul is overwhelmed with a deadly anguish."

Ver. 51. A certain young man, &c.—"Though this incident may not appear of great moment, (says Dr. Campbell,) it is, in my opinion, one of those circumstances which we call picturesque; which, though in a manner unconnected with the story, enlivens the narrative, and adds to its credibility. It must have been late in the night, when (as has been very probably conjectured) some young man, whose house lay near the garden, being roused out of sleep by the noise of the soldiers and armed retinue passing by, got up, and stimulated by curiosity, wrapped himself (as Casaubon supposes) in the cloth in which he had been sleeping, and ran after them. This is such an incident as is very likely to have happened, but most unlikely to have been invented."

Ver. 56. Agreed not together.—Campbell, "Was insufficient" So ver. 59.

Ver. 58. Build another made without hands.—It is observable that Matthew omits the latter clause, and in this probably the witnesses disagreed; though, had they agreed, it could not have amounted to a capital charge.

Ver. 61. Son of the Blessed.—The high priest used probably both noun and adjective. Matthew records one, and Mark the other; but this makes no contradiction. The Jews, when they name God, generally add blessed for ever, and by the Blessed, they meant God the Father.

Ver. 62. The Son of man.—[The passage of Daniel, to which our Lord refers, was always considered by the Jews as a description of the Messiah. In Zohar, it is said, referring to this prophecy, "This is the King Messiah." Our Saviour, therefore, now in his lowest state of humiliation, asserted his claims as the Messiah, who shall appear in the clouds of heaven, as the judge of the world.]—Bagster.

66 ¶ And [u] as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest:

67 And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

68 But he [v] denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69 And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

70 And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a [w] Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71 But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak.

72 And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And [x] when he thought thereon, he [y] wept.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Jesus brought bound, and accused before Pilate. 15 Upon the clamour of the common people, the murderer Barabbas is loosed, and Jesus delivered up to be crucified 17 He is crowned with thorns, 19 spit on, and mocked: 21 Cometh in bearing his cross: 27 hangeth between two thieves: 29 suffereth the triumphing reproaches of the Jews: 39 but confessed by the centurion to be the Son of God: 43 and is honourably buried by Joseph.

AND straightway in the morning the chief priests held a [a] consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate.

2 And Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answering said unto him, Thou sayest it.

3 And the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing.

4 And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee.

5 But [b] Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

6 ¶ Now [c] at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.

7 And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8 And the multitude crying aloud began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

9 But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

10 For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for [d] envy.

11 But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather [e] release Barabbas unto them.

12 And Pilate answered and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him whom ye call the King [f] of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14 Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil [g] hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

Ver. 66—72. And as Peter was beneath, &c.—The parallel text to this is Mat. xxvi. 69—75. If Peter had any superintendence of Mark's gospel, as our Introduction supposes, it is plain he wished not to conceal or palliate his guilt, for Mark records the three denials of his Master; the last time with oaths and curses.

Ver. 70. They that stood by.—Several by-standers seem to have accused him.—Thy speech agreeth thereto.—["Thy dialect," or mode of speech. From various examples produced by Lightfoot and Schoetgen, it appears that the Galileans used a very corrupt dialect and pronunciation; interchanging the gutturals, and other letters, and so blending or dividing words as to render them unintelligible, or convey a contrary sense. Thus, when a Galilean would have asked, "whose is this lamb," he pronounced the first word so confusedly that it could not be known whether he meant chamor, "an ass," chamar, "wine," amar, "wool," or immar, "a lamb." A certain woman, intending to say to a judge, "My lord, I had a picture which they stole; and it was so great, that if you had been placed in it, your feet would not have touched the ground," so spoiled it by her pronunciation, that her words meant, "Sir slave, I had a beam, and they stole thee away; and it was so great, that if they had hung thee on it, thy feet would not have touched the ground."]—Bagster.

Ver. 71. Began to curse and to swear.—Doubtless to prove thereby that he was not a disciple. Let all profane persons consider this!

Ver. 72. Before the cock crow twice.—Peter denied his Master before the cock crew the first time (ver. 68;) but he denied him three times before the cock crew twice.—And when he thought thereon, he wept.—Campbell says, "There are not many words in Scripture which have undergone more interpretations than this term (epibalon.) Our translators give two of these in the margin 1. "He wept abundantly." 2. "He began to weep." 3. Doddridge reads, "Covering (his head) he went out," &c., and many more may be seen in Campbell, who, however, returns nearly to the sense of the common version, and renders it, "He thought carefully thereon with tears."

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1. The whole council.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Sanhedrim."

Ver. 5. Yet answered nothing—That is, to the charges of the Jews. He had only answered to the high priest and Roman governor. See ver. 2.

Ver. 16. The Pretorium—[Was properly the tent or house of the prætor, a military, and sometimes a civil officer. This was a magnificent edifice in the upper part of the city, which had been formerly Herod's palace, and from which there was an approach to the citadel of Antonia, which adjoined the temple.—Josephus.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. And they clothed him with purple.—Matthew says, "scarlet." Wesley says the royal robes were partly of both colours; but this was probably a single robe. By the frequent allusions of the ancient poets to the purple colour of blood, it should seem that the ancient purple had in it a predominance of red, which when worn and soiled, would resemble such purple: but it is very difficult to ascertain the shades of difference between the scarlet, crimson, and purple dyes of the ancients.

Ver. 21. The father of Alexander and Rufus—Who afterwards proved eminent Christians.—Wesley.

Ver. 23. Wine mingled with myrrh.—This was a drink given to criminals doomed to suffer death, in order to stupify their feelings. Our Lord would not consent to taste a drink, that brought relief by blunting the sensibilities of the soul. What a reproof to those who, in times of sorrow, betake themselves to strong drink—or to those who sacrifice their reason on the altar of intemperance.

1 An angel declareth the resurrection of Christ to three women. 9 Christ himself appeareth to Mary Magdalene: 12 to two going into the country: 14 then to the apostles, 15 whom he sendeth forth to preach the gospel: 19 and ascendeth into heaven.

AND [a] when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet [c] spices, that they might come and anoint him.

2 And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

3 And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4 And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great.

5 And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

6 And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is [c] risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him.

7 But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you.

the evil of sin which was thus expiated: and it must at the same time destroy all expectations of being saved in any other way; for, 'if righteousness come by the law, then Christ died in vain.' With what earnestness will the man who firmly believes these truths, seek an interest in this great salvation! With what ardent gratitude will he receive the comfortable assurance, or even the dawning hope, of forgiveness and eternal life, as purchased for him by the sufferings and death of the incarnate Son of God! And with what 'godly sorrow' will he mourn over those sins, which he now looks on as having 'crucified the Lord of glory!'

"Careful meditation on the silence, meekness, and patience of the holy Jesus, amidst all his complicated sufferings, and the varied contempt and cruelty of his numerous enemies, must cause us to exclaim, 'did Jesus thus suffer, and shall I, a wretched sinner, fret or repine? shall I indulge resentment, or utter reproaches and menaces, because of troubles and injuries?' With this object before us, surely we cannot think it too much to pour out tears for those sins, for which the Son of God shed his precious blood; or to pour out our prayers for those blessings, for which 'he poured out his soul unto death, and was numbered with malefactors;' or to bear hardship for him who bore the wrath of God for us. Indeed all we can suffer must be light, compared with his unknown agonies: yet how often are we 'weary and faint in our minds;' instead of being thankful that we are not in the pit of destruction, as we justly might have been!"—T. Scott.

This is sufficiently evident; for he well knew why he was come unto that hour, nor could he be forsaken of God, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. The Deity, however, might restrain so much of its consolatory support, as to leave the human nature fully sensible of all its sufferings; so that the consolations might not take off any part of the keen edge of his passion; and this was necessary to make his sufferings meritorious."]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. And very early.—[West supposes, that the women made two different visits to the sepulchre; and in consequence of that, two distinct reports to the disciples;—that Mary Magdalene, with the other Mary and Salome, set out not only early, but very early in the morning, before the time appointed to meet Joanna and the other women there. The latter sat in the porch of the tomb, and had assumed a terrible appearance to overawe the guard; (Mat. xxviii. 1,;) but this appeared as a young man, within the sepulchre, in the inner apartment. The two angels spoken of by St. John (chap. xx 11.) appeared some time after these; but whether they were the same or different cannot be ascertained; neither can it be affirmed that the angels which manifested themselves to the second party of women, recorded by St. Luke, (ch. xxiv. 4.) were the same or different.]—Bagster.

day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils.

10 And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept.

11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

12 ¶ After that he appeared in another form unto [d] two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

13 And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them.

14 ¶ Afterward [e] he appeared unto the eleven as they sat [f] at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief [g] and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

15 And he said unto them, Go [h] ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every [i] creature.

16 He [j] that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but [k] he that believeth not shall be damned.

17 And these signs shall follow them that believe; In [l] my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak [m] with new tongues;

18 They shall take up [n] serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they [o] shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

19 ¶ So then [p] after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat [q] on the right hand of God.

20 And they went forth, and preached every where, the [r] Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.

years to certain women; and afterwards to his Apostles, whom he commissions to preach the gospel throughout the world.—Jesus first appears to Mary Magdalene, on whom he had wrought a miracle of singular mercy, and to some other pious females, who immediately communicated the joyful news to his Apostles and disciples, to all of whom, at first, it appeared incredible. Before his ascension, however, Jesus appeared to all the apostles, and to more than 500 brethren. His last appearance is introduced here rather abruptly, and must be connected with Matthew's introduction, (chap. xxviii. 16—18,) which has already been considered. Our farther remarks will be directed to the commission here given to the apostles, and to the great topics therewith connected.

The commission itself is here somewhat more generally expressed, than in St. Matthew: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;"—i. e. of the human race.

After the first three centuries, the object died away from the recollection of Christians, and it seems to have been generally deferred to the age of the Millennium, when the gift of tongues, it was supposed, must necessarily be imparted "for the conversion of the world." Within the last thirty years, however, the subject has been revived, miraculous powers have been found not absolutely necessary to fulfil our Lord's command, and more has been done in the missionary cause, than for 13 or 14 centuries before. If the propagation of the Scriptures, the establishment of schools, and missionary labours, continue to increase as they have done for the last 10 or 15 years, we may at least hope that our children may live to see the dawn of the millennial age.

An excellent missionary, the late Mr. Ward of Serampore, remarks, that "Much stress is laid on faith, in the New Testament. . . . . Faith is credence to a report made. It is the nature of the tidings believed, which produces saving effects on the heart and character. A man can scarcely believe what the Scripture says of sin and its consequences, of judgment, and the everlasting punishment of the wicked, without being deeply affected. . . . . The declaration that Christ gives pardon to the condemned, liberty to the captives, rest to the weary, and life to the dead, must produce a powerful effect on the believer, and tend to draw him to Christ for a share in these blessings. The news of the gospel then, it is plain, has a reference to a prior state of danger, or want, or misery; and as holding forth mercy to the criminal, deliverance to the captives, and salvation to the lost, it is called good news (or gospel.) This report, that there is mercy for all the guilty who will truly seek it, is to be believed. He who feels himself guilty, and believes the report, will necessarily come and put in his claim for the blessings: and in proportion to the strength of his faith, he will be the subject of peace, joy, and gratitude.

"Baptism is here placed by the side of faith, as though it were also essential to salvation; but as baptism is that duty by which a person assumes the Christian profession, I apprehend the (Evangelist) placed it here as the pledge of our whole obedience: and if this idea be correct, it will then be—he that believes and obeys shall be saved;—an explanation which makes the passage harmonize with the whole body of Christian truth." (Ward's Reflections.)

With the propagation of this gospel to all nations is connected the power of working miracles, at that time absolutely necessary to its universal propagation. This power had reference to the casting out demons—the gift of tongues—the healing of the sick—and invulnerability to danger. These powers were bestowed in all their plenitude on the day of Pentecost; and of the latter we have a striking instance, in the apostle Paul at Melita. (See Acts xxviii. 1—6.)

Whether these powers shall ever be renewed we pretend not to determine; but on one point we are most clear; namely, that the propagation of the gospel ought not to be delayed for them. The facilities of travelling, and of acquiring languages, have been increased to a degree little short of miraculous; and nothing is wanting but the outpouring of divine grace from above, to give the gospel abundant success among the rudest savages and the basest idolaters.

Alexandrian MSS.; seven of them, at least, in the Codex Beza; in the old Syriac, the Arabic, the Vulgate, and the old Italic, and other ancient versions, and in the Commentaries of Theophylact. They are quoted by Ambrose, Augustin, and Leo, styled the Great; and verse 19 in particular, is so cited by Irenæus in the second century, as giving room to believe they were all in his copy. See Horne's Introduction, 4th edition, vol. iv. p. 254, &c.

Ver. 18. They shall take up serpents, &c.—[It is fully asserted here, that the Apostles of our Lord should not lose their life by poison, and there is neither record nor tradition to disprove it. But it is worthy of remark, that Mohammed, who styled himself the apostle of God, lost his life by poison; and, had he been a true prophet, or a true apostle of God, he would not have fallen into the snare.]—Bagster.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. MARK.

MARK, the writer of the preceding Gospel, was doubtless born of Jewish parents, of the tribe of Levi, and the line of the priesthood. He was sister's son to Peter, and by some is thought to have been one of the 70 disciples; while others suppose, that he was converted by Peter's ministry; but, perhaps, there is no other reason for this, than because he calls him his son.—Mark was constantly with Peter; he accompanied his apostolical progress, and preached the Gospel in Italy and at Rome; where, at the request of the Christians of those parts, he composed and wrote his Gospel. By Peter he was sent into Egypt, there to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation. Eusebius says, that so great was the success of his ministry, that he was instrumental in converting multitudes of men and women. The vigilant enemy of the souls of men would not allow his success to be uninterrupted; accordingly, when at Alexandria, the multitudes being assembled for their idolatrous solemnities, broke in upon him during his engagements in the service of God's house, and binding his hands and feet with cords, dragged him through the streets until his flesh was dreadfully, lacerated and his blood gushed out: nature sunk under such tortures, and he soon became a sacrifice to the rage of an infuriated and persecuting populace.

Tradition states, that Mark was of a middle size and stature, his nose long, his eyebrows turning back, his eyes graceful and amiable, his head bald, his beard long and gray, his gait quick, and the constitution of his body strong and healthy.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE.

[LUKE, to whom this Gospel has been uniformly attributed from the earliest ages of the Christian Church, is generally allowed to have been "the beloved physician" mentioned by St. Paul; (Col. iv. 14.;) and as he was the companion of that Apostle, in all his labours and sufferings, for many years, (Acts xvi. 12. xx. 1—6; xxvii. 1, 2; xxviii. 13—16. 2 Ti. iv. 11. Phil. 24.) and wrote "the Acts of the Apostles," which conclude with a brief account of St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome, we may be assured that he had the Apostle's sanction to what he did; and probably this Gospel was written some time before that event, about A. D. 63 or 64, as is generally supposed. He would appear, from Col. iv. 10, 11, and his intimate acquaintance with the Greek language, as well as from his Greek name Loukas, to have been of Gentile extraction; and according to Eusebius and others, he was a native of Antioch. But, from the Hebraisms occurring in his writings, and especially from his accurate knowledge of the Jewish rites, ceremonies, and customs, it is highly probable that he was a Jewish proselyte, and afterwards converted to Christianity. Though he may not have been, as some have affirmed, one of the seventy disciples, and an eye-witness of our Saviour's miracles, yet his intercourse with the Apostles, and those who were eye-witnesses of the works, and ear-witnesses of the words of Christ, renders him an unexceptionable witness, if considered merely as a historian; and the early and unanimous reception of his Gospel as divinely inspired, is sufficient to satisfy every reasonable person.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

The preface of Luke to his whole gospel. 5 The conception of John the Baptist. 26 And of Christ. 39 The prophecy of Elisabeth, and of Mary, concerning Christ. 57 The nativity and circumcision of John. 67 The prophecy of Zacharias, both of Christ, 76 and of John.

FORASMUCH as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning [a] were eye-witnesses, and ministers of [b] the word;

3 It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in [c] order, most excellent [d] Theophilus,

4 That thou mightest know [e] the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.

5 THERE was in the days of [f] Herod, the king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of [g] Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6 And they were both righteous [h] before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances [i] of the Lord blameless.

7 And they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren, and they both were now well stricken in years.

8 And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9 According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was [j] to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

10 And the whole multitude of the people were praying [k] without at the time of incense.

11 And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar [l] of incense.

12 And when Zacharias saw him, he was [m] troubled, and fear fell upon him.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—25. Luke, after a short preface, relates the parentage and conception of John the Baptist.—Who the many here referred to were, who had sent forth declarations or narratives of the transactions here referred to, it is impossible to ascertain. It is most probable that Luke had neither seen the gospel of Mark nor the Greek of Matthew, which if written, considering the slow process of transcribing, could hardly be got into circulation before this was written. Nor could he refer to any of the Apocryphal Gospels now existing, few or none of which appear to have been written until after the canon of Scripture was completed. We must therefore suppose the reference to have been made to the narrative or memoranda of private Christians, which, though in the main true and honest, were not written by eye-witnesses of the facts, nor under the guidance of inspiration.

When our translators speak of these facts as "most surely believed," we rather conceive with the authorities cited below, that the Evangelist refers to the certain evidence with which they were attended, rather than to the strong confidence with which they were believed. The facts fully bore out (or fulfilled) the Old Testament predictions, to which most of the New are made answerable. Observing in these, however, many things omitted which himself had received from eye-witnesses of the event, or divinely accredited "Ministers of the word," St. Luke thought it his duty to compile the gospel now before us, in which he takes a wider range, and traces a longer succession of events than either of the other evangelists: beginning with the conception of John the Baptist, and proceeding to the ascension of our Lord to heaven, which he alone describes.

This Gospel is addressed personally to a friend of the name of Theophilus, whose rank in society entitled him to the style of most excellent, or noble; and who at the same time had been early instructed in Christianity.

We come now to the narrative, which begins with the parentage, conception, and birth of John the Baptist. His parents "were two pious Jews, among that select few who waited for the Messiah, having some (tolerably) correct ideas of the CHAP. I. Ver. 1. Have taken in hand—i. e. have undertaken.—To set forth in order.—Doddridge, "To compose the history;" Campbell, "a narrative:" so Boothroyd.—Of those things that are most surely believed.—Doddridge, "Have been confirmed among us with the fullest evidence." Campbell and Boothroyd, "Which have been accomplished." Parkhurst, "Fully proved," or, "confirmed with the fullest evidence."

Ver. 2. Ministers of the word.—Gr. "The Logos," which term St. John, in the preface to his Gospel, applies personally to Christ; but as the same term is by all the Evangelists applied to the Gospel, either preached or written, we think it would be wrong here to restrict its meaning.

Ver. 3. Having had perfect understanding.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Having accurately (or exactly) traced all things from the first," or from their origin.—It seemed good to me also . . . . to write unto thee in order.—Campbell, "A particular account;" Doddridge, "An orderly account." From this expression, some have understood that St. Luke meant to pay particular attention to the order in which the several events occurred; this, however, does not appear to have been the case in every instance; but he certainly gives a longer series of events, beginning from "the very first," the vision of Zacharias, and continuing his narrative to the ascension of our Saviour into heaven, which neither Matthew nor John mention; which Mark indeed mentions, but Luke only describes.—From the very first.—Some render the Greek (anothen) "from above," and found thereon an argument for Luke's inspiration; but as the term is equivocal, we think, with Doddridge, it is too weak authority to support an inference so important.—Most excellent Theophilus.—A noted Christian, to whom Luke directs his Gospel and Acts of the Apostles. Some think that this name means any lover of God.

Ver. 5. Herod, the king of Judea—That is, "Herod the Great."—Zacharias, of the course of Abia—This was one of the 24 courses into which David divided the priests, and that of which Abia, or Abijah, was the head. Compare 1 Ch. xxiii. 6; xxiv. 10.

Ver. 13. John.—This name, Heb. Johanan, occurs about thirty times in the Old Testament, and properly signifies the grace and favour of the Lord.

Ver. 14. Rejoice at his birth—As the forerunner of the Messiah.

Ver. 15. Even from his mother's womb.—See ver. 41.

Ver. 17. To turn the hearts, &c.—This is a quotation from Mal. iv. 6, which see. The only doubt remaining in the text seems to be, whether the passage should be rendered as in our translation, which implies reconciliation and harmony among the people; or, as Doddridge renders it, to "convert the hearts of the fathers with the children," which implies the preparation of the people for Messiah. As these senses are not inconsistent, the question is not important.

Ver. 19. I am Gabriel—The same as appeared to Daniel (chap. viii. 16; ix. 21.)—That stand in the presence of God—Which implies high rank. See note on Mat. xviii. 10.

Ver. 20. Thou shalt be dumb—[i. e. silent; for in this case there was no natural imperfection or debility of the organs of speech, as in dumbness; and the following words, thou shalt not be able to speak, may be regarded as merely expletive. This was at once a proof of the severity and mercy of God: of severity, in condemning him to nine months' silence for his unbelief; of mercy, in rendering his punishment temporary, and the means of making others rejoice in the events predicted.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Speechless.—Perhaps both deaf and dumb; for when the father came to the circumcision, instead of asking verbally by what name he should be called, they "made signs" to him, ver. 62.

Ver. 23. The days of his ministration.—That is, his week, during which he was not allowed to leave the precincts of the temple.

Ver. 24. And after those days—That is, when he returned to his own house.—And hid herself—Meaning, lived a very retired life, her husband being deaf and dumb; and not disclosing her situation, probably, to any one, till she received the visit of her cousin Mary.

25 Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take [a] away my reproach among men.

26 ¶ And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, 27 To a virgin [b] espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

28 And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art [c] highly [d] favoured, the [e] Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women.

29 And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.

30 And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favour with God.

31 And, behold, thou [f] shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS.

32 He shall be [g] great, and shall be called the [h] Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the [i] throne of his father David:

nature of his kingdom. Zacharias was a priest, who officiated in his turn in the temple, and whose work as such was to burn incense [within the sanctuary] while the multitude were in the act of prayer in the outer court. What a striking illustration we have here of the Christian economy, even in the type! How delightful the idea, that while thousands of congregations of the faithful are praying in the outer courts below, Jesus is gone into heaven itself, and there offers the incense of his own merits.

"The prayers of the multitude in the outer court continued, it seems, during the whole time of the offering of incense. But on this day, when the birth of the Baptist was announced, Zacharias stayed much longer in the [sanctuary] than usual, and the people marvelled that he tarried so long. But he had seen an angel, and had been detained to hear tidings of a son, and some distant tidings of the long-expected Saviour himself. Not paying that credit to the message from heaven that he ought to have done, he was struck dumb; and when he came out, he could not speak to the people; but by his signs, they understood that he had seen a vision. After his allotted time of service was over at the temple, Zacharias returned home; and at length John was born, when his father's speech was restored; and being filled with the Holy Ghost, he burst forth into a divine rapture, going back to ancient prophecies of the blessings of the Messiah's reign, and exulting in what God was now about to do for his people. In these divine strains we find him describing the work of his son, as the forerunner of Christ; using allusions which showed that he expected from the Messiah higher blessings than any of a political nature. Elisabeth also, being filled with the Holy Ghost, was inspired like Zacharias, and congratulated her relative in the most pious and affectionate strains." (Rev. W. Ward's Reflections.

Ver. 26—38. The angel Gabriel announces the pregnacy of the Virgin Mary.—The foundation of this miraculous event lies in the doctrine of the fall, whereby human nature, being depraved in its root, could bring forth only a depraved offspring; for "who can bring forth a clean thing out of an unclean?" None but God, assuredly, and he only by miracle, of which we have an instance before us in the fact of the miraculous conception, on which we shall introduce the following delicate and sensible remarks of Dr. David Hunter, of St. Andrew's.

"If there are mysteries in the natural world, it is not unreasonable to admit, that in the intellectual world there are objects too wide for our grasp, which appear the wider and greater, the nearer we approach them. Such are the being of God, his perfections, his providence; and such is the great mystery which stands in the front of the gospel, 'God manifested in the flesh.' (1 Tim. iii. 16.) In all these objects there is something so grand, that ideas fail us when we pretend to trace them with more than ordinary care. By a modest inspection, we know all that can be known. Doubts and anxieties never fail to be the recompense of an over curious search.

"The mysterious birth of Jesus calls for our attention, as a memorable incident in his history; not on purpose to explain, or account for it, but rather to show the propriety with which it is introduced, and is made a part of the history. The world, at least the Jews, had been prepared for this mysterious event, by clear predictions given a long time before the accomplishment; and the age in which Jesus appeared, had the additional advantage of being prepared by the memorable circumstances of the birth of his harbinger, John the Baptist."

Matthew, writing for his countrymen, the Jews, connects this event with a prediction of Isaiah, on which we have offered some remarks at the commencement of his gospel, (Mat. ch. i) Luke, writing for Gentile readers, instead of referring to the prophets, connects the birth of Jesus with that of John the Baptist, an event in some respects little less miraculous, since his pious parents seem to have been much in the same circumstances with Abraham and Sarah, previous to the birth of Isaac.

The messenger employed to announce this extraordinary event is of the angelic order; one of those who attended on the immediate presence of Deity, and by name the same as had formerly been sent on more than one mission to the Prophet Daniel. We know nothing of angels, but from the Scriptures, and by them no more than is necessary to the history of mankind. It has been mentioned as an humble mission for a person of his rank, to be sent on a message to a poor maiden of Judea: but then the message is of such a nature as would be thought an honour to an archangel, could we suppose angels capable of any farther views than obedience to their Maker. As it was the delight of Jesus to do his Father's will, so doubtless must it be the delight of every unfallen creature, independent of every other consideration. The late excellent Mr. Newton has somewhere a thought like this: Were two angels commissioned, the one to be prime minister of an empire, and the other to sweep the streets of its metropolis; the latter would have no wish to supersede the other, but obey with equal pleasure.

The birth of Jesus is announced, as that of the "Son of God:" a term confessedly employed in various senses, and here, we think, with an eminent German critic, (Kuinoel,) "used to signify that Christ was procreated by an immediate divine intervention: in which sense Adam also is called the son of God." (See Dr. Smith's Messiah.)

There seems a striking difference between the manner in which Zacharias and the Holy Virgin received their heavenly messenger. The former, though a priest, found it difficult to believe the possibility of the event announced. The latter, though a virgin of very early age, immediately submits to the announcement of the divine pleasure; "Be it unto me according to thy word!" an expression that intimates at once her faith and modesty. She is no sooner told that it should be the effect of a divine power, than she submits without farther scruple, and requires no sign to confirm the angel's message, as Zacharias did.

Ver. 39—56. The Virgin Mary's visit to her cousin Elisabeth.—It appears from this narrative, that the priests who officiated in the temple-service, oft-times resided at some distance from it, as Zacharias probably at Hebron, a city of the priests, in the hill country of Judah, and went to Jerusalem, (distant about 20 miles) only in their turns of service. The Virgin Mary, being informed by the angel that her cousin Elisabeth had also been the subject of a miraculous power, hastened to visit her, though at the distance of three or four, score miles; which, being only espoused to Joseph, and not yet taken home, she could do, by consent of her parents, without consulting him; and her pregnancy seems not to have been made known to him till after her return. The conversation

Ver. 25. To take away my reproach—That is, of barrenness.

Ver. 28. The Lord is with thee, &c.—Campbell, "The Lord (be) with thee, thou happiest of women."

Ver. 29. She was troubled.—Doubtless alarmed at seeing a stranger in her apartment, and not less so, if the splendour which attended him (as is probable) marked him to be a messenger from heaven.

Ver. 32. He shall be great.—Son of the highest, the true and essential Son of God, the promised Messiah.—These words of the angel have evidently a reference to various prophecies of the Old Testament, particularly Ps. lxxii.

Ver. 35. That holy thing.—A noun is evidently to be understood: Doddridge supplies "offspring," and Campbell, "progeny;" but the simple term "child" is more in harmony with the style of Scripture.

Ver. 39. A city of Juda.—[This was most probably Hebron, a city of the priests, and situated in the hill country of Judea, about 25 miles south of J

40 And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

41 And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost:

42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said Blessed [p] art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

43 And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord [q] should come to me?

44 For, lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45 And blessed is she [r] that believed; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

46 ¶ And Mary said, My [s] soul doth magnify the Lord,

47 And my spirit hath rejoiced [t] in God my Saviour.

48 For he hath regarded the [u] low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me [v] blessed.

49 For he that is mighty [w] hath done to me great [x] things; and holy [y] is his name.

50 And [z] his mercy is on them that fear him from generation to generation.

51 He [a] hath showed strength with his arm; he hath scattered the [b] proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52 He [c] hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.

53 He [d] hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away.

54 He hath holpen his servant Israel, in [e] remembrance of his mercy;

55 As he spake [f] to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever.

56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house.

57 ¶ Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.

58 And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had showed great mercy upon her; and they [g] rejoiced with her.

59 And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John.

61 And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62 And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called.

63 And he asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is [h] John. And they marvelled all.

64 And his mouth [i] was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

65 And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these [j] sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea.

66 And all they that heard them laid them up [k] in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be! and the hand [l] of the Lord was with him.

67 ¶ And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying,

68 Blessed [m] be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people,

69 And hath raised up a horn of salvation [n] for us in the house of his servant David;

70 As he spake [o] by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began:

71 That we should be saved [p] from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us;

72 To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to [q] remember his holy covenant; of Elisabeth with Mary, shows that she was equally pious, and without envying the superior honour of her young cousin, thankfully accepted that which had been assigned to her.

In this chapter and the next we have three hymns; namely, those of Mary, of Zacharias, and of the venerable Simeon, all which are in the true style of Hebrew poetry, and are so rendered by Bp. Jebb, in his late ingenious Disquisitions on the Sacred Literature of the New Testament.

Though the nature and construction of this poetry be a subject beyond the sphere of a Cottage Bible; yet is some general idea of it so necessary to give our readers a just insight into the Scriptures of both Testaments, that in our introduction to the Book of Job we have thrown out a few hints upon this subject; and some short specimens have been interspersed on Gen. iv. 23. Ps. xxii. xxiv. lxxxiv., &c. But that most to our purpose will be found in 1 Sam. ii. verses 1—10, being the song of Hannah, on the model of which the Magnificat of Mary is evidently formed, of which we shall here give the accurate and spirited translation of Bp. Jebb.

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
And my spirit exulted in God my Saviour:
For he hath regarded the lowliness of his handmaiden;
For behold, from henceforth all nations shall call me blessed;
For great things hath the Powerful One done for me,
And holy is his name:
And his mercy is from generation to generation,
Over them who fear him:
He hath wrought strength with his arm:
He hath scattered the supercilious in the imagination of their heart:
He hath cast down potentates from their thrones;
And hath exalted the lowly.
The hungry he hath filled with good things,
And the rich he hath sent empty away.
He hath succoured Israel his servant;
In remembrance of mercy
(As he promised our fathers)
To Abraham, and to his seed for ever."—(Jebb's Sac. Lit. p. 392, 393.)

The nativity of Jesus differs from that of the whole human race, in more than one respect—it was voluntary; he "humbled himself, made himself of no reputation, took upon him the form of a servant;" and being thus "found in fashion as a man," he submitted to all the pains our sins had merited. (Phil. ii. 7.)

"How condescending and how kind
Was God's eternal Son!
Our misery reach'd his heavenly mind,
And pity brought him down."—(Watts.)

Ver. 57—80. The birth of John, and the song of Zacharias.—At the birth of John the Baptist, an angel had predicted that many should rejoice, and so it was: for when "her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shown great mercy on her, they rejoiced with her:" and all that heard of it said, "What manner of child shall this be?" The foundation of John the Baptist's popularity was laid in his cradle, and the attention of the nation was thus early drawn toward him.

But what must be the joy of his father Zacharias! His mouth was opened and his tongue loosed; and his heart, now filled with ecstasy, "indites a good matter," under the immediate influence of the Holy Spirit. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, (saith he,) for he hath visited and redeemed his salem, and nearly one hundred from Nazareth. Such was the intense desire of Mary's mind to visit and communicate with her relative Elisabeth, that she scrupled not to undertake this long journey to effect her purpose.]—B.

Ver. 44. The babe leaped in my womb for joy.—This seems to justify a literal interpretation of ver. 15.

Ver. 45. She that believed.—Meaning Mary, who "stumbled not at the promise through unbelief," as Zacharias seems to have done.

Ver. 48. All generations shall call me blessed.—This has been literally fulfilled, and in the church of Rome carried to idolatrous excess.

Ver. 51. He hath scattered the proud.—Jebb, "the supercilious."

Ver. 52. He hath put down.—[Rather, "He hath taken away, or snatched the mighty from their throne;" which is well expressed by Seneca, "Who bestoweth kingdoms on the wretched, and plucketh them away from the noble" or exalted.]—Bagster.

Ver. 54. He hath holpen (or helped.)—Doddridge, "succoured;" Campbell "Supported"

Ver. 55. As he spake to our fathers.—Doddridge places these words in a parenthesis.

Ver. 63. A writing table.—Doddridge, "Tablet;" Campbell, "Table-book." This was a piece of board covered with wax, or, in some cases, with sand, on which they wrote with a metal or wooden style or pen.——His name is JOHN.—It was customary at the time of circumcision for the father to name the child; and this was not an uncommon name under the Old Testament, though our translators there render it Johanan.

Ver. 66. What manner of child.—It seems to have been a general opinion that children born under such remarkable circumstances, were intended for some great design.

Ver. 69 A horn of salvation.—"A horn of salvation" is literally the power that saves us, meaning, the Messiah.

Ver. 70. Since the world began.—Doddridge, "From the beginning of time." Prophecy seems to have been almost as early as language; for the first prediction seems to have been delivered from the Shekinah, immediately

73 The oath [r] which he sware to our father Abraham,

74 That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him [s] without fear,

75 In [t] holiness and righteousness before him, all [u] the days of our life.

76 And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go [v] before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways;

77 To give knowledge of salvation unto his people [w] by the remission [x] of their sins,

78 Through the [y] tender mercy of our God; whereby the [z] day-spring from on high hath visited us,

79 To [a] give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

80 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel.

CHAPTER II.

1 Augustus taxeth all the Roman empire. 6 The nativity of Christ. 8 One angel relateth it to the shepherds: 13 many sing praises to God for it. 21 Christ is circumcised. 22 Mary purified. 25 Simeon and Anna prophesy of Christ. 40 He increaseth in wisdom, 46 questioneth in the temple with the doctors, 51 and is obedient to his parents.

AND it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus, that all the world should be [a] taxed.

2 (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

3 And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

4 And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

5 To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

6 ¶ And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

people!" He then adverts to the sacred predictions delivered to Abraham, to David, and the succeeding prophets, who had foretold the salvation of Jesus, and to the preparatory annunciations of John his harbinger.

The concluding verse of this chapter refers to the infancy and youth of John the Baptist, which appears to have been spent in the deserts, or uncultivated parts of the country; at a distance, from the metropolis and its gayeties; from the temple and its priests: but not unsuitable to his character as a Nazarite. His father probably chose this situation for him, to prevent his being corrupted either by the maxims of the Pharisees or the morals of the Sadducees.

While he grew in stature and in corporeal strength, he also waxed strong in spirit, bold in his language, and energetic in his manner. The prophet Isaiah had compared him with the harbingers of princes, who, attended by a company of pioneers, lowered the hills, and raised the valleys, and "made straight paths" for the feet of their royal master. (See Note on Matt. iii. 3.)

But he remained in the deserts "until the day of his showing," that is, until the appointed hour of his appearing "unto Israel" in his prophetic character. "There, apart from the world, (says Bishop Horne,) and under the tuition of heaven, he was catechised in the principles of divine wisdom, initiated into the mystery of a holy life, and perfected in the discipline of self-denial." He was, however, under no monastic vows, but equally ready to preach to rustics on the banks of Jordan, or to Herod in his palace at Jerusalem.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—20. The birth of Jesus Christ.—"The Evangelist, at the beginning of this chapter, conveys us to Rome,—the proud and puissant mistress of the world; the enslaver of the nations, sinking, sunk, herself into slavery. From what particular motive we are not informed, nor is it of much importance to determine, Augustus Cesar thought proper to issue a decree for making an exact enrollment of all the subjects of his vast empire. A vain-glorious monarch, who could exultingly call a subjugated hemisphere his own, might be prompted by pride to ascertain the number of slaves destined to obey him. As it was the boast of this magnificent prince, that he had found Rome a city of bricks, and was leaving it a city of marble, the splendour of the capital was no doubt extracted out of the ruins of the provinces, and enrollment probably was intended to precede taxation. However it was, and on whomsoever beside the decree of the emperor fell, it affected one little poor family, in circumstances of singular delicacy, and fell upon it with uncommon severity. Behold the messenger of Cesar at the door of an obscure carpenter at Nazareth of Galilee, summoning him, with all his family, to repair to his native city, to be enrolled in their proper district; and as the commandment of kings require haste, and do not always stoop to consult the feelings of the humble and the miserable, he must depart, on a moment's warning, with his tender companion, now in the last week of pregnancy, poor and unprovided, to a home from which he had been long exiled, and to visit kinsmen to whom he was become a stranger.

"But this removal was wholly ordered by the supreme will of heaven. The Son of David, who was to re-establish his throne, could be born no where but in 'Bethlehem, the city of David.' Thus the great ruler of the world had willed, and thus prophecy had declared. And thus Cesar was merely the unconscious, unintentional minister of the Son of Mary; furnishing a link to the chain of evidence respecting the truth and divine original of Christianity, and exhibiting an illustrious instance of the sovereign control which the great JEHOVAH possesses and exercises over the counsels of princes, the convulsions of nations, the fate of worlds.

"We hasten from proud Rome to humble Nazareth, from a haughty despot to uncomplaining sufferers, from unfeeling power to patient submission. Behold that delicate woman, in the most interesting of all female situations, forced from home, constrained to undertake a painful and anxious journey in a condition which rendered ease, and attention, and tenderness, and the accommodations of sympathy, peculiarly desirable. See her advancing, by slow and distressing stages, towards the residence of her forefathers, once illustrious, but now fallen into decay; to the city of her ancestors, but not to receive the attendance of royal state, not to usher into the world the heir of David's throne, amidst the prayers, and expectations, and kind wishes of the myriads of Israel: no, not so much as to enjoy the consolation and support which even the poor enjoy in such a case, to deposit the solicitude of approaching child-birth in the bosom of a fond mother, or a sympathizing friend; alas! not even to partake of the ordinary conveniences which a traveller has reason to expect, the general hospitality and mercenary comforts of an inn: but to know the heart of a stranger, to swallow down the bitterness of neglect, to feel the insult of the proud, and the merciless pity of the mean. 'There was no room for them in the inn.' Bethlehem was crowded with guests; but lo, the lineal heirs of the royal house of Judah, in the city of David, are so unconnected, so forlorn, so friendless, that not a door will open to let them in, not a tongue say, 'God relieve you,' as they pass by; and so poor, that an apartment in the stable is all the accommodation which, ... by presenting the face of misery, they are able to procure.

"The inevitable hour, to which nature at once looks with hope, and shrinks from with horror, overtakes her; and unsupported, unassisted, as it should seem, she brings forth her first-born son; and is able at once to perform the earliest duties of a mother—'she wrapped him in swaddling clothes,' and with the humility and resignation becoming her destitute condition, 'laid him in the manger,' leaving it to Prov dence to unveil its own secret counsels, and accomplish its own gracious purposes. And thus the Saviour of the world entered upon that state of depression, poverty, and suffering, which terminated only with his life.

"But the affectingly humiliating scene in the stable at Beth-after the fall. Lamech used the poetic style; Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, and from his days to the destruction of Solomon's temple, the world was not, perhaps, without a prophet.

Ver. 78. Through the tender mercy.—Literally, "the bowels of mercy of our God;" a strong Hebraism.——The day-spring—Or dawn, or, as some render it, "the rising sun;" alluding to Mal. iv. 2. The Greek term (anatole) answers to the Hebrew rendered branch; but properly signifies a new shoot arising from a decayed root, (see Isa. xi. 1;) and may therefore well apply to the first streaks of day, which predict the returning sun.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. That all the world should be taxed.—Two questions arise here: 1. What is meant by "all the world?" The Greek word, (Oikoumene,) as Campbell remarks, strictly means, "the inhabited part of the earth," all which the Romans had the arrogance to include within their empire; and, like other conquerors, when they came in contact with any nation which disputed their authority, they considered that they had a right to subdue them, because all the world was theirs! After reading, with some attention, the disquisitions both of Drs. Campbell and Lardner, the Editor is inclined to think that Cesar meant to extend this decree to all his dominions, though he might begin with Judea. 2. What is meant by this taxation? As Herod was acknowledged king of Judea, though a tributary king, it seems unlikely that Cesar should levy a direct tax upon his people; we think, therefore, that this was merely a census, or "enrolment," (as our margin interprets,) including a register both of the names and property of the inhabitants, with a view to future taxation, and probably also to their reduction to a Roman province, which followed soon after. Cesar had doubtless views of revenue or aggrandizement; but Providence had higher views, as the sequel immediately discloses. See Doddridge and Campbell, in loc. and Lardner's Cred.

Ver. 2. And this taxing.—Doddridge renders it, "This was the first enrolment of Cyrenius, (Lat. Quirinius,) afterwards governor of Syria."—[Rather, as Dr. Campbell renders, "This first register took effect when Cyrenius was president of Syria:" for at this time Quintilius Varus was governor of Syria; (Josephus, Ant. l. xvii. c. 5. § 2.) and this enrolment, which was probably made with a view of levying a tax, (Ant. l. xviii. c. ix. § 1—3 was not put in force till Cyrenius was made president, about eleven years afterwards. (Ant. l. xviii. c. iv. Tacitus, l. iii. 1, 8.)]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. His own city.—That is, the city to which his family belonged. This was Bethlehem, where Joseph had formerly a paternal inheritance, which, since the captivity had probably been lost.

7 And she [b] brought forth her first-born son, and wrapt him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

8 ¶ And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping [c] watch over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

11 For unto you [d] is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel [e] a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth [f] peace, good will toward men.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the [g] shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

lehem of Judah, is relieved by the glory of the Lord shining round about it. That babe, neglected, unknown, despised, outcast of men, is declared by the concurring testimony of patriarchs and prophets, of angels and men, by the shaking of the heavens and the earth, of the sea and the dry land, to be 'the Son of the Highest.' His parentage, his name, the time and place of his birth, the condition of his infant hours, have all the seal of heaven upon them. For what did Isaiah prophesy, Alexander conquer, and Augustus give laws, but to point out to the world the instant, the spot, the descent, the estate, in which the Son of God assumed our nature, in order to enter on the work of our redemption."—(Dr. H. Hunter's Sac. Biog. vol. vii. Lect. 6.)

Humble as was, however, the situation in which our incarnate Saviour first appeared to men, his birth was attended with honours, which neither Alexander, nor Pompey, nor Cæsar, could ever boast. Heraldic angels publish the event to simple shepherds, watching in the fields of Bethlehem, while a chorus of attending spirits from the opening skies celebrate the event, as affording "Glory to God in the Highest, peace on earth, and good will to men!" O what sight, or what music, was there in the court of Herod, or of Cæsar, that could be compared to this? God has, in general, afforded the highest pleasures to the simplest classes of society. Cowper says—

"God made the country, and man made the town."

Kings devote themselves to pleasure; but what is the splendour of a drawing-room, to that of the rising or the setting sun? What is the music of military or festive bands to the matins of the lark, or the vespers of the nightingale? Yet what are these to the joys and glories of the celestial world? Truly, "eye hath not seen, neither hath ear heard, what God hath reserved for them that love him."

The chorus of "the heavenly host" contains the great object and design of human redemption, namely, to render glory to the divine perfections, and to relieve mankind from sin and misery: a most fruitful theme for human contemplation, had we the opportunity to enlarge.

We can only add, that hearing of the great event of the incarnation, the shepherds acted, as all men should do, they came speedily to examine the truth of the report; and when they were satisfied, they were anxious to inform others. We can never depend upon the reality of that faith which is not founded in evidence, or which has no regard to its propagation. These shepherds no sooner found the truth of these joyful tidings, than they made them known abroad; at the same time, they praised God for all that they had seen and heard.

Ver. 21—39. The circumcision of Jesus; the purification of Mary, and the song of Simeon.—The law of circumcision is explained in our remarks on its institution, (Gen. xvii. 1—14.) It may seem strange, indeed, that he who was "holy, harmless, and undefiled," should conform to a ceremony which seems to imply the necessity of purification. It must be considered, however, that circumcision was a seal of God's covenant with Abraham, and of the righteousness of faith; it was therefore proper that he, whose office it was to "fulfil all righteousness," should, on this account, conform to this most instructive ceremony; and though in himself pure, he needed not purification, yet there could be no more impropriety in his conforming to circumcision than to baptism, which had nearly the same symbolical meaning. The name Jesus, which had been previously assigned to the Son of God, signified not only that he should be a Saviour, but also a divine one, as we have already observed. (See note on Mat. i. 21.)

The sacrifice of purification here named, was that allowed only to the poorest class, (Levit. xii. 8,) and shows how low he condescended, who, "being rich, for our sakes became poor," insomuch that the heir of David's throne could not reach the price of a lamb for sacrifice. But it is our mercy that the God of Israel accepts our offerings, "according to that which a man hath, and not that which he hath not." (2 Cor. viii. 12.)

We are now introduced to a venerable person, whose piety and virtues were so matured, that he was "like a shock of corn" fully ripe, and ready to be gathered into heaven's garner, (Job v. 26;) but he was "waiting for the consolation of Israel," it having been revealed to him "that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord's Christ."

The incarnation of the Son of God had been successively predicted from age to age, ever since the fall; and as the family of Abraham had been often scattered by adverse circumstances into every nation under heaven, a rumour of these

Ver. 7. Her first-born son.—So Campbell; but Doddridge renders it, "her son, the first-born," conceiving that the expression is emphatic, and may allude to Christ's being the "first-born of every creature." Col. i. 15.—And laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn.—The eastern inns, commonly called Caravanserais, are very large buildings, with domes, and a fountain in the centre, for the use of caravans; the benefits of which are allowed to all travellers, but afford only a lodging place for themselves and cattle, without either food or bedding: but it is probable these Caravanserais are not of so high antiquity as the birth of Christ. The kataluma, inn, or "house allotted to strangers," (as Campbell renders it,) as belonging to a small country town, was probably of a humbler character, and affording room for but few families, was soon filled by the first comers; and others, as Joseph and Mary, were obliged to take shelter in the out-buildings, intended for the cattle of travellers, but which we should hope might be cleared for them, as we read nothing in the Scriptures of their being herded with the cattle; indeed, we may safely infer the contrary, from the Holy Babe being laid in the crib, or manger. There is a tradition mentioned by Justin Martyr, in the middle of the second century, that this stable was a natural cave, (and with such Judea abounded,) adjacent to the inn; but that it was the same as now is shown for such, is uncertain, and perhaps unlikely.

Ver. 8. Keeping watch over their flock by night.—Campbell, 'Who tended their flock by turns through the night watches;" Doddridge literally, "keeping the watches of the night." Dr. Lardner (with whom agrees Dr. Shaw, the traveller) draws from this passage two powerful arguments in favour of the hypothesis which places the birth of our Lord about the autumnal equinox. 1. The latter end of December was by no means an eligible time for making an enrolment, as it would be most inconvenient for travelling; neither, 2. Is it likely that shepherds would be then watching their flocks in the open fields, but both circumstances would well agree with September.

Ver. 24. A pair of turtle-doves.—[One was for a burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering. The rich were required to bring a lamb: but the poor and middling classes were required to bring either two turtle-doves or two 25 ¶ And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and [l] devout, waiting for the consolation [m] of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him.

26 And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see [n] death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ.

27 And he came by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law,

28 Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,

29 Lord, now [o] lettest thou thy servant depart in [p] peace, according to thy word:

30 For mine eyes have seen [q] thy salvation,

31 Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

32 A light to lighten the [r] Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.

33 And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him.

34 And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall [s] and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken [t] against;

35 (Yea, a sword [u] shall pierce through thy own soul also,) that [v] the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.

36 ¶ And there was one Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser: she was of a great age, and had lived with a husband seven years from her virginity;

37 And she was a widow of about fourscore and four years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers [w] night and day.

38 And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that [x] looked for redemption in [y] Jerusalem.

39 ¶ And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

40 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled [z] with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him.

41 ¶ Now his parents went to Jerusalem every [a] year at the feast of the passover.

42 And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast.

43 And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they, supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him.

46 And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.

47 And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding [b] and answers.

48 And when they saw him, they were predictions had been mixed into their traditions, till it reached even to the capital of the Roman empire, and of the globe; and a general expectation was excited, that some illustrious personage from the East would assume the government of the world. The nature of this new empire was not, however, at all understood, even by the Jews themselves, among whom it originated; a pious few only excepted, who, like Simeon and Anna, "looked for the consolation of Israel." The generality of the Jews, no less than the Gentiles themselves, confined their ideas to that of some Hebrew Alexander, (if we may use such a term,) who, like him of Greece, should overrun the world with his armies, and establish a Jewish empire far more extensive than that of Solomon.

But to return to Simeon: He was led by the Spirit into the temple; and no sooner was the Holy Child there presented by his parents, than he clasped him in his arms, blessed God for his salvation, and prayed for dismission to his rest.

The Song of Simeon has an evident allusion to a prophecy of Isaiah, (ch. lx. 1—3,) which has been already considered, and here requires no farther observation: but what is afterwards addressed to Joseph and Mary, is somewhat obscure, and requires elucidation. Simeon says, "This child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel;" that is, as we understand it, for the fall of some and the support of others. To some, he is the rock of salvation, on which all their hopes are built; to others, who refuse to build their hopes upon him, he is "a rock of offence, and a stone of stumbling," as predicted by the Psalmist. (See Matt. xxi. 42.) It is added, "A sign that shall be spoken against." Doddridge thinks that the term "sign" is used in allusion to a mark, or butt, to shoot at: "Christ crucified" was the butt at which Pagan wit long shot its arrows, as does infidel wit to the present day. "Christ crucified" is, however, the only hope and the only consolation of believers. This doctrine is, indeed, the test of true Christianity, and thereby "the thoughts of many hearts are revealed." There is much in Christianity that will gain the admiration of all friends to the morals and happiness of society; but "Christ crucified" is the "stumbling stone" which God has "laid in Zion," and which provokes and discovers the hostility of every unrenewed heart. It is added, in a parenthesis addressed to the virgin mother, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also;" and this it did in many instances, but especially when she witnessed the painful scene of the crucifixion. (See John xix. 26, 27.)

Anna, a venerable propheteess, probably famed, like Huldah, for wisdom as well as piety, (see 2 Kings xxii. 14,) and who had scarcely been absent from the temple worship since her widowhood, joined in praising God for his salvation; and with all joy of heart spake of the new-born Saviour "to all them that looked for salvation in Israel."

Ver. 40—52. Jesus found conversing with the doctors in the temple.—Those acquainted with the Eastern method of travelling in large parties, called Caravans, often consisting of many hundred persons, with various beasts of burden, from camels down to asses, will easily perceive it were no easy matter to miss an individual; or that, if missed, it was very natural to expect he might be with some other part of the caravan, which often extended to no inconsiderable distance. Jesus, however, had tarried at Jerusalem, probably with Simeon or Anna, to look into the state of religion and sacred literature at the capital, by attending those schools of knowledge which were open to inquirers. "I have often (says Dr. Doddridge) thought it a great injury to the character of our blessed Redeemer, to represent this story, whether in pictures or words, as if Christ, at this tender age, went up into the seats of the doctors, and there disputed with them. Not one word is said of disputing by the Evangelist; but only of his asking some questions and answering others, which was a very usual thing in these as-young pigeons. This is a proof of the comparative poverty of Joseph and Mary; and shows that this event occurred before the offering of the Magi, which would have enabled them to offer a lamb.]—Bagster.

Ver. 25. The consolation of Israel.—A common name for the Messiah. Gill.

Ver. 26. Should not see death.—[To see death, is a Hebraism for to die. Ps. lxxxix. 49.]—Bagster.

Ver. 37. Fourscore and four years—That is, of her life. Grotius. But Doddridge refers it to the period of her widowhood, in which case she must be above a century old.

Ver. 38. That looked for redemption, &c.—i. e. who expected the coming of the Messiah.

Ver. 39. And when.—Campbell, "After" they had performed, &c.—To their own city Nazareth.—By comparing Mat. ii. it will be seen that Luke has omitted the whole narrative of the Magi, and the flight into Egypt, which probably occupied two or three years at least: indeed, we have no farther account of Jesus till his attending the passover, ver. 22.—[Nazareth, now Nassera, was a small town of Zebulun, in Lower Galilee, according to Eusebius, fifteen miles east of Legio, near mount Tabor, and, according to D'Arvieux, about eight leagues, or according to Maundrell, seven hours, or about twenty miles south-east of Acre. It is one of the principal towns of the pashalic of Acre, containing a population of about 3000 souls of whom 500 are Turks, the remainder being Christians. It is delightfully situated on elevated ground, in a valley, encompassed by mountains.]—Bagster.

Ver. 40. Strong in spirit.—See chap. i. 80.—And the grace of God was upon him.—In other words, "filled with the Holy Ghost," meaning the spirit of wisdom and devotion; for it does not appear that the miraculous gifts of the Spirit were bestowed on the man Christ Jesus until his baptism, ch. iv. 1.

Ver. 41. His parents went.—The law obliged only the males to attend the great feasts, (Exod xxiii 17,) yet females were not forbidden to attend.

Ver. 42. And when he was twelve years old.—This is understood to be the period at which youth were required to attend the temple worship, and from which period they were brought under the yoke of the law, and were denominated "sons of the covenant." Wotton and Lightfoot.

Ver. 44. Went a day's journey—That is, before they missed him: then they inquired among the party with whom they travelled, which probably was numerous, and on the third day, returning to the city, found him in the temple, ver. 46.

Ver. 46. After three days.—That this phrase was to the Jews equivalent to "on the third day," is evident from Mat. xxvii. 64, and note.

Ver. 48. And when they saw him—That is, his parents, they also were amazed. It is observable that Mary here speaks, to her son Jesus, of Joseph as his father; which he was, both legally and in courtesy, though not in fact amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing.

49 And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about [e] my Father's business?

50 And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them.

51 ¶ And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but his mother kept [d] all these sayings in her heart.

52 And Jesus increased [e] in wisdom and [f] stature, and in favour with God and man.

3 And [b] he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance [c] for the remission of sins;

semblies, and indeed the very end of them..... And if he were with others at the feet of these teachers, (where learners generally sat, Acts xxii. 2,) he might be said to be in the midst of them, as they sat on benches of a semicircular form, raised above their auditors and disciples." Thus without ostentation, or the assumption of premature authority, he might, speaking of him as a child, both derive the information he required, and at the same time excite the highest admiration of his disposition and talents; for "all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers."

Joseph and Mary, though accustomed to hear his wisdom, were in this case no less astonished than the others. His mother, however, seems somewhat hurt at his conduct, as if savouring of unkindness; and Jesus, in his reply, gently reproves her, as inattentive to the divine revelation with which she had been favoured. 'Seek me!' as if he had said, 'then why not seek me in the house of my heavenly Father, and engaged in his concerns?'

Jesus, however, was not insensible to the obligations of filial duty, or to the claims of maternal love. He went down with them from Jerusalem to Nazareth; from the metropolis to a country village; from the seat of learning to his father's workshop. O how full of important instruction is this simple fact! And how worthy the study and imitation of the young, and indeed of all!

1. Let us not prefer inclination to duty. The heart of Jesus was in his Father's house; but the time for entering on his public ministry was not yet come. Every period, as well as every station of life, has its duties; and the active and the contemplative may assist each other. It is neither impossible, nor unlikely, that the athletic exercises of a carpenter, might prepare our Saviour to support the excessive fatigue which he afterwards endured in his labours and his travels; and if we might speak our humble opinion, we are disposed to think that many precious lives are wasted by a too delicate education in early life. The life of a laborious preacher, and especially of an itinerant or missionary, might often be rendered longer, and much more useful, by a different course of training.

2. In preferring the duties of a studious and contemplative life, let us not, therefore, neglect our active duties. It is not generally considered, how much study may be relieved by benevolence. We have known a clergyman who, when fatigued with reading or study, used to run and visit his poor parishioners; and who has been met in the public streets of a large town, with a loaf of bread under each arm, running to the prison. Such might incur the sneer and ridicule of the polite and the fashionable; but "the blessing of him that is ready to perish" would come upon him. Had human wisdom been consulted on the education of the Messiah, what a different course would have been prescribed! A long period would have been devoted to the mysteries and traditions of the Pharisees and Scribes. And if Pagan wisdom had been suffered to offer a suggestion, preceptors would have been recommended from all the schools of Greece and Rome. But this was not God's method of educating his own Son.

Commentators have remarked, that in this chapter was the last mention of Joseph, the husband of Mary, except only in the genealogy of Jesus. He was, indeed, "a just man," but kind hearted also; for when he suspected the virtue of his espoused wife, he was willing to "put her away privily;" wishing to put the mildest construction on her conduct, and to avoid reproach, either upon her family, or upon her ancestors. (Matt. i. 19.) And immediately as that suspicion was removed, we hear nothing more of him, but kindness and affection; for from the birth of Jesus till he was twelve years old, Joseph took her constantly with him to the passover, and probably afterwards, though the law did not require it. After that period we read that Jesus was subject to his parents, and resided with them: but from Joseph being no more mentioned, it is supposed that he lived but a few years after this; which is the more probable, from the tradition that he was considerably older than Mary, had been previously married, and probably had children by a former wife; though this is by no means certain.

CHAP. III. The mission of John the Baptist.—We have already noticed the predictions of Isaiah relative to John the Baptist, and shall here confine ourselves to the matter and character of John's preaching. We have seen that he was educated in solitude in the desert, without any of the polish of refined society. In comparing solitude with society, Bishop Taylor remarks, "In solitude a man may go to heaven by the way of prayer and devotion; but in society he carries others with him, by the way of mercy and charity. In solitude there are fewer temptations, but then there is likewise the exercise of fewer virtues. Solitude is a good school, and the world is the best theatre. The institution is best there, the practice here. The wilderness hath the advantage of discipline, but society furnishes the opportunities of perfection." So it is observed, by the same writer, of our Lord himself: "It was in solitude that he kept his vigils; the desert places heard him; in the wilderness he vanquished Satan; upon a mountain, apart, he was transfigured," &c., but it was among the multitude that he taught and performed his miracles. So it was with John; he was educated in the solitude of deserts and wildernesses; but to fulfil his ministry, came into the population of the open country, which, though solitary in comparison of Jerusalem, was populous compared to the wilds in which he had been brought up.

The Baptist, till this time, that is, about 30 years, had lived a life of mortification as well as solitude, alike unknown to the CHAP. III. Ver. 1. In the fifteenth year of Tiberius.—There is doubtless some difficulty in reconciling this with the Roman history. Lardner has considered the various solutions offered, at considerable length; and Doddridge, having reviewed his arguments, agrees with him that Christ was born in September, the year of Rome 749, (Julian Period 4709,) and reckons these 15 years, not from the death of Augustus, but from Tiberius being received into the government three years before, which brings John's entrance on his mission to the spring of 779; and supposing Jesus baptized about a year after, he would then be but a few months over 30 years of age, as Lardner calculates.——Pontius Pilate being governor (or procurator) of Judea.—Herod the Great, as we have seen, Mat. ii. 19, 22, dying soon after Christ was born, was succeeded by his son Archelaus but he, being charged with various crimes, was deprived and banished, and thus Judea reduced to a Roman province, though Herod Antipas and Philip, still retained Tetrarchies (or quarterings) of the Jewish monarchy.——Iturea—[Was a province of Syria east of Jordan, now called Djedour, according to Burckhardt, and comprising all the flat country south of Djebel Kessoue as far as Nowa, east of Djebel el Sheikh or mount Hermon, and west of the Hadj road. Trachonitis, according to Strabo and Ptolemy, comprehended all the uneven country on the east of Auranitis, now Haouran, from near Damascus to Bozra, now called El Ledja and Djebel Haouran. Abilene was a district in the valley of Lebanon, so called from Abila its chief town, 18 miles N. of Damascus, according to Antoninus.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Annas and Caiaphas being high priests:—Strictly, there could be but one high priest; but either Annas, having been high priest, still retained the title by courtesy; or Caiaphas was high priest, and Annas his deputy, or Sagan, but placed first (according to Selden) on account of his secular office as prince of the Sanhedrim.

world, and unacquainted with it. But he claims the character of a prophet, under sanction of the predictions both of Isaiah and Malachi. His object is, however, not to establish a new sect, or to form a party for himself. He is merely the herald of another; he comes to prepare the way of Messiah, and his character is every way calculated to attract notice. Israel had been long without an oracle, or a prophet; his known sanctity, his austere manners, his independent mind, his energetic language, his dauntless courage; all combine to excite attention, and even admiration, and multitudes throng around him. His report reaches the metropolis. It draws Scribes and Pharisees from the temple, publicans (or tax-collectors) from the receipt of custom, and even soldiers from the fort. Let us hear him!

His style of address to the Pharisees and Sadducees evidently shows that he considered them in the same light as his Master did; namely, for the most part, as hypocrites and spies, who, under the pretence of penitence, had come to ensnare, and perhaps inform against him: yet even to these he opens the door of mercy, and warns them against the danger of their condition. This he does in language which seems to indicate his former occupation as a woodman, "the axe is now laid to the root of the trees; the patience of the Almighty now only suspends the judgments, which (if unrepented of) must shortly fall upon you:" and so it did, in a few years afterwards, because they continued impenitent and barren. To understand the drift of John's discourses, we must enter fully into the character of his hearers. Both Pharisees and Sadducees confined themselves generally to the externals of religion, its rites and ceremonies; and in such case as little attention is paid to pure morality, as to genuine piety: the love of God and their neighbour are equally neglected. It is probable that some of John's hearers were richly dressed, and had at home more clothing than they could wear; while at the same time the clothing of others who attended on his preaching was deficient, both as to purposes of decency and convenience. Some were sleek and well fed, others lean and hungry. Now, says the prophet of the wilderness, let him "that hath two coats impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." And upon this he probably insisted, as one qualification for his baptism.

But here come the Publicans! a set of men (says Bp. Horne) whose employment rendered them odious, as it often tempted them to court the favour of those who employed them, or to gratify their own avarice in fleecing the people. These demanded, "And what shall we do?" To the extortioners he preaches justice, as to the voluptuous he had preached charity: "Exact no more than is appointed you." This, in itself, is not the gospel; and ministers are often reproached for preaching in this strain. Indeed, if this be all their theme, they are not ministers of the New Covenant. But as there is no true faith without good works, so is there no true gospel without morality, both rigid and benevolent. Such is the doctrine of Jesus and his apostles; and no less of Paul than of James and John, as we shall show hereafter.

But what says the Baptist to the soldiers who demanded of Ver. 14. Do violence to no man.—Doddridge, "Terrify no man." —And be content with your wages.—It is well known that soldiers often mutinied on this ground. And those who were the most ready tools to oppress others, were the most sturdy in resisting oppression, and even a just subordination to the higher powers.—[Soldiers here mean men actually under arms, or marching to battle. Now, as we learn from Josephus that Herod was at this time engaged in war with Aretas, a king of Arabia, Michaelis concludes, that these military men were a part of Herod's army, then on its march from Galilee, which must of necessity have passed through the country where John was baptizing. See on Ma. vi. 27.]—Bogster.

Ver. 16. He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire.—Here is an evident allusion to the pouring down of the Holy Spirt upon the believers on the day of Pentecost. See Acts ii. 3 This, as many think, proves that the term baptism is at least not always used for immersion; but, sometimes at least, for effusion, or pouring down. But on this we speak with tenderness, as our object is to promote Christian harmony and affection; not controversy on the non-essentials of religion.

Ver. 18. He preached unto the people.—This version is defective; Lardner remarks, the words may be rendered, "He evangelized (or preached the gospel) to the people." Campbell, "He published the good tidings (or gospel) to the people."

Ver. 21. Now when all the people were baptized—That is, great numbers of them.

Ver. 22. In a bodily shape.—Doddridge, "In a corporeal form:" that it was in the form of a dove, however, many doubt. Dr. Daniel Scott supposes it to have been a lambent flame, with a hovering motion, but the dove seems so fine an emblem of the Holy Spirit, that we see no more exception to this form than that of a tongue of fire, Acts ii 3.

Ver. 23. And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age.—Doddridge, "And Jesus when beginning (his ministry) was about thirty years old;" so Lardner. But Campbell (following Grotius and others) reads, "Now Jesus was himself about thirty years in subjugation;" namely, to his parents. ——Being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph.—Joseph being his mother's espoused husband, it was of course supposed by the world, that Joseph must be his father; but this expression strongly implies the contrary.—[The real father of Joseph was Jacob, (Mat. i. 16;) but having married the daughter of Heli, and being perhaps adopted by him, he was called his son, and as such was entered in the public registers; Mary not being mentioned, because the Hebrews never permitted the name of a woman to enter their genealogical tables, but inserted her husband as the son of him who was, in reality, but his father-in-law. Hence, it appears that St. Matthew, who wrote principally for the Jews, traces the pedigree of Jesus Christ from Abraham, through whom the promise was given to the Jews, to David, and from David, through the line of Solomon, to Jacob the father of Joseph, the reputed, or legal father of Christ; and that St. Luke, who wrote for the Gentiles, extends his genealogy upwards from Heli the father of Mary, through the line of Nathan, to David, and from David to Abraham, and from Abraham to Adam, who was the immediate "son of God" by creation, and to whom the promise of the Saviour was given in behalf of himself and all his posterity. The two branches of descent from David, by Solomon and Nathan, being thus united in the persons of Mary and Joseph, Jesus the son of Mary re-united in himself all the blood, privileges, and rights, of the whole family of David, in consequence of

CHAPTER IV.

1 The temptation and fasting of Christ. 13 He overcometh the devil: 14 beginneth to preach. 16 The people of Nazareth admire his gracious words. 33 He cureth one possessed of a devil, 38 Peter's mother-in-law, 40 and divers other sick persons. 41 The devils acknowledge Christ, and are reproved for it. 43 He preacheth through the cities.

AND [a] Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2 Being forty days tempted of the devil. And [b] in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3 And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And the devil, taking him up into a high mountain, showed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for [d] that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7 If thou therefore wilt [e] worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for [f] it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9 And he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

10 For it is written, He [g] shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus answering said unto him, It is said, Thou [h] shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And when the devil had ended all the [i] temptation, he departed from him for a season.

14 ¶ And Jesus [j] returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to [k] Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he [l] went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, him the same question—"And what shall we do?" "Do violence, (or injury,") he says, "to no man; put no man in fear or terror of his life; neither accuse any falsely." By injury and false accusation, we cannot understand what may be called the duties, but rather the abuses of the military profession: for he must mean unauthorized violence, or private injuries, in order to be coupled with false accusation, which is certainly no part of military duty. If it be asked what soldiers these could be? we apprehend not Roman or Pagan soldiers; or, as Dr. Doddridge remarks, John would surely have cautioned them against idolatry; but most probably they were Jewish soldiers of Galilee, under Herod Antipas, the Tetrarch, who employed such as his military executioners; (Mark vi. 27:) or, perhaps Archelaus, who had lately been deposed for his cruelty and oppression. The military are most convenient tools for arbitrary princes.

As to war, God forbid we should be its advocates, except only in cases of obvious justice, and necessary self-defence. We regard it in the same light with certain desperate remedies, which are only recurred to in dangers the most alarming.

John's style of preaching, though not accompanied with miracles, was so weighty and authoritative, that the people were ready to hesitate whether, instead of being a forerunner, he were not himself the Christ. An impostor or a partizan would have cherished such a prejudice; but he, without hesitation, directed them to his Master, whose shoe-latchets, as a disciple, he professed himself unworthy to unloose.

CHAP. IV. Jesus returns, and preaches in the synagogue of Nazareth.—The public reading of the Scriptures was certainly of divine appointment, and the practice of expounding them may be traced up to the time of Ezra. (Neh. viii. 8.) In later times, competent laymen were invited to this office. According to Dr. Gill, seven persons read every sabbath day, namely, a priest, a Levite, and five Israelites of other tribes. On these occasions the Chazan, or minister, delivered the sacred book to the person who stood up to read, and after reading a suitable portion, he returned the book; and if he proposed to expound or preach, he sat down in the desk wherein he read, as our Lord did in this instance. The people understood this, and immediately on our Lord being seated, "the eyes of all were fastened on him." At first the people were all attention and admiration. They "bare witness" to his ability as a teacher, and even "wondered at the words of grace" which proceeded from his lips; by which phrase we understand, not only his graceful elocution, but also the sweet and savoury truths which he delivered; and they exclaimed, "Is not this the son of Joseph?" adding, if not on this, upon another occasion, "Whence hath this man this wisdom?" (Matt. xiii. 54.) Popularity is not always, however, a proof of success or usefulness. When the address is pleasing, and the truth delivered palatable, the hearers will admire and commend: but our Lord, who could read the heart, knew that among his hearers were many not prepared to receive all the truths that he was commissioned to deliver; many who, pleased as they might appear, were questioning in their hearts his divine authority, and ready to call for miracles to gratify their curiosity, rather than their faith, which, indeed, seems to have been very low; for they brought no sick, no lame, no blind, to receive healing, as had been the case elsewhere. He therefore addresses them on the sovereignty of God's mercy, reminding them that which he is emphatically called "The son of David."]—Bagster. What may have thrown some considerable difficulty in the way of reconciling these genealogies, is the Hebrew law, which obliged men, in certain cases, to marry the widows of their deceased brothers, (see Deut. xxv. 5, &c.) to whom their children are therefore reckoned.

Ver. 36. Which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad, &c.—This Cainan is not in the Hebrew genealogy, (Ge. xi. 12,) but is found in the LXX. Whether it was here inserted by Luke, or by some copyist, is not of great importance, since the only question arising from it is, whether Salah was the son or grandson of Arphaxad.—[It may here be remarked, that though some of the same names occur here, from Nathan downwards, as in Joseph's genealogy, yet there appears no sufficient evidence that the same persons were intended, different persons often bearing the same name.]—Bagster. Persons who wish farther to study these genealogies will find abundant learned discussion in Dr. Clarke's Comments on Luke iii., and in Mr. Prebend. Townsend's New Testament arranged.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 5. In a moment.—Perhaps meaning, "at a glance," or in one view. It is remarkable that this scene from the mountain, which is placed last in Matthew, is here placed second; for which we can give no reason.

Ver. 7. All shall be thine—That is, "All this glory." Campbell.

Ver. 8. Get thee behind me, Satan.—This clause is here wanting, not only in some of the best MSS. but several ancient versions. But it occurs Mat. iv. 10.—Campbell.

Ver. 17. Opened the book.—"Unrolled the book:" the Sacred Writings being anciently (as they are still in the synagogues) written on skins of parchment, and rolled on two rollers, beginning on each end, so that in reading from right to left, they rolled off with the left hand while they rolled on with the right.]—Bagster.

18 The [m] Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the [n] broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering [o] of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are [p] bruised,
19 To preach the acceptable [q] year of the Lord.
20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.
21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.
22 And all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious [r] words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, Is [s] not this Joseph's son?
23 And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in [t] Capernaum, do also here in thy country.
24 And he said, Verily I say unto you, No [u] prophet is accepted in his own country.
25 But I tell you of a truth, [v] many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up [w] three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;
26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.
27 And [x] many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.
28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath,
29 And rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the [y] brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down [z] headlong.
30 But he passing [a] through the midst of them went his way,
31 And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath days.

32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for his word was with [b] power.
33 ¶ And [c] in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice,
34 Saying, [d] Let us alone; what [e] have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? [f] I know thee who thou art; the [g] Holy One of God.

44 And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

the divine favour could neither be bought nor claimed; that God bestows his blessings according to his own good pleasure. Thus Elijah is sent to the widow of Sarepta, and Elisha to Naaman the Syrian, though doubtless there were widows and lepers enough in Israel. Though God refuses mercy to none who supplicate it in sincerity, he does not hold himself bound to bestow it upon any. This doctrine, as often has been the case, kindled instantly the evil passions of the multitude; and even those who but a few minutes before had been absorbed in admiration, now arise in great wrath, drag him toward the first precipice they could find, to cast him down and stone him: But he passed safely "through the midst of them." It has been supposed that, as upon another occasion, (chap. xxiv. 16,) their "eyes were holden, that they should not know him;" but we are not sure this was a miracle, for we have heard of persons escaping in a tumult, merely through the noise and confusion of their enemies; and we are not aware of any instance, in which Jesus wrought a miracle for either his own rescue or supply. His miracles were all (we believe) on the behalf of others. However, Jesus escaped their malice for the present, and returned to Capernaum, where he wrought a signal miracle, which, as it has been already considered, may be here passed over. There his word was not only admired, but also attended "with power," namely, with that power of the Holy Spirit which alone can give it success; for even miracles are in vain without it.

"If the ministers of Christ be persecuted from one place and driven to another, let them still boldly proceed in declaring to 'all men every where' the way of salvation. The word which they speak, being attended with the power of their Lord, will be made effectual to convince, alarm, and convert some of their hearers. No case can be desperate if Jesus see good to work; even those in their assemblies, who are most evidently possessed of 'unclean spirits,' may be delivered from them, and made illustrious monuments of his grace and power: and though the devil may create great distress, to such as Christ is rescuing from his dominion, he cannot do them any real harm. We ought therefore to spread abroad the fame of the Saviour in every place; to beseech him for those who are diseased in body or mind; and to use our in-

Ver. 29. The brow (margin, "edge") of the hill whereon their city was built.—But modern travellers tell us that Nazareth was built in a valley, surrounded by hills. So Dr. Richardson compares it to a delightful basin of earth, surrounded by fifteen mountains. The village, he says, stands on an elevated situation, on the west side of the valley. Now it appears by Godwyn that the law required only an eminence of two cubits high, from which the person stoned must be thrown down, and such an eminence may be found almost any where. Perhaps the original term (ophrus) may be misunderstood. Polybius uses it for the "bank of a river," which is generally sloping. (See Jones's Lex.) The human eye-brow, which seems the origin of the term, is not on the top of the forehead, but on the rise; perhaps, therefore, the true meaning may be, that the city was built on the slope of the hill, from the steepest part of which they meant to precipitate our Lord. What is now called the Mount of Precipitation is, however, full half a league from the village, and difficult of access, which is therefore very unlikely to be the place to which the Jews meant to drag our Saviour.

Ver. 33. A spirit of an unclean devil.—That is, a demon, who was an unclean spirit: this seems utterly inconsistent with the idea of these demons being diseases.

Ver. 37. The fame, &c.—[The sound; a very elegant metaphor, says Dr. Adam Clarke. The people are represented as struck with astonishment, and the sound goes out through all the coasts; in allusion to the propagation of sound by a smart stroke upon any substance.]—Bagster.

Ver. 42. When it was day.—Mark says, "A great while before day," which may refer to his rising at the first dawn; and when the day advanced, but probably before sunrise, he went forth, &c.

Ver. 44. Galilee.—[Many of the Jewish traditions, in accordance with Is. ix. 1, 2, assert that Galilee was the place where the Messiah should first appear. Thus also Is. ii. 19, "When he shall arise to smite terribly the earth," is expounded in the book Zohar, as referring to the Messiah. When he shall arise, and shall be revealed in the land of Galilee." See Schoettgen.] -Bagster

CHAPTER V.

Christ teacheth the people out of Peter's ship: 4 in a miraculous taking of fishes, 10 with how great a care and love he calleth sinners to repentance. 12 The leper, 16 pray- 17 the weakness 18 healeth, one sick of the palsy. 27 Calleth Matthew the 29 feasteth 30 excuseth himself 33 fasting 36 the parable of a new 37 forefigheth the casting 39 of the new. The apostles called his scribe 36 and Pharisees faint-hearted and weak disciples to 6 bottles and worn garments.

AND [a] it came to pass, that, as the people pressed upon him to hear the word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennesaret,

2 And saw two ships standing by the lake: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing their nets.

3 And he entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land. And he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4 ¶ Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, [b] Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon answering said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken [c] nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net.

6 And [d] when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake.

7 And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help [e] them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

8 When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down [f] at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord.

9 For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes [g] which they had taken:

10 And so was also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook [h] all, and followed him.

12 ¶ And [i] it came to pass, when he was in a certain city, behold a man full of leprosy: who seeing Jesus fell on his face, and besought him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will: be [j] thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to tell no man: but go, and show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses [k] commanded, for a testimony unto them.

15 But so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and [l] great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16 ¶ And [m] he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

17 ¶ And it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching, that [n] there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jerusalem: and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

18 [o] And behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the house-top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch into the midst before Jesus.

20 And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

fluence in bringing sinners to him, that his powerful hands may be laid upon them for their healing. Thus relying on his power, truth, and love, for ourselves, and those who are more immediately connected with us, we should seek to promote the preaching of his 'gospel in other cities also,' and in other regions, even to the ends of the earth."—T. Scott.

CHAP. V. Christ preaches from a ship, and then orders Simon to launch out into the sea.—From finding our Lord so frequently on the sea, we may reprove the silly weakness of those who dare not venture even upon a river. It is true there are many drowned at sea; but there are far more who die on land. We are every where exposed to danger and to death; but we should remember, that we are every where under the care of the same guardian providence; and to excite our confidence and gratitude, the few accidents we suffer should be compared with the many which we escape. We should never neglect the calls of Providence from the suspicion that we may not succeed. Peter had been toiling all night without success, yet when Jesus gives the command, Peter tries again. "Nevertheless (says he) at thy command I will let down the net;" and his obedience was well rewarded. Labour is ours; success is God's. Yet even success may produce danger: "the ships began to sink." Many a tradesman has been ruined by prosperity in business. He has succeeded in getting money, and made shipwreck of his faith. He has gained the world, and lost his soul! Many a preacher has been ruined by popularity. He has been admired and praised, till his devotion has cooled, his zeal become languid, and even his ministerial success destroyed. They alone are well kept whom God keepeth.

But there is something in Peter's conduct that requires an explanation. Jesus is a Saviour, and a sense of sin should lead us to him, and not drive us from him. Shall the sick man say to the physician, "Depart from me, for I am sick?" There is more inconsistency in our conduct as sinners, than in any other part of human life. But what can Peter mean by requesting the Lord to depart from him? It is evident that a sense of Christ's divinity, and his own unbelief, led him to consider himself as utterly unworthy of his presence. And so did the sons of Zebedee; and who, indeed, does not, who has any true knowledge of God, or of himself?" The answer of Christ speaks always the language of encouragement to those who have been previously humbled: "Fear not; follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." (Comp. Matt. iv. 19.) Such, indeed, they were, and the book of Acts is the record of their success; but at the day of judgment alone can it be developed fully. Then will idleness and hypocrisy be exposed, then will the humblest services be brought to light, and not "a cup of cold water," charitably given, pass unrewarded. (Matt. xxv. 31, &c.)

"In tracing the example of our divine Saviour, we find that he interchanged public services and retired devotion; and that the sole business of his life was to glorify God by doing good to men, and to commune with his Father. Thus our several duties should in succession occupy our time; and piety and charity should be connected in our habitual and persevering conduct. A life thus spent will best manifest our faith in Christ, and evince that he has both pardoned our sins and healed our souls.

"Let all, who would prosper in the divine life, attend chief-

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. And it came to pass.—No particular day or time is here pointed out; but one day, while he was preaching.—The lake of Gennesaret—Called also "the sea of Galilee," and "of Tiberias;" called also in the Old Testament, "the Sea of Cinnereth." Num. xxxiv. 11. Jos. xii. 3.

Ver. 2. Two ships.—Evidently fishing-barks.—Standing—That is, aground; not afloat.

Ver. 3. Thrust out a little.—So that the people on land might hear, without incommoding him.—Sat down, &c.—[This account of the calling of Peter and Andrew, James and John, will be found, as Dr. Townson observes, on a near inspection, to tally marvellously with the preceding ones of Matthew and Mark; and is one of the evidences, that the Evangelists vary only in the number or choice of circumstances, and write from the same idea of the fact which they lay before us. Though St. Matthew and Mark do not exactly tell us, that St. Peter was in the vessel when he was called by Christ, they signify as much in saying that he was casting a net into the sea; and though only St. Luke informs us that James and John assisted Peter in landing the fish, yet it is implied, for Mark says, that when Christ had gone a little farther, he saw them mending their nets, which had been torn by the weight of fish hauled on shore.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Depart from me, &c.—I am totally unworthy of such manifestations of thy power and glory. See Is. vi. 5.

Ver. 11. They forsook all and followed him.—"They had followed him before, (John i. 43:) but not so as to forsake all. Till now they wrought at their ordinary calling."—Westey.

Ver. 12—17. And it came to pass.—The cure of the leper here mentioned is recorded by Mat. viii. 2, 3; also in Mark i. 40—45.

Ver. 16. Into the wilderness.—Literally, "Into the deserts;" Campbell, "Solitary places."

Ver. 17. And the power of the Lord was present to heal them.—Query, whom? Not the Pharisees and lawyers, surely. We apprehend that part of this passage should be read in a parenthesis, thus: Ver. 15. "Great multitudes came . . . to be healed, (and he withdrew, &c. . . . . And it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching, and there were Pharisees, &c. sitting by . . . . .) and the power of the Lord was (present) to heal them;" viz. the multitudes that came to be healed. So (for substance) Glassius, Doddridge, Campbell, and Boothroyd. It is evident enough, from what follows, that the Pharisees came not to be healed, but to cavil and find fault.

Ver. 18—26. And behold, men brought in a bed, &c.—This is the same narrative as in Mat. ix. 2—8, where we offered some general remarks; and in Mark ii. 3—12.

Ver. 19. They went upon the house-top.—[The plain state of the case seems to have been this: not being able to approach our Lord, because of the crowd, they ascended the flat roof by the outer stairs, and, uncovering the roofing, whether of tiling or thatching, about the place where Jesus sat, they let down the couch by the orifice. In all this there appears no difficulty; and the damage, considering the slight structure and thin roofing of eastern houses, could not have been great.]—Bagster.

21 And the scribes and the Pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this which speaketh blasphemies? Who can forgive [p] sins, but God alone?

22 But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he answering said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?

23 Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?

24 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive sins, (he said unto the sick of the palsy,) I say unto thee, Arise, and [q] take up thy couch, and go unto thy house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

26 And they were all amazed, [r] and they glorified God, and [s] were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

27 ¶ And [t] after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named Levi, sitting at the receipt of custom: and he said unto him, Follow me.

28 And he left all, rose up, and followed him.

29 ¶ And Levi made him a great feast in his own house: and [u] there was a great company of publicans and of others that sat down with them.

30 But their scribes and Pharisees murmured against his disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?

31 And Jesus answering said unto them, They that are whole need not a [v] physician; but they that are sick.

32 I came not to call the righteous, but sinners [w] to repentance.

33 ¶ And they said unto him, Why do the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees; but [x] thine eat and drink?

34 And he said unto them, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them?

35 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast [y] in those days.

36 ¶ And [z] he spake also a parable unto them; No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old; if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not [a] with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved.

39 No man also having drunk old wine straightway desireth new: for he saith, The old [b] is better.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ reproveth the Pharisees' blindness about the observation of the sabbath, by scripture, reason, and miracles: 13 chooseth twelve apostles: 17 healeth the diseased: 20 preacheth to his disciples before the people of blessings and curses: 27 how we must love our enemies: 46 and join the obedience of good works to the hearing of the word: lest in the evil day of temptation we fall like a house built upon the face of the earth, without any foundation.

AND [a] it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first, that he went through the corn fields; and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which [b] is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?

3 And Jesus answering them said, Have ye not read so much as this, what [c] David did, when himself was a hungered, and they which were with him;

4 How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shew-bread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful [d] to eat but for the priests alone?

5 And he said unto them, That the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

6 ¶ And [e] it came to pass also on another sabbath, that he entered into the synagogue and taught: and there was a man whose right hand was withered.

7 And the scribes and Pharisees watched him, whether he would heal on the [f] sabbath day; that they might find an accusation against him.

8 But he knew their [g] thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise [h] up, and stand forth in the midst. And he arose and stood forth.

9 Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; Is it lawful on the sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it?

10 And looking [i] round about upon them all, he said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11 And they were filled with madness; and communed [j] one with another what they might do to Jesus.

12 ¶ And [k] it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain [l] to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

ly to the grand essentials of religion: for when externals and circumstantials are magnified above their real importance, censoriousness, bigotry, and divisions, are the invariable consequences. Because humble Christians practise their self-denial, and perform their devotions, in secret, and without ostentation, Pharisees may sometimes be ready to conclude that they neither fast nor pray at all. But every part of our duty has its proper season and proportion, as stated in the Scriptures; and it should have the same in the conduct of our lives: the gracious presence of our Beloved makes a feast to our souls, so long as it is continued to us; but when our sins provoke his departure or his frown, we are called to mourn and fast as well as pray."—T. Scott.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 12—19. Jesus selects his twelve apostles, and instructs them.—We have before remarked the time which Jesus devoted to private and retired prayer, even when his apostles and most intimate disciples were asleep. In this instance, after spending the whole night in devotion, so soon as it was day, instead of retiring to rest, he calls his disciples round him, and chooses the twelve apostles, who are here enumerated. On the parallel text of Matthew, we have offered some general remarks: here we shall be more discriminate.

"The wisdom of our Lord's conduct (says Prebend. Townsend) was eminently displayed in the choice of his apostles: they were generally chosen from the inferior ranks of life; and most of them were fishermen. If the disciples of Christ had been men of rank and distinction, of wealth or eminence; if they had been esteemed for their knowledge, or literature, or political influence, these means might, more or less, have been employed for promoting the kingdom of the Messiah, which nearly all the Jews imagined would be of an earthly nature. The success of the gospel, too, would have been attributed, by its enemies at least, to mere human exertions. Hence Caiaphas inquired with so much solicitude of Christ respecting his disciples, (John xviii. 19,) from whose unpretending life less opposition was made to the first beginnings of Christianity: for no danger could possibly be apprehended from the efforts of such inferior and illiterate individuals. . . . . By this choice, too, all pretence that the gospel was advanced CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—5. And it came to pass, &c.—The same conversation is related more fully by Matthew, chap. xii. 1—8; also in Mark ii. 23—28.

Ver. 1. On the second sabbath after the first.—Campbell, "On the sabbath called) second prime:" this is literal, but the learned commentator confesses the exact meaning to be unknown. Doddridge renders it, "On the first sabbath after the second (day of unleavened bread.") So Lightfoot, Newcome, &c.

Ver. 9. Is it lawful, &c.—Campbell, "What is lawful to do on the sabbath? Good or ill? To save, or to destroy?" So a great many MSS. and printed editions. The change is only in the pointing.

Ver. 11. They were filled with madness.—This is well explained, and in a few words, by Mr. Henry. "They were mad at Christ, mad at the people mad at themselves. Anger is a short madness; malice a long one."

13 And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose [m] twelve, whom also he named apostles;

14 Simon, (whom [n] he also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15 Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes,

16 And Judas [o] the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

17 ¶ And he came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of his disciples, and [p] a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed [q] of their diseases;

18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

19 And the whole multitude sought to touch [r] him: for [s] there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

20 ¶ And [t] he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, Blessed be ye [u] poor: for yours is the kingdom of God.

21 Blessed are ye that hunger [v] now: for ye shall be [w] filled. Blessed are ye that weep [x] now: for ye shall laugh.

22 Blessed are ye, when men shall hate [y] you, and when they shall separate [z] you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake.

23 Rejoice [a] ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner [b] did their fathers unto the prophets.

24 But wo unto you that are [c] rich! for ye have received [d] your consolation.

25 Wo unto you that are [e] full! for ye shall by mere human means was destroyed; and it appeared from the very beginning, that "not many wise, or noble, or mighty, were called."

Simon Peter, who stands at the head of the list, chiefly perhaps for his age, has repeatedly fallen under our notice. His warm and active temper led him, on every occasion, to protrude himself on public notice, occasioned him several severe reproofs, and at length led to the denial of his Master, to which he was probably led by the danger arising from his rash conduct in attacking the high priest's servant. Andrew, Peter's brother, was originally a disciple of John the Baptist, and led to follow Jesus, by his Master pointing to him, and saying, "Behold the Lamb of God!" And he it was who brought Peter himself to Christ. (John i. 35—42.) The James here mentioned (in Gr. Jacobos) was called the Greater, as being the elder, and is coupled with his brother John, both being the sons of Zebedee and Salome. They were also called "Sons of thunder," (Mark iii. 17,) from their hasty temper, which led them to wish to call down lightning on their Master's enemies. (Luke ix. 54.) This James was one of the first martyrs to Christianity, (Acts xii. 1, 2,) but John was the longest lived of all the apostles, and closed the canon of the New Testament. (Acts xii. 1, 2.)

If Bartholomew (i. e. the son of Ptolemy) be the same with Nathaniel, as is generally supposed, we have the history both of him and Philip in John i. 43, &c. One strong argument for this is, that the evangelists who speak of Bartholomew omit Nathaniel; and John, who alone speaks of Nathaniel, omits Bartholomew, and seems to rank Nathaniel with the apostles. (See John xxi. 2.) Matthew, the publican, and Thomas, are well known apostles: the latter, by his incredulity; though he afterwards made an honourable confession of his Lord, John xx. 28. James, the son of Alpheus, called the brother of our Lord, (Gal. i. 19,) was so only in a lax sense, as probably his cousin german. He is commonly called James the Less, (or younger,) and by some of the fathers, Bishop of Jerusalem, where he resided. He was author of the Epistle under his name.

Simon, called Zelotes, was so called to distinguish him from Peter.

Jude (or Judas) surnamed by Matthew Lebbeus and Thaddeus, (ch. x. 3,) was brother to James the Less, and a faithful adherent to our Saviour. He was author of the Epistle under his name: and must always be carefully distinguished from the traitor, who is here last named, as truly unworthy of the name of an apostle. For a sketch of his character, see our remarks on Matt. xxvi. 49; xxvii. 1, &c.

These disciples were doubtless wisely selected, with a view to their various dispositions and talents, though of several of them we know too little, to see the propriety of their selection; but this we know, that much of the stability of society, both civil and religious, depends upon a happy combination of the various characters of its members. But that he who could read the heart, should select such a demon of avarice and hypocrisy as Judas Iscariot, may seem mysterious, as, indeed, are all the ways of God. Judas was perhaps as little suspected by his brethren, as any one of the twelve. So much may be inferred from the repeated hints our Lord gave at the passover to point him out, none of which seem to have been fully understood; for had it been so when Judas went out, (John xiii. 28—30,) it is highly probable that they would not have suffered him to escape. But these things were done that the Scriptures might be fulfilled, and that the divine decree for our salvation might be accomplished. (Acts ii. 23.)

After Jesus had elected his apostles on the mountain, he came down into the plain, and performed many miracles of healing upon the people; on which occasion it is said, "There went virtue out of him, and healed (them) all." Several expressions, in some respects similar, occur in the preceding gospels, of persons being healed by touching the garments of our Saviour, and of his expressing some peculiar sensation of virtue being derived from him, (see Matt. xiv. 36. Mark v. 30, &c.) the nature of which, of course, we cannot fully understand; but the inexplicable fact may lead us to this general and practical observation, that the Scriptures uniformly represent Jesus Christ as the spring, the fountain, the head of that river of life, in which flow all the blessings, temporal as well as spiritual, which God bestows on fallen man. (See 1 Tim. iv. 10.)

Ver. 20—26. Jesus blesses the poor and persecuted, and denounces woes on their rich oppressors.—What here follows so exactly corresponds with what is called the sermon in the mount (though possibly that discourse might not be all delivered at one time,) that commentators are compelled to consider it either as a part of that, or a repetition of some of the same sentiments, delivered afterwards in the plain, and contrasted with woes denounced against characters, opposite to those on whom he had pronounced his blessing. To these woes we shall chiefly confine our present observations. That poverty of spirit, (as explained on Matt. v. 3,) a mournful heart, meekness of temper, and especially persecution, among its woes and curses, is still more difficult to be credited. But often "what is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God." (See chap. xvi. 15.)

"The chief object of the Pagans," says Soame Jenyns, "was immortal fame; for this their poets sang, their heroes fought, and their patriots died; and this was hung out by their philosophers and legislators, as the great incitement to all noble and virtuous deeds. But what says the great Christian legislator to his disciples on this subject? "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." (Matt. v. 11, 12.) So widely different is the genius of the Pagan and Christian morality!

"Nothing, I believe, (adds the same ingenious writer,) has so much contributed to corrupt the true spirit of the Christian institution, as that partiality, which we contract from our earliest education, for the manners of Pagan antiquity; from whence we learn to adopt every moral idea which is repugnant to it; to applaud false virtues which that disavows; to be guided by laws of honour which that abhors; to imitate characters which that detests; and to behold heroes, patriots, conquerors, and suicides with admiration, whose conduct that utterly condemns. From a coalition of these opposite principles, was generated that monstrous system of cruelty and benevolence, barbarism and civility, of rapine and justice, of fighting and devotion, of revenge and generosity, which harassed the world for several centuries with crusades, holy wars, knight errantry, and single combats; and even still retains influence enough, under the name of honour, to defeat the most beneficent ends of this holy institution. I mean not by this to pass any censure on the principles of valour, patriotism, or honour; they may be useful, and perhaps necessary, in the commerce and business of the present turbulent and imperfect state; and those who are actuated by them may be virtuous, honest, and even religious men, (i. e. they may have a zeal for religion, see Rom. x. 2.:) all that I mean to assert is, that they cannot be Christians."

Without pledging ourselves to all the sentiments advanced by this ingenious apologist for Christianity, (some of which we have purposely omitted:) one thing we think he has demon-

Ver 13. Apostles.—[An Apostle properly denotes one sent, exactly corresponding to the Chaldee and Syriac, sheliach, and shelicha, probably the very word employed by our Lord, from shelach, "to send." It was employed by the Jews to denote any one deputed to act for another, especially on public business, as ambassadors, legates, or envoys; in which sense Herodotus also uses the word. —Buxster

Ver. 15. Simon called Zelotes.—Called also the Canaanite, from the Hebrew word Kana, to be zealous. See note on Mark iii. 18.

26 Wo unto you, when all men shall speak well [g] of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

27 ¶ But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, 28 Bless them that curse you, and [i] pray for them which despitefully use you.

29 And [j] unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek, offer also the other; and him [k] that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat also.

30 Give [l] to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.

31 And [m] as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

32 For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.

33 And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

34 And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

35 But love ye your [n] enemies, and do good, and [o] lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and [p] ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

strated; namely, that the religions of Christ and of the world, are not only diverse, but opposite. But we must now consider the passage as affording consolation to persecuted Christians: "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you; and when they shall separate you from their company" and communion, and shall reproach you "for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy!" The best comment on this passage is to be read in the Christian Martyrologies, whether of more ancient or modern date, wherein we shall find both old and young, and even delicate females, leaping for joy, and exulting in the flames, that they were counted worthy to suffer for the Saviour's sake!

But let us turn to the reverse of this picture. "Wo unto you that are rich; for you have received your consolation."—How animated a paraphrase does the apostle James, (chap. v.) give us of this passage: "Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you!" There are three things particularly alarming in the contemplation of great riches: 1. How have they been obtained? The apostle just quoted, contemplates with agony the reflection that they may have been obtained by defraud; by defrauding the labourers of their hire. We have seen, in many instances, men of immense property reduced to poverty, and have wondered how this could be, because we have not seen the worm at the root. Great fortunes obtained out of the labour of the poor, are always to be suspected. God only knows how much has been wrung from the starving families of agriculturists and manufacturers! 2. How have they been improved? Wise men should examine, and if they find a spot of blood, treat their riches like goods in which men suspect the plague; open them to the air, and scatter them about, among the poor and necessitous. It may be the present possessor may be innocent of the manner of their being obtained; but let him not be indifferent to their expenditure: let them be tithed to the poor, and to the cause of God. It is to be feared many are weak enough to think they can pacify the Almighty by putting down a portion of their ill-gotten wealth in charitable legacies. What is this but a thief surrendering stolen property, when seized by the hand of justice? It is an awful thing for men, and especially for professors, thus to deceive themselves. 3. It is an appalling consideration to the rich: "Ye have received your consolation!" So said Abraham to the rich man in the parable, "Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedst thy good things!" (Ch. xvi. 25.)

Ver. 27—36. Love to enemies, and universal benevolence, enforced.—These doctrines we have already seen taught in the Sermon on the Mount, (Matt. v. 38—48;) but we shall here review some arguments by which, in Luke, these duties are enforced. 1. That under the Christian dispensation, a higher degree of virtue is required than under any other: but if we only show kindness to those who do the same to us, what are we better than sinners of the Gentiles? Do not the writings of Greek and Roman philosophers afford, not only the clearest precepts, but even brilliant examples of mutual love and friendship? If we mean then to excel the heathen, and "do more than others," we must love our enemies, and exercise benevolence without regard to its return. 2. We are called to be the children of God, and as children imitate their parents, so are we called to be "followers" or imitators "of God, as dear children." (Ephes. v. 1.) "For he is kind to the unthankful and the evil:" or, as it is beautifully expressed in the parallel chapter, (Matt. v. 45,) "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." We should, therefore, as his children, "Be merciful as he is merciful:" or, as it is expressed in St. Matthew, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect;" from a comparison of which texts we may infer, that mercy and benevolence form the completion and perfection, both of the divine and human character. In the salvation of man, "mercy and truth meet together; righteousness and peace salute each other:" and (Ps. lxxxv. 10.) so it must be to complete the Christian character. There mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, must be associated.

Our Lord here lays down a principle of equity, which has been justly called the Golden Rule of morals, (ver. 31:) "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also to them likewise." Dr. Watts, who is perhaps the best commentator on this passage, very justly observes, "that this rule does not mean to oblige us to give all that to another, or do all that for another, which we could possibly desire or wish to be bestowed upon us, or done for us; but whatsoever we could reasonably desire, and justly expect, another should do to us, that we ought to do to him, when he is in the like circumstances. All that in our calm and sedate thoughts we judge fit and proper another should do for us, that we should practice and do for him. Such requests as we could make to others, and could justify them to ourselves in our own consciences, according to the principles of humanity, the rules of civil society, and the rights of mankind; such we ought not to deny to others when they stand in need. Not all that a fond self-love would prompt us to ask, but all that our conscience tells us we might with reason expect."

Let us now apply the rule, so explained, to the cases in the context. Let us consider we are applied to for relief by a per-

Ver. 29. Take thy coat.—[The coat was a tunic, or under garment, over which the Jews and other nations threw a cloak or gown, when they went abroad or were not at work.]—Bagster.

Ver. 35 Hoping for nothing again.—The Greek word is only here used in the New Testament, where some render it, to despond; and then the sense is, tend without despondency, i. e. without being weary; but the true meaning probably is, lend even to those from whom you cannot reasonably expect any recompense.

Ver. 38. Shall men give into your bosom.—The eastern garments being long, folded, and girded with a girdle, admit of carrying much corn in the bosom.

Ver. 39. Can the blind.—Or, as Matthew expresses it, "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch:" i. e. perish together.

Ver. 40. Every one that is perfect shall be as his master.—Campbell "Every finished disciple shall be as his teacher."

Ver. 44. For of thorns.—[So Seneca. "Good can no more be produced out of evil, than a fig from an olive. The produce corresponds to the seed."]—R

45 A [b] good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

46 ¶ And why call ye me [c] Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47 Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like:

48 He [d] is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and [e] could not shake it: for it was founded upon a [f] rock.

49 But he [g] that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built a house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it [h] fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Christ findeth a greater faith in the centurion, a Gentile, than in any of the Jews: 10 healeth his servant being absent: 11 raiseth from death the widow's son at Nain: 19 answereth John's messengers with the declaration of his miracles: 24 testifieth to the people what opinion he held of John: 30 inveigheth against the Jews, who with neither the manners of John nor of Jesus could be won: 36 and showeth by occasion of Mary Magdalene, how he is a friend to sinners, not to maintain them in sins, but to forgive them their sins, upon their faith and repentance.

NOW [a] when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people, he entered into Capernaum.

2 And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear [b] unto him, was sick, and ready to die.

3 And when he heard of Jesus, he sent unto him the elders of the Jews, beseeching him that he would come and heal his servant.

4 And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this:

5 For he loveth [c] our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue.

6 Then Jesus went with them. And when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to him, saying unto him, Lord, trouble [d] not thyself: for I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof:

7 Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say [e] in a word, and my servant shall be healed.

8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto [f] one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

9 When Jesus heard these things, he marvelled at him, and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

10 And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

11 ¶ And it came to pass the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

13 And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not.

14 And he came and touched the [g] bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, [h] Arise.

15 And he that was dead [i] sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.

16 And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet [j] is risen up among us; and, That [k] God hath visited his people.

17 And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.

18 ¶ And the disciples of John showed him of all these things.

19 And [l] John calling unto him two of his disciples, sent them to Jesus, saying, Art thou he that should [m] come? or look we for another?

son in distress; how far, supposing ourselves in the situation of the applicant, we could reasonably desire relief from a person in our present circumstances, so far should we now endeavour to give relief. But these maxims must in no wise be taken without limitation; for we must not give the property of another, nor the necessary support of our own families.—This, indeed, we could not reasonably expect, and are therefore not called upon to bestow.

Again, when we are commanded to lend, "not hoping to receive," the maxim taken generally, or without limitation, means to give: but if it be taken in a limited sense, for lending, it evidently means to lend, without the hope of borrowing at a future time. We have a maxim, that, "one good turn deserves another," which is a good one to act upon after receiving favours, but should not restrain us in bestowing them.—We should do a good action without the hope of remuneration. God freely bestows mercy upon us, and if we would be considered as his children, we must be kind to others, and we are the more encouraged to do this in a subsequent verse, (38,) which assures us, that whatever ingratitude we meet with from men, heaven will reward our well-meant liberality, "Give, and it shall be given unto you:—For with the same measure that ye mete, it shall be measured unto you again."

CHAP. VII.—Ver. 11—17. The widow of Nain's son raised. This is one of the most pathetic narratives in the New Testament, and one of Jay's Short Discourses gives an exposition of it, from which the Editor takes leave to abstract some of the leading thoughts. "It is a funeral procession, slow and solemn, and it is the funeral of a young man, carried off, whether suddenly or slowly we know not, but it was in the prime of life. Verily every man at his best estate is vanity!—He was an only son, the only son of his mother. Had he been one of many, the loss would have been partial; but he was the only pledge of virtuous affection; the only hope of future years; her life was bound up in his. But what closes the melancholy tale of this woman is, that she was a widow! A widow is always an affecting character, for she is liable to injustice and oppression, as she is deprived of the companion of her journey, and compelled to travel alone. In this state a child may seem an incumbrance; but if he excites care, he diverts grief; . . . . in his face the father's image is admired. He will render himself serviceable by dutiful attentions. He will plead her cause, and become her protector, and her refuge.—But such is no longer the condition of this poor widow. None is left to support her tottering age: and she is now, probably, going to bury her only son in the same grave with his father. The opening of a husband's tomb would make her wounds bleed afresh. 'There,' might she say, as she turned round to leave the sepulchre, 'There have I buried all my earthly happiness and hope: O for the day when I too shall be gathered to my kindred dust!'

"She was not alone: much people of the city was with her. This showed the esteem in which the family was held. But though numbers of her friends and neighbours attended on this mournful occasion, little relief could they afford: they cannot restore her son. But here comes, advancing towards them, another company, the leader of which can save to the uttermost. The parties join in the suburbs of the city. And what does our Lord and Saviour?

"First, he knew all the particulars of the case. Those with him could only see a funeral, but he knew the corpse. 2. He did not want to be implored: the relief was spontaneous and self-moved. 3. He had compassion on her: his eye affected his heart; he made all the miseries he beheld, his own.

Ver. 47—49. Whosoever . . . . . heareth my sayings, &c.—The parallel passage to this, is Mat. vii. 24—27, and the parable is there illustrated.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 5. Us a synagogue.—Campbell, "Our synagogue;" implying that there was but one in the town. Campbell.

Ver. 8. Go, and he goeth.—Intimating that diseases are Christ's servants, so completely under his control, that they come and go at his bidding, as the soldiers of a general.

Ver. 11. Nain—[Called Naim by the Jewish writers, was a town of Galilee, in the neighbourhood of Endor and Scythopolis, and two miles south of mount Tabor according to Eusebius. Borchard says, "Two leagues from Nazareth, and not above one south of mount Tabor, is the lesser mount Hermon on the north side of which is the city Nain.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Touched the bier.—Among the Jews, as well as Romans, in those times, the corpse was carried to the grave on a kind of litter, or bier, without any other covering than a cloth.—Rosenmuller. Orient. Lit. No. 1290.

Ver. 17. All the region round about—Viz. Galilee of the Gentiles. See Is. ix. 1.

Ver. 19. Or look we for another?—Doddridge, "Are we to expect another?" That is, Art thou the Christ? or must we wait for another?—[When we remember the Baptist's solemn testimony to Christ, the sign from heaven

20 When the men were come unto him, they [a]said, John Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

21 And in the same hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind he gave sight.

22 Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell [n]John what things ye have seen and heard; how [o]that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor [p]the gospel is preached.

23 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended [q]in me.

24 ¶ And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind?

25 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' [r]courts.

26 But what went ye out for to see? A [s]prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet.

27 This is he, of whom it is [t]written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

28 For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

29 And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified [u]God, being baptized [v]with the baptism of John.

30 But the Pharisees and lawyers [w]rejected the counsel [x]of God [y]against themselves, being not baptized of him.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Whereunto [z]then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32 They are like unto children sitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

33 For John the Baptist came [a]neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil.

34 The [b]Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35 But [c]wisdom is justified of all her children.

36 ¶ And [d]one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37 And behold, a woman in the city, which was a [e]sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment,

38 And stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39 Now, when the Pharisee which had bidden him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if [f]he were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him: for she is a [g]sinner.

40 And Jesus answering said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41 There was a certain creditor which had two debtors: the one owed five hundred [h]pence, and the other fifty.

42 And when they had nothing [i]to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore, which of them will love him most?

43 Simon answered and said, I suppose that he, to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly [j]judged.

44 And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thy house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my

Under the influence of this compassion, 4. he said unto her, Weep not! The language of our Saviour would excite surprise. Holding back her veil, she might look to see what stranger passing by thus interested himself in her grief, and gave her advice so impossible to take. When lo! 5. Jesus went and touched the bier; and they that bare him stood still. What a moment of suspense and anxiety! At length, in a tone of uncontrollable authority, he said to the young man, I say unto thee, Arise. And he never spake in vain. In an instant, he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. Finally, Jesus delivered him to his mother. He would comfort her; and therefore he prefers her satisfaction to the honour he would have gained by the attendance of such a disciple on himself. What a present was here!

"How striking the whole scene! To see a man instantly called back from the invisible world—what awe would it produce? What wonder would it excite? Some would be ready to flee from him; but the mother—she would embrace him! But would the son engross all her attention? Would she not think of Jesus? this friend in trouble; this restorer of her happiness? O, I see her kneel and adore!"

After reading this narrative, it is not wonderful to hear, that 'there came a fear on all;' and that a rumour of Jesus and his miracles of mercy "went forth throughout Judea and the region round about."

Ver. 36—50. and CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—3. Jesus, dining with a Pharisee, is anointed by a woman formerly of bad character: also attended by several other females.—Jesus came "eating and drinking;" that is, he mingled himself with various ranks and classes of society, doubtless for the purpose of instructing them in his doctrine. What might be the Pharisee's motive in thus inviting Jesus, is not for us to say; but it should seem there were other Pharisees present, from the language used in ver. 49. "Who is this that forgiveth sins also?" It is evident that though this penitent woman had been a notorious sinner, there was now nothing in her appearance or conduct at all indecorous, or it would not have been supposed to require the inspiration of a prophet to discern her character: besides, her conduct altogether showed that she was deeply humbled for her guilt; and our Lord not only confirms the fact, but holds her up as an example of true and great penitence. Let us hear his doctrine.

We are all debtors to God—all sinners, and have the same natural depravity; but in respect to actual transgression there is infinite variety; some owe 50 pence, and others 500; and according to our sense of obligation will be our affection and the miraculous impulse which made him acknowledge Jesus the Messiah, we shall be constrained to think that he sent to Christ, not for his own satisfaction, but for that of his disciples.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. And all the people that heard him—Namely, John. Grotius, Doddridge, and Campbell, all consider these as the words of Jesus, (not of the Evangelist,) in reference to John the Baptist.

Ver. 30. Rejected the counsel of God against themselves—That is, against their own interests. Doddridge renders it, "Rejected the counsel of God to them;" Campbell, "With regard to them."

Ver. 31. And the Lord said.—These words are wanting in almost all the Greek MSS. and many of the Latin; in all the ancient versions and commentators; and are rejected by Grotius, Mill, Wetstein, and even Doddridge. Campbell supposes them to be inserted by some transcriber, who took the two preceding verses for the words of the Evangelist.

Ver. 36. And sat down to meat.—The word means strictly, to recline; Campbell (probably to avoid the apparent strangeness of the word reclining) renders it "Placed himself at table." That the reclining posture is intended, is perfectly clear from ver. 38.

Ver. 37. Which was—Doddridge, "had been"—a sinner—That is, notoriously so.—An alabaster box.—See Mat. xxvi. 7.

Ver. 38. And stood at his feet behind.—The ancients placed themselves along a couch on their sides, supporting their heads with one arm, bent at the elbow, and resting on the couch: with the other they took their food, and were supported at the back by cushions. Their feet, of course, were accessible to any one who came behind the couch. Wakefield.—To wash his feet with tears.—Doddridge, "To water his feet with a shower of tears;" Campbell, "Bathed them with tears, and wiped," &c., which we prefer. It should be remarked, that the sandals were always taken off at meals.—And did wipe them with the hairs of her head.—Doddridge, "Tresses of her hair." Polybius tells us, that when Hannibal drew near to Rome, the Roman ladies went to the temples to supplicate the gods, washing the floors of them with their hair; which (he adds) was their custom on such occasions.—And kissed his feet.—This was no unusual practice with the Jews.

Ver. 41. Five hundred pence—That is, Roman denarii, equal to seventy-two dollars.

Ver. 44. Thou gavest me no water.—Washing the feet before meals is frefeet with tears, and wipea them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou gavest me no kiss: but this woman since the time I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46 My [k] head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47 Wherefore, I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48 And he said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.

49 And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, Who [l] is this that forgiveth sins also?

50 And he said to the woman, [m] Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.

CHAPTER VIII.

B Women minister unto Christ of their substance. 4 Christ, after he had preached from place to place, attended with his apostles, propoundeth the parable of the sower, 16 and of the candle: 21 declareth who are his mother, and brethren: 22 rebuketh the winds: 26 casteth the legion of devils out of the man into the herd of swine: 37 is rejected of the Gadarenes: 43 healeth the woman of her bloody issue, 49 and raiseth from death Jairus's daughter.

AND it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him,

2 And [a] certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out [b] of whom went seven devils,

3 And Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto him [c] of their substance.

4 ¶ And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable:

5 A [d] sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the way side; and it was trodden [e] down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6 And some fell upon a [f] rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

7 And some fell among [g] thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it.

8 And other fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit a [h] hundred-fold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him [i] hear.

9 ¶ And his disciples asked him, saying, What might this parable be?

10 And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that [j] seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

11 ¶ Now [k] the parable is this: The [l] seed is the word of God.

12 Those by the way side are they that hear; then cometh the devil, and taketh away [m] the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive [n] the word with joy; and these have no [o] root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

14 And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with [p] cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit [q] to perfection.

15 But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good [r] heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with [s] patience.

16 ¶ No [t] man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

17 For [u] nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest; neither any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take [v] heed therefore how ye hear: for [w] whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he [x] seemeth to have.

19 ¶ Then [y] came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press.

20 And it was told him by certain which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

21 And he answered and said unto them, My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

22 ¶ Now [z] it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples: and he said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23 But as they sailed he fell asleep: and there came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and [a] awoke him, saying, Master, master, we perish. Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm.

25 And he said unto them, Where is your to the Saviour: and those are his true disciples, (as observes the pious Spanheim,) "not who know most, but who love most." But affection will produce exertion: "Love and action (says Bp. Hall) do necessarily evince each other. True love cannot long lurk unexpressed: it will be looking out at the eyes; creeping out at the mouth; breaking out at the fingers' ends, in some actions of dearness, especially those wherein there is pain and difficulty to the agent, profit or pleasure to the affected;" that is, the object beloved. "O Lord! in vain shall we profess to love thee, if we do nothing for thee. Since our goodness cannot reach unto thee, who art our glorious head; O let us bestow upon thy feet (thy poor members here below) our tears, our hands, our ointment, and whatever our gifts or endeavours may testify our thankfulness and love to thee in them."

We have attached the first three verses of chap. viii. to this, quently mentioned in the Old Testament, Gen. xliii. 24. 1 Sam. xxv. 41; so 1 Tim. v. 10. This was done by the master of a family. Harmer, Shaw.

Ver. 45. I came in.—Some MSS. with the Vulgate, both the Syriac and the Coptic versions read, "She came in." Campbell. So Doddridge, Boothroyd, &c. Compare ver. 37.—[Many have supposed, that this person was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the sister of Lazarus. But there is no indication in the gospel history, that Mary Magdalene was the sister of Lazarus; but on the contrary, it would appear that they are perfectly distinct persons, the sister of Lazarus residing at Bethany, while Mary Magdalene appears to have resided at Magdala, east of Jordan, a distance of nearly 90 miles. Add to this, that our Saviour seems to have been now either in or near Nain, not at Bethany; and the woman appears from the recital to have been previously unknown to him.]—Bagster.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 2. Mary called Magdalene.—From Magdala, a town of Galilee, where she lived. Doddridge.—Out of whom went seven devils—Or demons; that is, who had been dispossessed. Some suppose this was the same woman that is mentioned in the preceding chapter as a sinner, (ver. 37.) but this is very doubtful. If her having seven demons implied her being a great sinner, what must the Gadarene have been, who was possessed by a legion—below, ver. 30? But to us it is not evident that possession had any connexion with moral evil.

Ver. 15. An honest and good heart—Is a heart prepared by divine grace in allusion to the labour of the husbandman in preparing his ground for seed this is, the ground that is ploughed and harrowed by the means of grace, in distinction from that which is rocky, or in the public path, or full of thorns and briers.—And bring forth fruit with patience.—Campbell says, the Greek word usually signifies "perseverance," or "a patient continuance in well doing." See Rom. ii. 7.

Ver. 18. Take heed, therefore, HOW ye hear.—But the parallel passage in Mark iv. 24, reads, "Take care WHAT ye hear." Both precepts were probably connected in our Lord's discourse, as they are in the paraphrases of Dr. Doddridge. The one seems to refer to the spirit with which we hear, the other to the care with which we should retain it. The promise is, that in proportion as we receive and retain divine instruction, more will be communicated: for whosoever hath, &c.

Ver. 22—25. Now it came to pass, &c.—Compare Mat. viii. 23—27. [As the agitation of the sea was merely the effect of the wind, it was necessary to remove the cause of the commotion before the effect would cease But who faith? And they being afraid wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

26 ¶ And [b] they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had devils long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28 When he saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee, torment [c] me not.

29 (For he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

30 And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, Legion: because many devils were entered into him:

31 And they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the [d] deep.

32 And there was there a herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they [e] fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his [f] right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37 Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought him [g] to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear: and he went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now the man out of whom the devils were departed besought him that he might be with [h] him: but Jesus sent him away, saying,

39 Return to thine own [i] house, and show how great things [j] God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

41 ¶ And behold, there [k] came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay [a] dying. But as he went the people thronged him.

43 ¶ And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent [l] all her living upon physicians, [m] neither could be healed of any,

44 Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and [n] immediately her issue of blood stanched.

45 And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that [o] virtue is gone out of me.

47 And when the woman saw that she was not [p] hid, she came [q] trembling, and falling down before him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.

49 ¶ While [r] he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler [s] of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Master.

50 But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear [t] not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in, save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And all wept, and bewailed her: but he said, Weep not; she is not dead, but [u] sleepeth.

53 And they laughed him to [v] scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54 And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, [w] arise.

55 And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And her parents were astonished: but he charged [x] them that they should tell no man what was done.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Christ sendeth his apostles to work miracles, and to preach. 7 Herod desired to see Christ. 17 Christ feedeth five thousand: 18 inquireth what opinion the world had of him: 22 foretelleth his passion: 23 proposeth to all the pattern of his patience. 28 The transfiguration. 37 He healeth the lunatic: 43 again forewarneth his disciples of his passion: 46 commendeth humility: 51 biddeth them to show mildness towards all, without desire of revenge. 57 Divers would follow him, but upon conditions.

THEN [a] he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

to avoid making a distinct section. Indeed many think the Mary Magdalene here mentioned, the sinner who anointed our Lord's feet; but there is no proof of this, nor, indeed, much probability. The other females mentioned, appear to have been in respectable circumstances, and to have afforded the principal means of our Lord's support. Yes! he "who was rich, for our sakes became poor;" and though he never degraded himself to be a beggar, he condescended to receive not alms indeed, but temporal support; and highly honoured are the females who, with much delicacy and affection, contributed to supply his wants. See exposition of Matt. xxvii. 55—66.

Ver. 33. Then went the devils.—[By this was fully evinced the sovereign power of our Lord, and the reality of diabolical agency; for, says Dr. Doddridge, "it was self-evident that a herd of swine could not be confederates in any fraud: their death, therefore, in this instructive circumstance, was ten thousand times a greater blessing to mankind, than if they had been slain for food, as was intended."]—Bagster.

Ver. 55. Her spirit came again.—This expression, thus used of one who had been dead, strongly implies, that at death the soul not only exists sepe

3 And he said unto them, Take [b] nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece.

4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5 And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake [c] off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them.

6 And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing every where.

7 ¶ Now [d] Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;

8 And of some, that Elias had appeared; and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9 And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but who is this, of whom I hear such things? And [e] he desired to see him.

10 ¶ And the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done. And he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida.

11 And the people, when they [f] knew it, followed him: and he received [g] them, and spake unto them of the kingdom [h] of God, and healed them that had need [i] of healing.

12 ¶ And [j] when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals: for we are here in a desert [k] place.

13 But he said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they said, We have no more but five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14 For they were about five thousand men. And he said to his disciples, [l] Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so, and made them all sit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17 And they did eat, and were [m] all filled: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets.

18 ¶ And it [n] came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him: and he asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?

19 They answering said, [o] John the Baptist; but some say, Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20 He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter [p] answering said, The Christ of God.

21 And he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

22 Saying, The [q] Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.

23 ¶ And he said to them all, If [r] any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

24 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

25 For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?

26 For [s] whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels.

27 But [t] I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not [u] taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God.

28 ¶ And [v] it came to pass about an eight days after these [w] sayings, he took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

29 And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering.

30 And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias:

31 Who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32 But Peter and they that were with him were heavy [x] with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his [y] glory, and the two men that stood with him.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is [z] good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing [a] what he said.

34 While he thus spake, there came a cloud, and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud.

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This [b] is my beloved Son: hear [c] him.

36 And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they kept it close, and told no man in those days [d] any of those things which they had seen.

37 ¶ And [e] it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son: for he is mine [f] only child.

39 And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruising him hardly departeth from him.

40 And I besought thy disciples to cast him out; and they could [g] not.

41 And Jesus answering said, O faithless [h] and perverse [i] generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, the devil

By Herod's will, his kingdom was thus divided among his sons: Archelaus had one half, consisting of Idumea, Judea, and Samaria; Herod Antipas, one fourth, consisting of Galilee and Perea; and Philip the remaining fourth, consisting of Batanea, Trachonitis and Auranitis. Josephus.]—Bagster.——Of some.—Doddridge, "By some." threw him down, and tare him. And Jesus rebuked [j] the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.

43 ¶ And they were all amazed [k] at the mighty power of God. But while they wondered every one at all things which Jesus did, he said unto his disciples, 44 Let these sayings sink down into your ears: for [l] the Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of [m] men.

45 But [n] they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that saying.

46 ¶ Then [o] there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47 And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by him,

48 And said unto them, [p] Whosoever shall receive this child in my name receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me receiveth him that sent me: for [q] he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.

49 ¶ And John answered and said, Master, we [r] saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not: for [s] he that is not against us is for us.

51 ¶ And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received [t] up, he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem, 52 And sent messengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the [u] Samaritans, to make ready for him.

53 And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem.

54 And when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias [v] did?

55 But he turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.

56 For [w] the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

57 ¶ And [x] it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

58 And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

59 And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer [y] me first to go and bury my father.

60 Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

61 And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

62 And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 51—62. The evil of intolerance; and the danger of irresolution in religion.—Jesus going to Jerusalem, sends some of his disciples forward to a village of the Samaritans in the road from Galilee to Judea, to prepare supper and lodging by the way. The narrow-minded Samaritans, however, finding he was going to the temple of Jerusalem, refused to afford him the necessary accommodations, which greatly offended James and John, two of the disciples deputed on this occasion, and who instantly applied to their Master, if they should not call fire from heaven to destroy these bigoted, inhospitable Samaritans; and to countenance their application, they produce the example of Elijah under the old dispensation, on a very different occasion. But Elijah was not an example for Christ, who is himself the pattern of all his disciples.

Jesus reproves the intemperate and misguided zeal of his disciples: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." Your zeal is not of God, because it is not according to knowledge. "The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." "It is far from the good Spirit of God (says Bp. Hall) to stir up any man to private revenge, or thirst of blood. Not an eagle, but a dove, was the shape in which he chose to appear. Neither wouldest thou, O God, be in the whirlwind, or in the fire, but in the soft voice. O Saviour, why do we seek for any precedent but thine, whose name we challenge? Thou camest to thine own, thine own received thee not. Didst thou call for fire from heaven upon them? Didst thou not rather send down water from thy compassionate eyes, and weep for them for whom thou must bleed? Better had it been for us never to have any spirit, than any but thine. We can be no other than wicked if our mercies be cruelty.

"O Saviour, when we look into those sacred acts and monuments of thine, we find many a life which thou preservedst from perishing; some that had perished, by thee recalled; never any by thee destroyed: only one poor fig tree, as the real emblem of thy severity to the unfruitful, was blasted and withered by thy curse. But to man how ever-favourable and indulgent wert thou! So repelled as thou wert; so reviled, so persecuted, laid (wait) for, sold, betrayed, apprehended, crucified: yet what one man didst thou strike dead for these heinous indignities? Yea, when one of thine enemies lost an ear in that ill quarrel, thou gavest that ear to him, who came to take thy life from thee. I find some whom thou didst scourge and correct, as the sacrilegious money changers; none whom thou killedst." [The idea is unfounded that the Saviour scourged the money changers. A careful examination of the Greek, John ii. 15, shows that the "scourge of small cords," was used simply in driving the sheep and oxen from the temple.]

Jesus is not so easily disconcerted as his disciples; finding the people of one village object to receive him, he goes to other. Our tempers are often ruffled, and our peace disturbed, by circumstances in themselves of no consequence, which, had we either more humility, or more enlarged views, would only excite our pity, and our prayers.

The following incidents seem to be the same as are mentioned by Matthew, chap. viii. but being there (for brevity sake) passed over, demand here an observation. The "certain man" mentioned by Luke, (ver. 57,) appears by Matthew to have been a scribe, who volunteered his service to follow our Lord; but when he found the indifferent accommodation he was likely to meet with, we hear no more of him. "The Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Foxes can burrow in the ground, and birds can build their nests on high: but he who "came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister," hath no settled habitation, no home of his own, where he can lay his head; but is constantly beholden for a lodging either to the affection of his disciples, or to the hospitality of strangers. He who made all things, lives upon the benevolence of his own creatures!

Others, who had been called to follow Jesus, excused themselves, on the ground of their secular concerns, and those too the offices of humanity. "Lord, (said one,) let me first go and bury my father:" and another, "Lord, let me first go and bid them farewell that are at home." To the former our Lord replies, "Let the dead bury their dead:" let those who are absorbed in secular concerns, and thus spiritually dead, let them attend to services of this nature: but there are in Christianity, duties paramount to all the obligations of civil life, even as the concerns of the soul and of eternity rise infinitely superior to those which regard only the body and the present transitory life.

To the other professed disciple, our Lord applies a kind of proverbial saying, intimating, that as he who put his hand to the plough, must drive straight forward his furrows, and not look behind him: so he who has once engaged in the gospel ministry, must bend all his attention to fulfil its duties. He whose heart is in this work, will not look behind him; and he whose heart is not in his work, had far better never enter on it. To look back is the first step to go back; indifference

"Let him attend his charge, and careful trace
The right-lin'd furrow; gaze no more about,

A Jewish plough was so small and light, that it required the constant care of the ploughman to keep it in the ground, or to make a straight furrow.

CHAPTER X.

Christ sendeth out at once seventy disciples to work miracles, and to preach: 17 admonisheth them to be humble, and wherein to rejoice: 21 thanketh his Father for his grace: 25 magnifieth the happy estate of his church: 25 teacheth the lawyer how to attain eternal life: and to take every one for his neighbour that needeth his mercy: 41 reproveth Martha, and commendeth Mary her sister.

A. M. 4032.
A. D. 28.

AFTER [a] these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

2 Therefore said he unto them, [b] The harvest truly is great, but the [c] labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest.

3 Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.

4 Carry [d] neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and [e] salute no man by the way.

5 And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house.

6 And if the son [f] of peace be there, your peace shall rest [g] upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again.

7 And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for [h] the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house [i] to house.

8 And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat [j] such things as are set before you:

9 And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The [k] kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10 But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,

11 Even [l] the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

12 But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.

13 ¶ Wo [m] unto thee, Chorazin! wo unto thee, Bethsaida! for [n] if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.

14 But it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you.

15 And thou, Capernaum, which [o] art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust [p] down to hell.

16 He [q] that heareth you heareth me; and he [r] that despiseth you despiseth me; and he [s] that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me.

17 ¶ And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.

18 And he said unto them, I beheld Satan [t] as lightning fall from heaven.

19 Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents [u] and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you.

20 Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written [v] in heaven.

21 ¶ In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight.

to the cause of Christ is the prelude to apostacy; and "If any man draw back, (saith the Lord,) my soul shall have no pleasure in him." (Heb. x. 38.)

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—20. Jesus sends forth his seventy disciples.—We have already seen our Lord send forth his twelve apostles, probably about a year before this period, with instructions very similar to those now before us, as may be seen by turning to Matt. chap. x. ver. 1—16. The object of both missions seems to have been, like that of John the Baptist, to excite public attention, and to prepare the way of their Master. He sent them therefore, "two by two, before his face, into every city and place, whither he himself would come." This increase of labourers seems to indicate the enlargement of the work before them; and here is no prohibition, as in Matthew, of visiting either Samaritans or Gentiles; and a farther increase of labour is strongly intimated, when our Lord says to these, as well as to the apostles, (Matt. ix. 37,) "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into the harvest." Indeed several circumstances seem to indicate that though their first labours were to be restrained to the land of Israel, yet this was but for a short period; for, immediately after Christ's resurrection, their commission was indefinitely extended; and the Acts of the Apostles contain the travels of many of the seventy, (of whom Luke probably was one,) as well as of the twelve, throughout the then known world. At the present period the number of preachers is vastly increased; yet if we contemplate the work before them, namely, the conversion of the world, we may well say, as the apostle Andrew did of the five loaves and two fishes which fed the 5000, "What are these among so many?" What indeed? but he who multiplied that food, can easily multiply his missionaries to a full adequacy of their work. He can fill the world with them: let us pray the Lord of the harvest, that he will so do!

The first mission of the seventy seems to have been very short, and immediately on their return, it is probable that they accompanied their Master in his last circuit through Galilee, which Doddridge thinks must have been between the feasts of Tabernacles and the Dedication; that is, about the beginning of the winter.

But let us attend to their report; "Lord, (say they,) even the devils (or demons) are subject to us through thy name!" This seems to have been uttered with surprise, as well as joy, probably recollecting that a short time before, some of their brethren had failed in their attempt to eject a demon, (Matt. xvii. 16,) and delighted that no similar disappointment had occurred to them. Jesus, while he admits the fact, represses their exultation: "True! (as if he had said,) I saw Satan with all his subject demons, fall, as lightning from the skies, and I shall employ you in still farther victories over the old serpent and his agents: but triumph not in this. You may 'cast out devils,' and do many wonderful works, and yet be for ever banished from my presence. (Matt. vii. 22.) Rejoice, rather, that you have a name and a place in my kingdom above, and shall reign for ever with me."

Ver. 21—24. Jesus rejoices in the sovereign good pleasure of God, and teaches his disciples so to do.—"The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," (1 John iii. 8,) and in no instance do we find his heart rejoicing, but in the downfall of pride, and ignorance, and sin; and on the other hand, in the revelation of mercy and salvation to his meek and humble followers; that while it had not pleased God to reveal his grace to "the wise and prudent," the learned and the intelligent, either among Jews or Gentiles, he had CHAP. X. Ver. 1. Other seventy.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Seventy other;" i. e. beside the twelve apostles. These "seventy" were, however, probably 72. So we call the Septuagint version "The LXX." though it is generally admitted to have been the work of 72; i. e. twelve from each tribe of Israel.

Ver. 4. Salute no man by the way.—This direction evidently implies haste: not that they were to renounce the courtesies of civil life; but the Eastern salutations were formal, and often accompanied with impertinent inquiries, which occasioned great hinderances. Niebuhr, Horneman, and other travellers, particularly complain of this among the Arabs. Orient. Cust. No. 443, 1262.

Ver. 5. Peace be to this house.—"When a Persian enters an assembly, (having left his shoes without,) he makes the usual salutation, Peace be unto you! which is addressed to the whole assembly, as it were, saluting the house." Morier's 2d Journey.

Ver. 6. If the son.—Campbell, "A son;" the Greek article being wanting in many MSS., the best editions, and the comments of several fathers. A son of peace, means a friendly, hospitable man; but "the son of peace" has been explained (though improperly) of the Son of man himself. The parallel text of Matthew x. 13, says, "If the house be worthy;" i. e. fit, suitable, and willing to receive you. The term "house" is frequently used for family.

Ver. 13. Wo unto thee, Chorazin.—[Chorazin is generally supposed to have been situated on the western shore of the lake of Tiberias, near Capernaum. These cities were so totally destroyed by the Romans, that their sites cannot now be identified.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. I beheld Satan, &c.—See John xii. 31; xvi. 11. Rev xii. 8, 9. This is generally understood to refer to the sudden and precipitous fall of Satan's kingdom by the preaching of the Gospel; but Erasmus understands it as a caution to the disciples against spiritual pride, as if our Lord had warned them of Satan's fate. Compare 1 Tim. iii. 6.

Ver. 20. Rather rejoice.—The word rather, according to Campbell, is wanting in almost all the MSS., Editions, Versions, &c. But the context seems to favour it, and Doddridge, Boothroyd, &c. retain it. Either way the sense remains the same.

Ver. 21. That thou hast hid.—The ground of our Lord's rejoicing here, is evidently not so properly that the gospel was concealed, or not revealed to any, as that it was revealed to some, and those the most insignificant and unworthy. Campbell renders it, "Because, having hidden these things from sages and the learned, thou hast revealed them to babes;" and Doddridge, though he retains the common version, inserts in his paraphrase the word while; ("While) thou hast hid these things," &c.; perhaps the conjunction although would be still better. See Rom. v. 17.

22 [w] All things [x] are delivered to me of my Father: and no [y] man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.

23 ¶ And he turned him unto his disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see:

24 For I tell you, that [z] many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

25 ¶ And behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, [a] what shall I do to inherit [b] eternal life?

26 He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou?

27 And he answering said, Thou [c] shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy [d] neighbour as thyself.

28 And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and [e] thou shalt live.

29 But he, willing to justify [f] himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my [g] neighbour?

30 And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

31 And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by [h] on the other side.

32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked [i] on him, and passed by on the other side.

33 But a certain [j] Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion [k] on him, 34 And went to him, and bound [l] up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35 And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two [m] pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him: and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay [n] thee.

36 Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves?

37 And he said, He that showed mercy [o] on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

condescended to reveal it to his disciples, though comparatively babes. "This is the hour, the eventful hour, (says Dr. H. Hunter,) when Jesus rejoiced in spirit: the hour when the great Sovereign of the universe was subjecting spiritual wickedness to human agents, and perfecting praise out of the mouths of babes and sucklings; when all the glories of the kingdom of heaven unveiled themselves to his view, and the nations of the earth hastened into it. The scenes of sorrow and suffering which must intervene, are absorbed in contemplating the blessed effects which they were to produce. . . . . Here we behold our great pattern setting us the example of referring every thing to God, as the first cause and the last end of all; who acts by his own uncontrollable, inexplicable supremacy, and with a view to his own glory.

"Having made this ascription of universal power, authority, and property, to the Father, he represents himself as invested with an equal extent of dominion; as sole and sovereign administrator of the world which he upholds, and which he came to redeem.—'All things are delivered to me of my Father.' . . . . Now, where ALL power is lodged, there is Deity; 'In that he put all things in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him.' Behold, Christian, and rejoice in spirit; the powers of darkness under the feet of the Prince of peace! . . . . Behold the heathen given him for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession! He 'must reign until he hath put all things under his feet.'

"It is added, 'And no man knoweth the Son but the Father; and who the Father is but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.' That is, the nature, excellency, and dignity of the Godhead can be known only by Deity. God is infinite in all his perfections; but in contemplating infinity, all created understanding is lost. This reciprocal knowledge of the Father and of the Son, is itself a mystery inscrutable; for it presents at once plurality and unity; which human reason sinks under. 'No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.'" (Saer. Biog. vol. viii. lect. 15.)

As a proper application of this subject, our Lord addresses his disciples, apart from the multitude, and reminds them of the great privileges they enjoyed, not only in being under the immediate instruction of one who possessed a complete and infinite knowledge of divine mysteries; but also in seeing with their own eyes the fulfilment of those things which prophets and kings had in ages long since predicted, but were suffered only to glance at through the medium of prophetic vision.

Ver. 25—37. The self-righteous lawyer reproved by the parable of the good Samaritan.—"In attempting to discover the sense of a parable, (says Mr. Preb. Townsend,) we are required to take into consideration the purpose for which it was delivered, and the circumstances that occasioned it. We find here that the young lawyer, wishing to justify himself, and considering that he had observed the law, as far as it related to the Jews, whom only he acknowledges as his neighbours, inquires, "Who is my neighbour?" Our Lord answers the question by a parable, in which the duties we owe to our neighbour are forcibly defined, and the extent of those duties pointedly demonstrated. We are taught that not only our acquaintance, our friends, and countrymen, are included under this term; but that our very enemies, when in distress, are entitled to our sympathy, our mercy, and our best exertions for their relief. The Jews held the Samaritans in utter abhorrence; in order, therefore, to impress the mind of the inquirer more fully, our Saviour obliges the young man to reply to his own question for he was compelled to acknowledge that he who showed mercy on him was his neighbour. Our Lord having represented to him the extent of the law, commands him to follow the example of the good Samaritan, and to go and do likewise. The circumstances mentioned in this parable are, by many, considered as real: the road from Jerusalem to Jericho lay through a desert infested by robbers, and which was principally frequented by priests and Levites, in their journeyings from the latter to the former place. The parable itself has been variously interpreted, and by some commentators it is supposed to relate only to the compassionate love of Christ (who was called by the Jews a Samaritan) to mankind. In whatever way we consider it, the duty it inculcates is most evident; and the parable must be regarded as a beautiful exemplification of the law of loving our neighbours as ourselves, without any distinction of person, country, or party." (New Test. Arr.)

"Let us go and do likewise, regarding every man as our neighbour, who needs our assistance. Let us renounce that bigotry and party zeal which would contract our hearts into an

---

Ver. 22. All things, &c.—"And turning to these disciples, he said, All things," &c. So Campbell. The all things delivered to the Son, may, in the first place, intend the doctrines and mysteries of the Gospel, but are not, we conceive, to be confined to these. See Mat. xxviii. 18.

Ver. 23. Blessed are the eyes, &c.—Compare the parallel text, Mat. xiii. 26; and 1 Peter i. 10, 11, which seems a full illustration of the passage before us.

Ver. 25. And, behold, a certain lawyer; i. e. a student, or doctor of the Mosaic law, stood up, and tempted him, Doddridge, "to try him." Similar incidents occur Mat. xix. 16; xxii. 35; but the party is not thought to be the same.

Ver. 26. How readest thou?—Vitringa observes, that the text quoted by the lawyer, in the next verse, was read daily in the temple.

Ver. 30. And fell among thieves.—From the testimony of Josephus, it appears, that not only was Judea at that time miserably infested with robbers, but that this road, in particular, was deplorably harassed by these banditti, as it lay through wild and dreary solitudes. Hence Jerome tells us it was called "the bloody way." Mr. Buckingham, in his late travels, says, here pillage, wounds, and death, would be accompanied with double terror, from the frightful aspect of every thing around, here the unfeeling act of passing by a fellow creature in distress, strikes one with horror, as an act more than inhuman; and here, too, the compassion of the good Samaritan is doubly virtuous, from the purity of the motive which must have led to it, in a spot where no eyes were fixed upon him, and from the bravery which was necessary to admit of a man's exposing himself, by such delay, to the risk of a similar fate.

Ver. 31. By chance.—Doddridge, "It happened:" Wesley, "it came to pass;" who adds, "There is no such thing in the universe as either chance or fortune."

Ver. 32. Came and looked.—Curiosity might induce the [r] evite to do this; but the priest passed on without even stopping to look.

Ver. 33. A certain Samaritan.—From the benevolence of character here exhibited, the principal person in the fable has been distinguished by the epithet of good, and a desire to honour the Saviour of mankind, no doubt led the ancient fathers, and from their time the allegorical preachers of every succeeding age, to apply this character to Jesus Christ, though he was neither a Samaritan nor a sectary. To complete the allegory, the Jew is supposed to represent Adam; his going down from Jerusalem to Jericho, the fall; the thieves which attacked him, sin and Satan; and his being left half dead, the miserable state of man since the fall. The priest and Levite who passed him by, the moral and ceremonial law; the inn, the church; the host, the ministers of the gospel; the two pence, the two dispensations, oil and wine, the sacraments, &c. and the repayment, the rewards of another world. We shall cite no name to this interpretation, because we think it unwarranted; but we believe it is ancient as Origen, and as modern as Wm. Huntington.

Ver. 34. Oil and wine.—Mingled together, were used medicinally by the ancients.——To an inn.—Of the eastern inn, see note on chap. ii. 7. But this inn is not described by the same term, but was probably a mere resting place, (as the original implies,) and where some person attended, here called the host, or innkeeper, to assist strangers. To him the good Samaritan gave "two pence, about 28 cents of our money, with a promise of more, if needed

CHAPTER XI.

1 Christ teacheth to pray, and that instantly: 11 assuring that God so will give us good things. 14 He, casting out a dumb devil, rebuketh the blasphemous Pharisees: 28 and showeth who are blessed: 29 reproveth to the people: 37 and reprehendeth the outward show of holiness in the Pharisees, scribes, and lawyers.

AND it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.

2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say, Our [a] Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come.

3 Give us [b] day by day our daily bread.

4 And forgive us our sins; for [c] we also forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil.

5 And he said unto them, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go unto him at midnight, and say unto him, Friend, lend me three loaves;

6 For a friend of mine [d] in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him?

7 And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise and give thee.

8 I say unto you, Though he will not rise and give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity [e] he will rise and give him as many as he needeth.

9 And I say unto you, [f] Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

10 For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

11 If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?

12 Or if he shall ask an egg, will he [g] offer him a scorpion?

insensibility to all the human race, but a small number, whose sentiments and practices are so much our own, that our love to them is but self-love reflected. Ver. 38—42. The characters of Martha and Mary.—These were the sisters of Lazarus, and lived with him, where Jesus visited, and all of whom he loved, as we shall find in St. John's narrative (chap. xi.) of the sickness, death, and resurrection of the latter. At present we shall briefly sketch their characters.

All the anxieties of Martha were, not to secure the wealth, nor enjoy the pleasures of the world; but Jesus was come with his disciples, probably a large company. She, as the elder sister, had welcomed him to the house, and she was anxious to afford him the best entertainment in her power. She could therefore find no time to sit at the feet of Jesus, and probably thought her sister very selfish, to sit and feast herself with his discourse, while she lent no hand to prepare a suitable entertainment for the Lord and his disciples: she therefore ventures to complain of her sister, doubtless expecting that Jesus would immediately order Mary to assist her. But what says Jesus? He reproves the busy, anxious Martha, and excuses Mary. "Martha, Martha, thou art careful, anxious, and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful, the salvation of the soul, and Mary hath chosen that good part."

But what is that ONE thing? "It is hearing the Saviour's words; it is an attention to the soul; it is religion. What! is nothing else necessary? Yes, many things; but compared with this, they are less than nothing, and vanity. Other things are accidentally needful; this is essentially so. Other things are occasionally needful; this is invariably so. Other things are partially needful; this is universally so: needful for prosperity and adversity; needful for the body and the soul; needful for time and eternity. Some things are needful for some individuals, but not for others: but this is needful for all; needful for kings and subjects; needful for rich and poor; needful for old and young.

"Finally, it is worthy of remark, that real godliness is not only a necessary, but a durable acquisition. 'Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken from her.' Permanency adds bliss to bliss. . . . If we choose honours, riches, pleasures, friendships, they will be sure to fail us. . . . . when we most need their aid. But the blessings we derive from godliness are our own for ever. . . . . Even the desolations of death, which strip us of every thing else, cannot touch the believer's portion. It is an inheritance incorruptible, and which fadeth not away." (Jay's Short Disc. vol. ii. disc. 13.)

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—8. Jesus again teaches his disciples to pray.—As we have already considered this prayer in Matt. vi. 9, our plan might have justified us in passing it over, but that it is a formulary of so much interest, and so extensive use. On these grounds we shall reconsider it, without repeating any of our former observations.

The occasion of this request of the disciples appears to have been their hearing the simple, ardent, and importunate petitions of their divine Teacher, in whose recorded prayers we find nothing like sermonizing, or artificial eloquence; and it is truly mortifying to us to hear any thing of the kind from his professed disciples.

The foundation of all prayer lies in the character of God as a Father; but to authorize us to call him "our Father," we should have evidence that we are his children—the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. And when we contemplate his residence in heaven, where he is surrounded by adoring seraphim, with perpetual ascriptions of Holy, holy, holy! we cannot but desire that his name, so revered in heaven, should also be sanctified upon earth. In praying for the accomplishment of the divine will on earth, we should restrain our desires to nothing short of the full accomplishment that it receives

Ver. 39. Which also sat.—This conjunction (also) does not imply that Martha sat with her, for it is evident from the next verse that she did not. The also is therefore omitted both by Doddridge and Campbell.

Ver. 41. Careful and troubled.—Doddridge, "Anxious and disturbed."

Ver. 42. One thing is needful.—What this is, has been almost as much disputed as the summum bonum among the ancients. Some have suggested, that one dish might be intended; but surely one dish would not serve Jesus and his apostles, to say nothing of the seventy disciples. This, besides, supposes, when Mary chose the better part, that she had taken care to secure that dish to herself: a most degrading interpretation! When the sacred writers speak of one thing as particularly important, it is something of a spiritual and sublime nature. See Ps. xxvii. 4. Prov. iii. 13; iv. 7. Mark x. 21.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 2. When ye pray.—Part of the address, and the petitions, "Thy will be done," and "deliver us from evil," being wanting in some copies, MSS., and Versions, Campbell and others have supposed they do not belong to this copy of the prayer; but have been inserted from Matthew by some transcribers: we are, however, more inclined to think they have been dropped in the deficient copies, than inserted in the others. At any rate, the words were uttered by our Lord on one occasion, if not the other.

Ver. 3. Give us day by day.—Campbell, "Each day."—Our daily bread.—The word is peculiar to the LXX. and New Testament. Chrysostom and Theophylact explain it of bread convenient, or sufficient for our subsistence.

Ver. 4. Deliver us from evil.—"The adjective (evil) being preceded by the definitive article, and having no substantive expressed in the same sentence to agree with it, is rendered by the article a personal substantive, and of course is applicable in the first place, to that personal character, which is most notorious for evil or malice: viz. the evil one, or prince of demons." Mr. Granville Sharp on the two last Petitions in the Lord's Prayer.

For the correctness of this version, Dr. Whitby (who adopts it) cites Tertullian, Origen, and Chrysostom, three of the most learned among the Christian Fathers. Mr. Sharp also cites Beza, the Reformer, two learned Jesuits, and Dr. Lort. Doddridge, Campbell, &c. And in eight passages out of eleven, in which the same word occurs, the translators have rendered it as here proposed.

Ver. 5. Go unto him at midnight.—The eastern journeys are often performed in the night; this circumstance, therefore, of a friend arriving at midnight is very probable. Harmer, vol. i. p. 468.

Ver. 6. In his journey.—Campbell, "Off his road." The most corresponding English phrase is, "Off his journey;" that is, just arrived.

Ver. 7. My children are with me in bed.—Sir John Chardin says, it is usual for a whole family to sleep in the same room, especially those in lower life, laying their beds on the ground.

Ver. 9—13. I say unto you, Ask.—These five verses literally correspond with Mat. vii. 7—11, except that in the last verse of Mat. for "good things," Luke substitutes "the Holy Spirit:" one of the best gifts certainly that we can implore, or God bestow.

Ver. 12. A scorpion.—[The scorpion is a species of insect without wings, generally two inches in length, of a yellow, brown, or black colour, of an oval form, not unlike a lobster, tail long and slender, with several joints or divisions, and a sharp pointed weapon at the end, in which the poison is lodged, the whole covered with a hardish skin, and having eight eyes and eight legs Bochart produces testimonies to prove that a species of scorpion in Judea was similar in size and form to an egg.]—Bagster.

good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?

14 ¶ And [h] he was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered.

15 But some of them said, He casteth out devils through [i] Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16 And others, tempting him, [j] sought of him a sign from heaven.

17 But he, knowing [k] their thoughts, said unto them, Every [l] kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth.

18 If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.

19 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges.

20 But if I with the finger [m] of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

21 When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace:

22 But when a stronger [n] than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.

23 He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth.

24 When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith I will return unto my house whence I came out.

25 And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished.

26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is [o] worse than the first.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, as he spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, Blessed [p] is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.

28 But he said, Yea, rather, blessed [q] are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

29 ¶ And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign; and [r] there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

30 For as [s] Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation.

31 The [t] queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

32 The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for [u] they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

33 No [v] man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light.

34 The [w] light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when thine eye is [x] evil, thy body also is full of darkness.

35 Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness.

36 If thy whole body therefore be full of [y] light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when [z] the bright shining [a] of a candle doth give thee light.

37 ¶ And as he spake, a certain Pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in, and sat down to meat.

38 And [b] when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner.

39 And the Lord said unto him, Now do [c] ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your [d] inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

40 Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also?

41 But [e] rather give alms [f] of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you.

42 But [g] wo unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

43 Wo unto you, Pharisees! for [h] ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets.

in heaven, where no interposing power can even for a moment appear to thwart it. On earth, it is true, that will is constantly opposed: but as we know it is omnipotent, we look with pleasure and with hope to that period, when every rebellious spirit on earth shall be subdued, and holy and uniform obedience rendered to the Lord.

When we pray for temporal blessings, our terms must be more limited; we are authorized to ask only provisions necessary or convenient for the present time; not what the rich fool aspired after—"goods laid up for many years to come." "For spiritual blessings," says Bishop Taylor, "let our prayers be particularly importunate, perpetual, and persevering; for temporal blessings, let them be general, short, conditional, and modest."

Pardon of sin is one of those spiritual blessings for which we are encouraged to employ "the most importunate, perpetual, and persevering requests;" with which we must in all cases connect our readiness to forgive others, as our Lord has taught us. As in our Courts of Law, a man who seeks for justice must go into Court with "clean hands," that is, committing no injustice against the party of whom he complains; so it is in vain for us to plead for mercy in the court of heaven, unless we can add, "we also forgive every one that is indebted to us," or has trespassed against us.

The two following petitions, Mr. Granville Sharpe thinks, have a particular reference to the circumstances of our Lord himself—He was led into temptation, but he was delivered from the evil one; to both which circumstances he may probably allude. He was led into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil—he wrestled with the enemy and prevailed—he Ver. 14—26. And he was casting out a devil, &c.—This appears to us the same as Mat. xii. 22—30, and 43—45. Only there the subject is said to have been blind as well as dumb. There is another case, however, of a dumb demon cast out, Mat. ix. 32-34, but the context does not so well agree.

Ver. 20. Kingdom of God.—[For the destruction of the kingdom of Satan plainly implies the setting up of the kingdom of God. The reasoning of the Pharisees, (ver. 17, and Mat. xii. 24, 25,) was not expressed, and Jesus, knowing their thoughts, gave ample proof of his omniscience. This, with our Lord's masterly confutation of their reasonings, by a conclusion drawn from their own premises, one would have supposed might have humbled and convinced those men; but the most conclusive reasoning, and the most astonishing miracles, were lost upon a people who were obstinately determined to disbelieve every thing that was good relative to Jesus of Nazareth.]—Bagster.

44 Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as [i] graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.

45 Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto him, Master, thus saying thou reproachest us also.

46 And he said, Wo unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens [j] with one of your fingers.

47 Wo unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them.

48 Truly ye bear witness that ye allow [k] the deeds of your fathers: for they indeed killed [l] them, and ye build their sepulchres.

49 Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute:

50 That the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required [m] of this generation;

51 From the blood of [n] Abel unto the blood of [o] Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this [p] generation.

52 Wo unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of [q] knowledge: ye enter not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye [r] hindered.

53 And as he said these things unto them, the scribes and the Pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and to [s] provoke him to speak of many things:

54 Laying wait for him, and [t] seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him.

CHAPTER XII.

Christ preacheth to his disciples to avoid hypocrisy, and fearfulness in publishing his doctrine. 13 Warneth the people to beware of covetousness, by the parable of the rich man who set up greater barns. 22 We must not be over careful of earthly things. 31 but seek the kingdom of God. 33 give alms. 35 be ready at a watch to open to our Lord whensoever he cometh. 41 Christ's ministers are to see to their charge. 49 and to look for persecution. 54 The people must take this time of grace, 58 because it is a fearful thing to die without reconciliation.

IN [a] the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, insomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy.

2 For [b] there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known.

3 Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops.

4 And I say unto you my [c] friends, [d] Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

5 But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him.

6 Are not five sparrows sold for two [e] farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God?

7 But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows.

8 Also I say unto you, [f] Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess [g] before the angels of God:

9 But he that denieth [h] me before men shall be denied before the angels [i] of God.

10 And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost it shall not [j] be forgiven.

11 And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and powers, take [k] ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say:

12 For the Holy Ghost shall teach [l] you in the same hour what ye ought to say.

13 ¶ And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with [m] me.

14 And he said unto him, Man, [n] who made me a judge or a divider over you?

15 And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of [o] covetousness: for a man's life [p] consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

came off conqueror, and more than conqueror: but we are unequal to such a contest, and should therefore pray to be delivered from it. But though we admit that "the evil one," the devil, may be here particularly intended, we are far from wishing to see the translation so restrained. Not only from Satan, but from every evil being, and every thing, we should certainly pray to be delivered.

To this prayer, our Lord adds some arguments for importunity; observing, that in many cases importunity may prevail with men, and God loves to be importuned: but this subject is reviewed chap. xviii. 1.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 13—21. The parable of the rich fool.—The occasion of this must be considered. A man who had had some dispute with his brother, relative to an inheritance, of which he considered himself entitled to at least a moiety, finding our Lord's authority highly respected as a prophet, wished to engage him to arbitrate between himself and his brother, in hope to gain his point. Our Lord, who carefully avoided any interference in secular concerns, replied sharply, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" and evidently perceiving that he was influenced by a principle of covetousness, delivered the following parable to caution him against that evil and dangerous disposition. A certain great agriculturist had an estate, rich and fertile, insomuch that he was distressed for room to bestow the produce. He resolves therefore to pull down his contracted barns, and build greater; and instead of labouring in future, to retire from business and enjoy his riches. It is worthy of remark, that this man proposed no plan of aggression against his neighbours, nor of oppression of the poor; but merely a life of ease and indolence, which men generally consider as innocent and harmless. He was probably a Sadducee, or Jewish Epicurean philosopher, who thought he had done enough, and now looked only to enjoyment. But how miserable his disappointment! Instead of less creatures."—Did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also?—That is, Did not he which made the body, likewise make the soul? Doddridge and Campbell. Mat. xxiii. 25.

Ver. 47. For ye build.—[Their guilt did not lie in building and adorning the tombs of the prophets, considered simply in itself; but in their hypocrisy, in giving this testimony of respect to the prophets, whilst they were actuated by the spirit, and followed the example of their persecutors and murderers.]—B.

Ver. 48. Truly ye bear witness.—As in your conduct you imitate your fathers, truly ye bear witness to them; and in effect approve the works of your fathers: for one would imagine that you erected these monuments, not so much in honour of the prophets, as of the persecutors by whom they were so wickedly destroyed. Doddridge.

Ver. 49. The wisdom of God.—[Probably by the Wisdom of God we are to understand the Logos, or Word of God, that is, our Lord himself; this being a dignified and Oriental mode of expression for I say, as it is in the parallel passage.]—Bagster.

Ver. 51. Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple.—It is said a space of nine feet was left between the altar of burnt-offerings and the temple (or tabernacle) itself, as an asylum for criminals, which might not be violated, but in cases of decided murder. See Ex. xxxviii. 2.

Ver. 52. The key of knowledge.—We conceive to be, the right of private judgment; i. e. of reading and judging for ourselves. The scribes took away this right by referring the explanation of Scripture wholly to tradition, as the Papists have since done.

Ver. 53. To urge him vehemently.—Literally, "to mouth him." Some think this an allusion to hunting with dogs: but we conceive it to refer to their vulgar and overbearing language, in order to provoke our Lord, and put him off his guard.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. An innumerable multitude.—Campbell, "Myriads;" i. e. "tens of thousands."—The leaven of the Pharisees.—See Mat. xvi. 12.

Ver. 3. Proclaimed upon the house-tops.—[The houses in Judea being flat-roofed, with a balustrade round about, were used for the purpose of taking the air, sleeping, and prayer, and, it seems, for announcing things in the most public manner. So among the Turks, a crier announces the hours of public worship from the minaret or tower of the mosque.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Before the angels.—In Matthew it is "Before my Father;" i. e. before the Father, and the holy angels which attend his presence. See note on Mat. xviii. 10.

Ver. 16. Spake a parable, &c.—The design of this parable, as is evident from the context, was to illustrate what covetousness is. Christ makes it to consist in using property simply for personal gratification, and not as a steward, for the honour of God. He in ver. 21, makes it universal in its application.

What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?

18 And he said, This will [q] I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods.

19 And I will say to my soul, [r] Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, [s] drink, and be merry.

20 But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night [t] thy [u] soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast [v] provided?

21 So is he that layeth up treasure for [w] himself, and is not rich [x] toward God.

22 ¶ And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take [y] no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on.

23 The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment.

24 Consider the [z] ravens: for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls?

25 And which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit?

26 If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest?

27 Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

28 If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven; how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith?

29 And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, [a] neither be ye of doubtful mind.

30 For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

31 But [b] rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all [c] these things shall be added unto you.

32 Fear not, little [d] flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the [e] kingdom.

33 ¶ Sell [f] that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a [g] treasure in [h] the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth.

34 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

35 ¶ Let [h] your loins be girded about, and your lights [i] burning;

36 And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

37 Blessed [j] are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.

38 And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants.

39 And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief [k] would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

40 Be ye therefore ready [l] also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

41 ¶ Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even to all?

42 And the Lord said, Who then is that faithful and wise [m] steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

43 Blessed [n] is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

44 Of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath.

45 But and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to beat [o] the men-servants and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken;

46 The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will [p] cut him in [q] sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

47 And that servant, which [r] knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did enjoyment, the decree was gone forth which assigned over all his property to his heirs; and the summons which called him to the bar of judgment. What a warning this to thousands! but by how few has it been attended to! Had he formed plans of benevolence and charity; had he said, Soul, bestir thyself in the cause of God, or of the poor, perhaps, as in the case of Hezekiah, fifteen more years might have been added to his life; or if not, the intention would have been accepted for the deed, by him who reads the intentions of the heart.

Ver. 32–48. The duty of watchfulness enforced by two short parables.—In the first of these the lord is represented as having gone to a marriage, the time of his return from which is quite uncertain: his servants are therefore required to wait for him, with lights in their hands, and their loins girded, ready to attend him; in which case he is pleased to intimate, that they shall find the kindest returns when he shall come. (Ver. 37.)

Peter, upon this, inquires whether the parable was intended for them (the apostles) only, or for all his followers. This question is answered by another parable, still more alarming, because a severe punishment is attached to the neglect, especially of those who knew their lord's will, and were warned of his approach,—which is both their case and ours. To be prepared for our Lord's coming implies two things: 1. To be truly and cordially engaged in his service; and, 2. To be constantly on the look out, as expecting his arrival. Christian watchfulness, remarks a pious writer, "implies that the person is careful to have his affections happily loosened from the world; for without this, he will not be willing to leave it. Bound by those ties in their full strength, he must be torn piecemeal from the earth; and in such a case, how unfit either to meet death, or to enter upon the joys which are at God's right hand!

"It farther implies, that there is no guilt oppressing the conscience; but that the person has washed his garments, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. It is faith in the Redeemer . . . . which can alone remove the fear of death, by removing guilt from the conscience, and by giving us 'a good hope through grace.' But without a heavenly mind, our preparation is not complete; that is, we cannot 'long to depart, and to be with Christ,' as far better than any portion in the present world.

"All this is implied in that watchfulness which our Lord

Ver. 21. Rich toward God.—That is, in faith and charity. The expression is forcible, and seems to imply that God is the good man's banker.

Ver. 24. Consider the ravens.—[The raven is a species of the corvus, or crow tribe, of the order Picæ, known by its large size, its plumage being of a bluish black, and tail roundish at the end. It was probably selected by our Lord as being unclean.]—Bagster. Mat. "Fowls," or birds. If these sentiments were repeated at different times, probably our Lord might have different kinds of birds within his view. Ravens live on flesh, which might make the argument more striking.

Ver. 35, 36. Let your loins be girded, &c.—This seems to refer to the parable of the marriage, Mat. xxv. 1—13.

Ver. 46. Cut him in sunder.—Compare note on Mat. xxiv. 51.

Ver. 47. And that servant, which knew his lord's will, &c.—["The antithesis in this passage," observes Bishop Jebb, (Sac. Lit.) "has prodigious moral depth: he who sins against knowledge, though his sins were only sins of omission, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he who sins without knowledge, though his sins were sins of commission, shall be beaten only with few stripes. Mere negligence against the light of conscience, shall be severely punished, while an offence, in itself comparatively heinous, if committed ignorantly, and without light, shall be mildly dealt with."]—Bagster.

according to his will, shall be beaten [a] with many stripes.

48 But he [t] that knew not, and [u] did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For [u] unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have [v] committed much, of him they will ask the more.

49 ¶ I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?

50 But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I [w] straitened till it be accomplished!

51 Suppose [x] ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division.

52 For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three.

53 The father [y] shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother-in-law against her daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.

54 ¶ And he said also to the people, [z] When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is.

55 And when ye see the south wind blow, ye say, There will be heat: and it cometh to pass.

56 Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?

57 ¶ Yea, and why even of [a] yourselves judge ye not what is right?

58 When [b] thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, as thou art in [c] the way, give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison.

59 I tell thee, thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very [d] last mite.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Christ preacheth repentance upon the punishment of the Galileans, and others. 6 The fruitless fig tree may not stand. 11 He healeth the crooked woman: 18 sheweth the powerful working of the word in the hearts of his chosen, by the parable of the grain of mustard-seed, and of leaven: 24 exhorteth to enter in at the strait gate: 31 and reproveth Herod and Jerusalem.

THERE were present at that season some that told him of the [a] Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled [b] with their sacrifices.

2 And Jesus answering said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things?

3 I tell you, Nay: but, except ye [c] repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

4 Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were [d] sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

5 I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

6 ¶ He spake also this parable; [e] A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought [f] fruit thereon, and found none.

7 Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it [g] down; why cumbereth it the ground?

8 And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone [h] this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it:

9 And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that [i] thou shalt cut it down.

Jesus Christ here inculcates. The argument which he urges to enforce the necessity of being thus ready is, the uncertainty of life: 'be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.'

"The apostle (Peter) speaks of it as the posture of mind common to the primitive Christians, that they continued 'looking for, and hastening to the day of God,' like persons pressing to a desired object. O that this may be my frame! May I not act like those who say, 'Where is the promise of his coming?' but like those who consider him at the very door: and in this posture may I say with David, 'Now, Lord, what wait I for? Truly my hope is in thee.'"

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—9. The death of certain Galileans, and other national calamities, improved by the parable of the fig-tree.—To understand the propriety of our Lord's discourse, we must first briefly state the melancholy facts now alluded to. The Galileans here mentioned, were the followers of Judas Gaulonitis, a factious leader, and the same, probably, which is alluded to Acts v. 37. He contended, that God being the only rightful sovereign of the Jews, they ought by no means to pay tribute to Cesar, or acknowledge the power of the Romans. Josephus, in addition to the above principles of this sect, mentions their incredible fortitude, and contempt of sufferings; but does not mention the particular fact of any being slain in the temple, as the words of Luke seem to imply: but Lardner thinks the reason was, the popularity of their notions among the Jews, and the abhorrence in which they were held by the Romans, rendered it impossible for him to record such facts without offending one party or the other.

The fall of the tower of Siloam, which was probably sudden, and accidental, is neither recorded by Josephus, nor by any contemporary historian. For in those days there were no public journals, and those of the government were nearly confined to their own transactions. There is no reason, however, to question either of the facts, and both had doubtless occurred very recently, since they were brought to Jesus by some person who visited the temple. We may see, however, by the remark of our Lord, the proper way in which such events should be improved. We should not vent our feelings in execrations on the sufferers; but consider that we also are sinners, and liable to the same calamities. Indeed these events pourtrayed, in a very lively manner, the subsequent sufferings of the nation, great numbers of whom were slain by the Romans in the temple, during the celebration of one of their great public festivals, while many thousand others were buried under the ruins of the temple itself, when taken by the Romans. In this discourse our Lord also sets a very excellent example to his ministers in every age. While he carefully avoids political discussion, he improves all public events to the best moral and religious ends; showing the uncertainty of life, the perpetual danger of death, and the great importance of being prepared for all circumstances, by a timely and sincere repentance; for death often strikes with little or no warning.

In order to fix these things upon the memory of his hearers, our Lord introduces the parable of a barren fig-tree, which having repeatedly disappointed the reasonable expectations of its owner, is ordered to be cut down, as "a cumberer of the ground;" and is spared only through the intercession of the keeper of the vineyard, under which character our Lord himself is represented as interceding on their behalf, and labouring to rouse them to national and personal repentance by every proper means.

This parable very forcibly depicts, not only the moral barrenness of the Jews, but of other nations also, which being favoured with peculiar privileges, like our own, still do not bring forth "fruits meet for repentance." Nor is the emblem less applicable to the case of individuals, who, favoured with all the culture of Christian education, and with all the advantages of evangelical preaching, still remain barren and unfruitful, even in God's vineyard.

> "Still may this barren fig-tree stand
> And, cultivated by thy hand,
> Verdure, and bloom, and fruit afford,
> Meet tribute to its bounteous Lord!"

Ver. 48. He that knew not.—See John ix. 41. Acts xvii. 30. James iv. 17.

Ver. 49—53. I am come to send, &c.—Campbell, "I came to throw fire on the earth: and what would I but that it were kindled?" That is, "since the advancement of true religion, which is the greatest blessing to mankind, must be attended with such unhappy divisions, I even long till they take place."

Ver. 50. I have a baptism, &c., and how am I straitened. Margin and Campbell, "Pained." This baptism refers doubtless to our Lord's sufferings, in which he was literally bathed in blood, both in the garden and on the cross. Both verses express, in the strongest manner, our Lord's desire for the accomplishment of his mission, whatever might be the consequences.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 3. All likewise perish.—Doddridge, "Thus perish," implying a similarity between their fate and that of the whole nation.

Ver. 7. These three years.—Archbishop Newcome and others suppose this to refer to the time of our Lord's ministry, which had now continued about that period; but we should think it referred rather to the numerous and repeated warnings the nation had received by former and later prophets; (Je. vii. 13, 25, &c.;) by Jesus and his apostles. And after all these warnings, the nation was spared not one year only, but nearly 40 years, before Jerusalem was destroyed.

Ver. 8. I shall dig about it, and dung it.—Harmer objects that spades (or shovels) were not used in the eastern agriculture: perhaps not generally, but here is a single tree marked out, which could not be cultivated by the plough, and which the keeper of the vineyard proposes to treat with peculiar attention, typifying God's special care for his favoured nation.

Ver. 9 Well!—The expression in the original is elliptical, and this word is not improperly supplied.

10 ¶ And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath.

11 And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity [j] eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself.

12 And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him, and said unto her, Woman, thou [k] art loosed from thine infirmity.

13 And [l] he laid his hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.

14 And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation, because that Jesus had healed [m] on the sabbath day, and said unto the people, There [n] are six days in which men ought to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the sabbath day.

15 The Lord then answered him, and said, Thou [o] hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose [p] his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

16 And ought not this woman, being a daughter [q] of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, o, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the sabbath day?

17 And when he had said these things, all his adversaries were [r] ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the [s] glorious things that were done by him.

18 ¶ Then said he, Unto [t] what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it?

19 It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and cast into his garden; and it grew, and waxed a great tree; and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it.

29 And they [d] shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God.

30 And behold, there [e] are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

31 ¶ The same day there came certain of the Pharisees, saying unto him, Get thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will kill thee.

Ver. 10—17. An aged and bowed woman cured of her infirmity on the sabbath day.—It was doubtless by design that our Lord wrought so many miracles on the sabbath day: not that he meant to lessen their reverence for the day; but to correct their superstitious notions, who, because they were forbidden secular labour on that day, converted it, in a great measure, into a day of idleness and indulgence; whereas, to a good man, especially in this age of Christian activity, between devotion and benevolence, it affords equal employment to any day of the week. Such it did to our Lord himself. On that day we always find him in either the temple or the synagogue; either instructing the minds or healing the diseases of the poor; and thereby marking it out as a proper season, not only for devotion, but for the religious instruction of all classes: and though the healing of the sick is necessarily confined to those only, who are professionally qualified; yet the visiting of the sick, and carrying to them the instructions and consolations of the gospel, is a holy work, eminently suited to this holy day. In the case before us, here is a woman long bent double, either through disorder in the spine, or extreme nervous weakness, so that she was unable to lift, or raise herself upright, till our Lord had spoken the strengthening word. This disorder is attributed to Satan, as Job's was, (Job ii. 7,) for this evil spirit loses no opportunity of doing mischief when permitted; but as here is no mention either of a demon or his being ejected, we doubt her being properly a demoniac.

The ruler of the synagogue, fired with indignation, and probably seeing other miserable objects applying for mercy, flies at the people, telling them that they ought not to come to be healed on the sabbath day. At this our Lord is evidently incensed, and in the severest terms reproves him, as no better than a hypocrite, using the same argument as he had formerly used, when he cured the man with a withered hand: if they scrupled not (as it appears was the case) to water their cattle on the sabbath day, that they might not suffer a temporary thirst, surely they ought not to be angry that a daughter of Abraham had on this day been delivered from so terrible a complaint. Upon this the ruler and his companions were all struck dumb with shame, while "the people rejoiced for all the glorious things" that the Lord had done.

Ver. 22—30. The necessity of striving for salvation.—An impertinent question here produces a very interesting reply. The question is, "Are there few that be saved?" The answer is, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," that you may be one of them. The number rests with God, and we have no business with it: but the secret purpose of God offers no impediment to our salvation. The fewer there are, the more necessary it is for us to strive, to struggle, literally to agonize, that we may be found among the number. This doctrine had been laid down in the sermon on the mount, but is here enforced by an additional argument. Not only is the entrance difficult, but the time is limited. "When once the door is shut," it will be in vain to knock, or "strive to enter." Then many shall strive to enter in, and shall not be able. What are the arguments likely to be made use of? Some will plead, "We have eaten and drank in thy presence." Yes, Judas may say this; for he was a daily guest at his master's table. Others will say, "Thou hast taught in our streets," and we have listened to thy preaching with delight: so Herod heard John gladly, and did many things at his suggestion, and afterwards cut off his head. Others, mentioned in the sermon on the mount, went still farther: they even prophesied and wrought miracles, (Matt. vii. 22;) yet Jesus never knew, that is, never acknowledged them for his children, or disciples; and will never receive them to his glory, because they never departed from iniquity. On the contrary, they shall be banished into "outer darkness." Thus, those who were first in respect of privilege, were last in respect of salvation, or rather utterly excluded from it.

But to revert again to the question with which we set out—"Are there few that be saved?" Yes: few indeed, compared with those who profess to be so. From those who profess the Christian name, which are yet altogether vastly inferior to those who do not, we must subtract the ignorant and self-deceived, the fearful and unbelieving, the hypocritical and false professors, whose object is any thing but the salvation of their souls, and alas! how few remain! And yet when these few are collected from every age, from Adam to the end of the world; from every country of Asia, Africa, Europe, and America; from every denomination of those who profess the Christian name, then shall they truly form "a great multitude, which no man can number." Rev. vii. 9.

Ver. 31—35. Herod threatens the life of Jesus. Jesus laments over Jerusalem.—The Herod here mentioned was the tetrarch of Galilee, in whose territories Jesus now was sojourning; but the Pharisees bore so little kindness to our Lord, that we are compelled to refer to some other motive, to account for this communication. Doddridge suspects that

Ver. 11. A spirit of infirmity.—It is generally supposed that this woman was a demoniac, but we see no proof of this. A spirit of infirmity or weakness no more implies it than "a spirit of fear," 2 Tim. i. 7, "of slumber," Rom. xi. 8, or "of jealousy," Num. v. 14. To us it appears to mean no more, than some great weakness which had long bent her double.

Ver. 15. Thou hypocrite! doth not each one, &c.—See Mat. xii. 11.

Ver. 24. Strive to enter, &c.—Literally, agonize, because the time is near when the master of the house shall shut to the door; when probation having closed, agonizing will be in vain. The force of this passage is lost by a wrong punctuation. It should be punctuated so as to read thus: "for many, I say 32 And he said unto them, Go ye, and tell that [f] fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be [g] perfected.

33 Nevertheless I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem.

34 O [h] Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!

35 Behold, [i] your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, [j] Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

CHAPTER XIV.

g Ne.8.10, 12.

5 And answered them, saying, [c] Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fall into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath day?

6 And they could not answer him again to these things.

7 ¶ And he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms; saying unto them,

8 When [d] thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him;

9 And he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

10 But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

11 For [e] whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

12 ¶ Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy [f] rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee.

13 But when thou makest a feast, call the [g] poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

Herod employed the Pharisees to make this report, with a view to drive Jesus out of Galilee, where his long residence had given him great uneasiness; though, at the same time, the ill will he had gained by the murder of John, made him afraid to lay hands upon him. Jesus seems to have understood this somewhat in the light of a message, by his sending back an answer: Go, and tell that fox. We all know the character of the fox (both eastern and western) to be a compound of cunning and of cruelty: yet Jesus, knowing both when and where he was to suffer, could entertain no fear of the time being shortened; and therefore bids him defiance for the present, knowing that (as every prophet) he was immortal till his work was done. Tell him, said he, that "I cast out demons to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected;" meaning, that in a few days his work would be done in Galilee, and then he must go to Jerusalem to suffer.

But we find Jesus here anticipating what he afterwards repeated with tears, (ch. xix. 42—44,) the sad destruction both of Jerusalem and the Jews, which they were now hastening upon themselves by their infidelity; an event which in no point of view could he contemplate without anxiety and pain. He was a man, and could be indifferent to no human sufferings. He was a Jew, and loved his country; nor could he, as a prophet, look forward to its unexampled miseries without agony and distress. He was a Saviour, and saw, not only the temporal misery of which we know, but he looked into the invisible world, and saw thousands of immortal souls, enwrapped in the blackest guilt, rushing headlong into the eternal world. O Jerusalem! the blindness of thy Scribes and Pharisees, the madness of thy priests and zealots, is preparing for thee the cup of divine vengeance.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—14. Jesus dining on the sabbath day with a Pharisee, cures a man of the dropsy, and delivers a lecture on humility.—The first remark which offers itself to our notice is, that the sabbath ought not to be considered as a fast-day; nor is it unlawful for a minister to dine with his people on a sabbath, though in present circumstances it may often be very inconvenient. It should seem too, by ver. 8, that this was at a wedding, the festivities of which, we learn from the instance of Sampson, lasted seven days, (Judges xiv. 12,) and consequently always included a sabbath. On this sabbath, it should seem, this Pharisee, who appears to have been a ruler, or magistrate, and perhaps a member of the Sanhedrim, was desirous to obtain the company of our Lord; probably induced to this by the fame of his preaching and his miracles, though others of the sect who were present, evidently sought to entrap him in his conversation. Jesus, who could read their hearts, could not be ignorant of their motives; but it is probable he might have gathered their design from their conversation, and therefore, in answer to some of their observations, put the question, "Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath day?" having at the same time before him a dropsical subject, on whom he designed to exercise his miraculous power, and who might probably be one of the Pharisee's domestics, as it is not very likely that the diseased poor would be suffered to break in upon their festivity.

Feeling, however, the weakness, either of their cause or their talents, to enter into controversy with a prophet, as our Lord was now generally considered, they remained silent; and Jesus taking hold of the man, probably to show the miserable condition he was in, immediately healed and dismissed him; observing, as he had repeatedly done before, that a man was better than an ox or an ass; and none of them would have the inhumanity to refuse assistance to a domestic animal, who had fallen accidentally into a pit on the sabbath day.

Our Lord now turns the attention of the company to another subject, with a view to correct two great evils, which on the present, and doubtless many other occasions, he had observed. First, he reproves the eagerness and perhaps rudeness, with which many of them crowded toward the head of the table, that they might obtain the uppermost seats, and most honourable places, recommending an opposite conduct to his disciples. 2. He censures the principle on which the guests had been selected; the persons invited being not those who might need a feast, but those who were thought likely to return it: a principle, we believe, still acted upon pretty universally. "When (said he) thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind." As if he had said, "Let the object of thy future feasts be neither interest nor ostentation; but benevolence and charity." O how few are the Christians who act on this principle!

This brings our Lord to his favourite topic, which was un-unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able, when once the master," &c. This gives great emphasis to the direction to strive now, for it may soon be too late.

Ver. 32. Tell that fox.—[This was probably Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee, who is described by Josephus as a crafty and incestuous prince, with which the character given him by our Lord, and the narratives of the Evangelists, exactly coincide.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1. One of the chief Pharisees.—Campbell, "One of the rulers, who was a Pharisee." Some think he was a member of the Sanhedrim: all agree that he was a magistrate, and a man of rank, who had probably a country house in Galilee.

Ver. 2. A certain man before him which had the dropsy.—Campbell, "A man who had a dropsy stood before him."

Ver. 7. The chief rooms.—Doddridge renders it, "The chief seats;" Campbell, "The higher places." The company were all doubtless in one room.

Ver 8. Sit not down in the highest room—Or place.—[That there were among the Jews of these times many disputes about seats at banquets, we learn both from Josephus and the Rabbins; nor were these matters unattended to by the Greeks and Romans. Similar admonitions to this of our Lord also occur in the Rabbinical writers. Rabbi Akiba said, Go two or three seats lower than the place that belongs to thee, and sit there till they say unto thee, Go up higher; but do not take the uppermost seat, lest they say unto thee, Come down: for it is better they should say unto thee, Go up, go up, than they should say, Go down, go down. See Schoettgen.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Call the poor.—Dr. Pococke mentions, that in the East they sometimes admit the poor to their tables. In his account of an entertainment made by an Egyptian magistrate, each, when he had done eating, retired, and others in succession came, till at last the poor came, and "eat up all." The Arabs also, when they kill a sheep, dress the whole, and call in their neighbours and the poor, till all is consumed: for they never set by meat that has been brought to table. Thus the sequel of the parable is quite in harmony with oriental manners. Orient. Cust. No. 450.

14 And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

15 ¶ And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, Blessed [b] is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

16 Then said he unto him, A [i] certain man made a great [j] supper, and bade many:

17 And sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for [k] all things are now ready.

18 And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The [l] first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19 And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20 And another said, I have [m] married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21 So that servant came, and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being [n] angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the [o] streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the [p] poor, and the maimed, and the [q] halt, and the blind.

22 And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and [r] yet there is room.

23 And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel [s] them to come in, that my house may be filled.

24 For I say unto you, That [t] none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.

25 ¶ And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and said unto them,

26 If any man come to me, and [u] hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life [v] also, he cannot be my disciple.

27 And [w] whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.

questionably humility. "Humility," says Mr. Robert Hall, "is the first-fruit of religion. In the mouth of our Lord there is no maxim so frequent as the following: Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Religion, and that alone, teaches absolute humility, by which I mean (adds Mr. H.) a sense of our absolute nothingness in the view of infinite greatness and excellence. That sense of inferiority which results from the comparison of men with each other, is often an unwelcome sentiment, forced upon the mind, which may rather embitter the temper than soften it: that which devotion impresses, is soothing and delightful. The devout man loves to lie low at the footstool of his Creator, because it is then he attains the most lively perceptions of the divine excellence, and the most tranquil confidence in the divine favour. In so august a presence, he sees all distinctions lost, all beings reduced to the same level; he can look at his superiors without envy, and his inferiors without contempt; and when from this elevation he descends to mix in society, the conviction of superiority, which must in many instances be felt, is a calm inference of the understanding, and no longer a busy, importunate passion of the heart."

Ver. 15—24. The remark of a Pharisee leads our Lord to introduce the subject of the great Gospel feast.—One of the Pharisees hearing, and perhaps applauding our Lord's observations on public feasts, seems to wish to carry the conversation farther on the same subject, and therefore adds, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." Bread being, as we call it, "the staff of life," was used by the Jews for food in general; and doubtless he meant, "Blessed are they that shall feast in the kingdom of God;" but, whether by the kingdom of God he meant the kingdom of Messiah on earth, or the enjoyments of another world, is not so clear: we believe, however, the expression was generally used by the Jews in reference to the former, and therefore forms a more pertinent introduction to our Lord's parable, which now demands our notice.

The Prophet Isaiah often represents the blessing of Messiah's kingdom under the notion of a feast—"a feast of fat things," and of "wine on the lees well refined." (Isa. xxv. 6.) It is a feast also for the poor, for men are invited to partake of it, "without money and without price." (Chap. lv. 1.) The first invitation was given by the prophets of the Old Testament. It was repeated by the Baptist, and afterwards by the Apostles and the seventy disciples; and even by our Lord himself, the master of the feast. This was at the hour of supper, and the message ran in these terms—"Come, for all things are now ready." But the persons invited "all with one consent began to make excuse"—such excuses as persons might be supposed to make, who have no inclination to the feast. The first said, "I have bought a piece of ground"—a field for instance, either for cultivation or for building; and he who seems to have been fool enough to buy it before he had seen it, is now so anxious to go to see it, that he not only loses his supper, but risks the displeasure of that great Lord by whom he had been invited. A second, somewhat wiser, bargained for five yoke of oxen, on the condition that he should have the opportunity to prove them, and must needs fix this for the time of trial. The third has a reason still more insurmountable: he has married a wife, and therefore "cannot come." Thus business and pleasure are the great impediments to religion. "Little things" and "lawful things," as Mr. Henry remarks, may impede our salvation. With the world in general, every thing is of more importance than the soul!

But "the Master of the house"—the God of Israel—"is angry"—and why so? 1. Because of the immense expense he had been at to provide the feast—"He spared not his own Son, but freely gave him up for us all!" 2. Because of the pains he has taken to invite his guests—prophet after prophet—messenger after messenger hath he sent—"rising up early and sending them," as the expression is, Jer. vii. 25. 3. He is angry, "being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." (Mark iii. 5.) He who knows all the consequences trembles on their behalf, who are themselves insensible to danger. He who wept over Jerusalem weeps over sinners, both Jews and Gentiles, and pathetically exclaims—"O, if thou hadst known, in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace!"

But shall God be disappointed? Shall all his preparations be in vain? Ah, no! if Jews will not partake his feast, he will invite the Gentiles; and if they refuse, at least the greater part of them, he will send out servants that shall compel at least so many to come in, that his house may be filled, and his provision not be made in vain. But here a very grave inquiry presents itself—How shall we compel sinners to come in to partake of this feast? To this the Gospel and common sense give but one answer—by argument and entreaty. These are the only means which God's messengers are allowed to employ; but he has other means, and we conceive a farther reference may be here intended to the almighty and overwhelming influences of God's Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, when that important promise to Messiah was fulfilled: "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." (Ps. cx. 3.) The same grace is still omnipotent, and we hope for a day wherein it shall be again poured out with the like effect. But as to coercing the consciences of men by human authority, we agree with the great and amiable Fenelon, in his "Directions for the conscience of a King."—"Above all things, never force your subjects to change their religion. No human power can invade the impenetrable recesses of the human heart. Force can never convince men; it can only make them hypocrites. . . . . Allow to all legal toleration, not in approving all as indifferent; but in suffering with forbearance that which God suffers, and in endeavouring to reclaim men by mild persuasion."

Before we close this exposition, it may be necessary to remark the character of the guests which are finally collected to partake of this feast; they are "poor, and maimed, and halt, and blind,"—a description morally explained, including every class of sinners, Rev. iii. 17; and the situations in which they are found may point to the two great objects of Missionary exertion: those in "the streets and lanes of the city," may describe the objects of home missionary exertion; those at a distance, in "the highways and hedges," the objects of foreign missions.

Ver. 25—35. The consequences of becoming Christ's disciple.—Nothing, perhaps, creates so much dissension in families, as when any of them openly change their religion—especially if it be for the better; for, unhappily, the interests of er-

Ver. 18. With one consent.—So Beza and Doddridge; but Campbell, "Without exception!" and Hammond, "Presently."

Ver. 23. Compel them.—After adverting to the influence of God's grace, the Rhemish translators add, "St. Augustin also referreth this compelling to the penal laws which Catholic princes do justly use against heretics and schismatics, proving that they who are by their former profession in baptism, subject to the Catholic church, and are departed from the same after sects, may and ought to be compelled into the unity and society of the universal church again;" and that "not only by gentle means, but by just punishment also." As to the "just punishment" of burning heretics for their conversion, we hope it is too universally exploded to be restored; and as to the right of burning protestants from the consideration of their having been baptized, it will require both higher authority than Augustin's, and much better logic than he makes use of, to prove it. We admit, indeed, that he was a great and good man, but wofully in the dark on the doctrine of toleration! a doctrine understood by few fathers, or reformers, and which Cranmer himself learned only at the stake.

Ver. 26. Hate—i. e. regard with less affection

28 For which of you, intending [x] to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

CHAPTER XV.

1 The parable of the lost sheep: 8 of the piece of silver: 11 of the prodigal son.

THEN [a] drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him.

2 And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, and eateth [b] with them.

3 ¶ And he spake this parable unto them, saying,

4 What [c] man of you, having a hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep [d] which was lost.

7 I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which [e] need no repentance.

8 ¶ Either what woman having ten [f] pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?

9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.

10 Likewise, I say unto you, [g] there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth ror and of sin too often operate more forcibly on the human mind than those of virtue and religion; in consequence of which the desertion of any persons from the religion of their ancestors alarms their friends, far more than we are wont to be alarmed by a desertion from Christian truths and practice. In these words, however, there is thought to be an allusion to the case of proselytes to the Jewish religion, concerning whom Dr. Jennings informs us, that "When proselytes were received into the Jewish Church, the bond of natural relation between them and their (heathen) kindred was considered as dissolved. (See Ps. xlv. 10.) To this may be added, Tacitus, in his character of the Jews, having mentioned their custom of circumcision as adopted by proselytes, adds, "They then quickly learn to despise the gods, to renounce their country, and to hold their parents, children, and brethren, in the utmost contempt."

It is most certain, however, that the term hate must not be taken absolutely; ("For no man ever hated his own flesh;" Ephes. v. 29;) but as it is explained by St. Matthew, (chap. x. 37,) "He that loveth his father and mother more than me, is not worthy of me." If it be true that our attachment to objects should bear a proportion to their intrinsic excellence, then all our love to creatures should be as nothing compared to what we owe to the "supreme good—the eternal fair."

It is added, and "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple;" in which expression is an evident allusion to the cruel death which our Lord sustained. Having himself "endured the cross, despising the shame," (Heb. xii. 2,) he expects all his disciples to follow his example; that is, "to go forth without the camp bearing his reproach." (Heb. xiii. 13.)

Such being what our heavenly master expects from us, let all, then, who enter upon a Christian profession, seriously "count the cost," whether they are prepared to labour heartily in his service, or to endure reproach and persecution for his sake, or it were better never to assume the name of Christian. To illustrate this doctrine, our Lord supposes two cases, the one of a certain lord (as we understand it) who begins to build a tower to defend his patrimony from hostile hordes, but is obliged to leave it unfinished, and therefore useless, because he wants the means of its completion; and thus he becomes exposed to general contempt and ridicule. The other case is that of some petty monarch, who is assailed by a neighbouring power with a superior force, and who therefore wisely sends forth an embassy to negotiate peace before things come to an extremity. So let every "man count the cost" before he enters his name as Christ's disciple; and let him not lay the foundation of a Christian profession, unless he be prepared to part with all, if necessary, to complete the structure. Or, let no man engage in the Christian warfare, unless he secures on his side that power which alone is equal to the victory. It were better even to give up the contest, and compromise with the enemy, than to carry on the warfare without any just hope of succeeding.

What is said in the close of this chapter with respect to salt which has lost its savour, has been already explained on Mat. v. 13. All that is here necessary is to show its connexion with the context, which we understand thus:—If we engage in Christ's service, it must be with all our hearts, or it avails nothing. A heartless, wavering, undecided profession, is as insipid as salt which has lost its savour, and which is neither fit for the land, nor for the dung heap, but only to be thrown away as utterly useless and good for nothing.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—10. The parables of the lost sheep, and of the piece of silver.—Whether our Lord supped with any company, which the Pharisees were pleased to denominate sinners, (probably meaning Gentiles,) on the evening after he had dined with the wealthy Pharisee; or whether it was on some other occasion, we know not, nor is it material to inquire. We know that the Pharisees seldom thought any one fit to associate with, but their own party; and we know also that our Lord preferred penitent publicans, sinners, and harlots, before self-righteous hypocrites. Moreover, he frequently inculcates upon them this obvious and important truth, that he was sent—not to call the righteous, as they professed to be, but sinners to repentance; for (as he also told them) "the whole need not a physician, but those only that are diseased:" it would therefore be throwing away both time and labour to attempt the conversion of persons so good and holy as they considered themselves to be—"Stand by, for I am holier than thou!"

But to attend to the parables before us. A sheep-owner having a flock of a hundred sheep feeding in the pastures of the desert, and missing one only, flies to seek it in the adjoining mountain, and having found it, naturally testifies more joy in that than in all the flock which had not strayed. So a woman, having ten pieces of silver, and losing one, seeks it with unwearied diligence, and having found it, calls together her female friends and neighbours to rejoice with her; not, surely, over what she had not lost, but over what it had cost her so much trouble and anxiety to recover. So there is joy in heaven, not over spotless angels that never sinned, but over sinners of the human race brought back to God. This joy is said to be in heaven, in the presence of the angels; but what share the angels take in it is not distinctly stated. In the first place, God himself is represented as rejoicing with singing over his redeemed ones; (Zeph. iii. 17;) and when God is pleased to communicate to his celestial hosts, whether saints

Ver. 34. Salt is good.—[Common salt, or muriate of soda, consists of soda in combination with muriatic acid, and is for the most part an artificial preparation from sea water, though found in some countries in a solid and massive state. That it might lose its strength, we have proof from Maundrell, who states, that in the Valley of salt he broke a piece which had been exposed to the rain, sun, and air, and it had perfectly lost its savour.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 4. Leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness—Or desert. It is certain that in many parts, commonly called desert, in Judea, and even Arabia, there are spots of very fertile pasture, which, as they are not private property, answer to our commons, to which any who please may lead their flocks. Compare Mat. xviii. 12, and note.

Ver. 7. Just persons, which need no repentance.—As there is "not a man upon earth that sinneth not," Eccles. vii. 20, so there can be none who strictly speaking, "need no repentance:" but as our Lord is arguing with the Jews upon their own principles, he may fairly be supposed to allude to those "who trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others." Luke xviii. 9.—The Saviour's language in this is exceedingly ironical—as elsewhere, the whole need not a physician, &c.; I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. The Saviour teaches, that there is more joy in heaven over one true penitent, than over any number of self-righteous men, who, according to their own estimate of themselves, need no repentance. There is no joy in heaven over "that generation who are pure in their own eyes, but who have never been washed from their wickedness."

Ver. 9. Her friends.—The Greek is feminine, meaning female friends.

11 ¶ And he said, A certain man had two sons:

12 And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his [p] living.

13 And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine [t] in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks [j] that the swine [k] did eat: and no man gave unto him.

17 And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

18 I [l] will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee,

19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

20 And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way [m] off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against [n] heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

22 But the father said to his servants, Bring [o] forth the best robe, and put it on him, and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet:

23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry:

24 For [p] this my son was [q] dead, and is alive [r] again; he was [s] lost, and is found. And they began to be merry.

25 Now his elder son was in the field: and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and [t] dancing.

26 And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant.

27 And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28 And he was [u] angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and entreated him.

29 And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years do I [v] serve thee, neither transgressed [w] I at any time thy commandment: and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends:

30 But as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he said unto him, Son, thou art [x] ever with me, and all that I have is thine.

32 It was meet [y] that we should make merry, and be [z] glad: for [a] this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found.

or angels, that in which he takes delight, there can be no doubt but they must rejoice also, and tune their harps and voices to songs of gratitude and praise.

Ver. 11–32. The parable of the Prodigal Son.—Among the Hindoos it is not only customary, as Mr. Halhed (in his Code of Gentoo Laws) informs us, for a father to divide his inheritance among his children in his lifetime, but the sons can, if they unite, insist on it. How far such a custom might be known among the Jews we are unable to ascertain; but as our Lord's parables are always in harmony with the laws and customs of the times, we have no doubt but something of the kind, at least occasionally, obtained.

As to the interpretation, that this parable may have a primary reference to the Jews and Gentiles, we shall not dispute; the former boasting themselves of having adhered to the worship of the one true God, and the latter having ran into all the sins and follies of promiscuous and multifarious idolatry, until at last they were reduced to the extreme of moral poverty and wretchedness. We must confess, however, that we consider the design of our Lord as more general, and much in harmony with that of the two short parables preceding, namely, to show the readiness with which the Almighty receives all true penitents on their returning to him.

"The interesting parable before us, (says Mr. Ward, late Missionary at Serampore,) relates the history of a profligate youth brought to repentance. After obtaining his fortune, he wanders from home, and wastes it in riotous living. Thus do men abuse divine mercies, and devote their time, their strength, their faculties, to the service of the great destroyer. Reduced to want, the prodigal is driven to extremity. And thus God frequently afflicts men in order to humble them, and bring them to themselves: that is, to know their state, and the ruin that must follow—I perish with hunger! Sinking almost into despair, the prodigal bethinks himself of his father's house, and of the happiness of those who are even servants there. When the sinner is thus awakened, he is drawn by the Divine Spirit to look toward an injured and forsaken, though merciful God; and he resolves to try the divine goodness—I will arise, and go to my Father. He not only resolves, but acts up to his resolution. When the returning prodigal was seen yet a great way off, but in the act of returning, the father's bowels yearn over him, and he runs to meet him, and falls on his neck, and kisses him. How is the tender mercy of God here set forth! What encouragement to return, notwithstanding all that a guilty conscience and unbelief may suggest! The sinner brings with him a broken heart, a sense of his errors and of his unworthiness; and the father buries all in immediate, in everlasting oblivion. He puts on him the garment of salvation, the robe of righteousness, and all heaven rings with joy. A soul is rescued from ruin, made capable of happiness, and the divine mercy is eminently glorified."

We must not, however, leave this parable without noticing the conduct of the elder brother, in which we find a lively description of the proud and self-righteous Pharisees. At the time of the prodigal's return, his brother appears to have been at his labours in the field; and the first intimation he receives of it is by the sound of music and of dancing; but had it been the music of angels, it would have afforded no pleasure to him when he came to find the cause. The first thing which here strikes us is, the different style in which these brothers address their common parent. "Father, (says the penitent,) I have sinned against heaven and before thee." He becomes now sensible that he had not only offended his earthly father, but his heavenly; and the penitence of a prodigal can never be depended on till he becomes sensible of his sin against God, as well as his deficiency of filial duty. As to the father, he is represented as every way amiable and respectable, but he is unhappy in his children. The one profligate, the other proud and haughty: but both disobedient. "This thy son!" said the elder as disowning him for a brother, however the father might own him as a son. And then he complains that his father, while he had made this rejoicing for his younger son, had shown no testimony of regard for what he was pleased to consider his own meritorious services. This was exactly the case with the Scribes and Pharisees. "This man (said they) receiveth sinners, and eateth with them;" but, as for us, he never sits down with us but to reprove us.

The tenderness of the father is no less conspicuous toward the elder than the younger son. He does not say, as he might have done, "I have a right to do as I will with my own," or threaten to disinherit the angry murmurer; but he attempts to conciliate him by gentle reasoning, as if he had said, "Consi-

Ver. 12. His living.—Rather, "a living," or the means of livelihood to each. It appears, however, that the elder son did not take his share of the property, but left it in his father's hands, in consequence of which he was considered as the heir of all at his father's death. See ver. 31.

Ver. 15 To feed swine.—This, to a Jew, must be a most degrading and mortifying employment.

Ver. 16 With the husks.—It may be recollected that this was in a time of scarcity.

Ver. 19 Thy hired servants.—We should lay the accent on the pronoun thy; he had been a hired servant in a strange land; he now begs only to fill the like capacity in his father's house.

Ver. 22, 23. Bring forth the best robe.—There is no need to allegorize these circumstances particularly. The penitent prodigal came home naked, and was clothed; hungry, and was fed; and in both cases bountifully. He was clothed in the best robe in his father's wardrobe, and fed with the fatted calf. These preparations show that he was to be received, not as a servant, but a son.

Ver. 24. And they began to be merry—Namely, with music and dancing, both which were doubtless hired, dancers being professionally employed on these occasions, as mourners were at funerals.

Ver. 25. Now his elder son.—By the unamiable and selfish character of the elder son, the Saviour portrays an admirable and exact picture of the Pharisees. They must have been blind indeed not to have "perceived that he spake of them."

Ver. 29. Lo these many years...neither transgressed I.—"I fast twice in the week, I give tithes," &c. (chap. xviii. 12.,) is in the same spirit. A kid Appears to have been considered as a delicacy, perhaps equal to a lamb. See Le. v. 6.

Ver. 32. Was dead, and is alive again.—A life of sin, is a spiritual death.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The parable of the unjust steward. 14 Christ reproveth the hypocrisy of the covetous Pharisees. 19 The rich glutton, and Lazarus the beggar.

AND he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

2 And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy [a] stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

3 Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed.

4 I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses.

5 So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6 And he said, A hundred [b] measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, A hundred [c] measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore.

8 And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the [d] children of light.

9 And I say unto you, Make [e] to yourselves friends of the [f] mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

10 He [g] that is faithful in that which is [h] least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous [f] mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?

12 And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?

13 No [h] servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

14 ¶ And the Pharisees also, who [i] were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him.

15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves [j] before men; but God [k] knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed [l] among men is abomination in the sight of God.

16 The [m] law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached and every man presseth into it.

17 And [n] it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.

18 Whosoever [o] putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery.

der, son, it was meet that we should rejoice, for thy lost brother (whom, probably, he had lamented with much hypocrisy) is now found: and he whom we had considered as long since dead—behold, he is now alive! Besides, what is it to bestow a calf or a garment on such an occasion? Thou art always with me, and if thou dost not forfeit it by thy rebellion, remember thou art the eldest son, and all that I have is thine."

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—12. The parable of the unjust steward.—This chapter is quite detached from the preceding, and we know nothing of the occasion of this parable being delivered. It gives us an insight, however, into the character of oriental stewards, by no means to their advantage. This man had been accused of neglect, and wasting of his master's property; but it appears he was also unfaithful and dishonest. He therefore forms a combination with his master's tradesmen to defraud him, and secure his own interest. The bills here alluded to were evidently not analogous to our bills of parcels, but rather bonds, or promissory notes, which this unfaithful steward having under his care, allowed his master's debtors to exchange for others of only half the value, on condition (understood at least) that they should afford him an asylum when he became destitute.

This parable has been particularly objected to by infidel writers, as countenancing the villany of the unjust steward, because he is commended by our Lord; but this is a gross mistake. It is not our Lord, but the lord or master of the servant, who expresses his commendation; not, we may be sure, of the villany, but of the policy and prudence of the villain. In the next verse, indeed, Jesus improves the incident by setting before his disciples an example, in this respect only, worthy of their imitation, and exhorting them to make a similar provision for another and better world, by so improving their earthly riches as to lay up treasures in that world whither they are going. (See Mat. vi. 19, 20.)

It is perfectly true, as Dr. Doddridge remarks, that "nothing can be more contrary to the genius of the Christian religion, than to imagine that our Lord would exhort men to lay out their ill-gotten goods in works of charity, when justice required that they should make restitution." Yet there are many cases, in which ill-gotten wealth cannot be returned to the persons from whom it has been obtained, as in the case of trade, legacies, and hereditary possessions. The eloquent Saurin, adverting to this parable in his Sermon on Almsgiving, says, "I recollect an epitaph said to be engraven on the tomb of Atolus of Rheims, 'He exported his fortune before him into heaven by his charities: he is gone thither to enjoy it.' Happy he who has a right to such an epitaph!"

In the close of this parable our Lord adds, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much," &c. that is, where there is a principle of grace in the heart, it will lead persons to be uniformly diligent and faithful in the improvement of whatever talents they may be intrusted with; and those who neglect to improve their talents from the consideration of their being of minor importance, would be equally negligent of greater. What is added, "Who shall give you that which is your own?" seems best explained by the parable of the talents, (Mat. xxv. 14—30,) where we find the one talent which had been totally neglected and misimproved by its possessor, is presented as a reward to him who had received the five talents and had improved them—it was given to him as his own. Our Lord then repeats several things delivered in his Sermon on the Mount, and on other occasions, respecting the impossibility of serving those opposite masters, God and Mammon; the one always forbidding what is required by the other. But these things have been already noticed.

The Pharisees, who were covetous as well as hypocritical, hearing all these observations, derided the holy preacher who delivered them, and brought upon themselves severer admonitions. "Ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts!"

the conversion of a sinner is of course a renewed life, or, in figurative terms, "life from the dead." Compare 1 Ti. v. 6, with Ro. xi. 15.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 2. No longer steward.—He appears, however, to have had time given him to wind up his accounts, which was employed in the artifice here related.

Ver. 3. I cannot dig—That is, I cannot work as a labourer, in the cultivation of the soil; the term not being confined to the use of the spade. The expression was proverbial among the Greeks, and perhaps the Jews.

Ver. 6. A hundred measures of oil.—The Greek Batus answers to the Hebrew Baths, or ephahs, explained by our translators to contain 9 gallons 3 quarts each; but by Bishop Cumberland, little more than 7 and a half gallons.

Ver. 7. A hundred measures of wheat.—This is dry measure, answering to the cor or chomer of the Jews, which in our margin is valued at 14 bushels and a pottle; or, according to more modern authorities, little more than eight bushels, Winchester measure. Doddridge supposes the measures of oil and wheat to be of nearly equal value.

Ver. 8. Because he had done wisely.—Doddridge, "Prudently;" Campbell, "Commended the prudence of the unjust steward;" see his note. Abp. Newcome says, "He commended the prudence of the expedient; though he could not but condemn its dishonesty."—Wiser than the children of light. Campbell, "More prudent." A trick of villany very similar to the above is related in Orme. Hadley's Hindostanee Dialogues, (p. 79.) One addressing the Captain says, "Your Sirkar's deputy, whilst his master was gone to Calcutta, established a Court of Justice. Having searched for a good many debtors and creditors, he learned the amounts of their bonds. He then made an agreement with them to get the bonds out of the bondsmen's hands for half the debt, if they would give him one fourth. Thus every debtor for 100 rupees, having given 50 to the creditor, and 25 to this knave, got his bond for 75 rupees. Having seized and flogged 125 bondmen, he has in this manner determined their loans, and has done this business in your name."

Ver. 9. Mammon of unrighteousness.—Mammon is a Syriac word for riches. See note on Mat. vi. 24. "The mammon of unrighteousness," is a Hebraism for unrighteous mammon, or unjust riches, which some explain of ill-gotten wealth; (as this was;) and others of wealth itself, as being deceitful, or unjust to its possessors. Compare ver. 11, where it is contrasted with the true riches.—That when ye fail—That is, at death, when all are required to give up their stewardship.—Everlasting habitations.—Greek, "tents," or "tabernacles;" a term used in contrast with the tabernacles on earth, which are described as temporary and perishing. Compare Heb. xi. 9.

Ver. 13—18. No servant can serve, &c.—These verses contain independent maxims, extracted from our Lord's sermon on the Mount, and other discourses, as below marked. This verse (13) agrees aln. st literally with Mat. vi. 24

Ver. 16. The law and the prophets, &c.—Compare Mat. xi. 12, 13.

Ver. 17. It is easier, &c.—See Mat. v. 18.

Ver. 18. Whosoever putteth away his wife.—Mat. v. 32; xix. 9.

19 ¶ There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20 And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores,

21 And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores.

22 And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's [p] bosom: the [q] rich man also died, and was buried;

23 And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

24 And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my [r] tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

25 But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime [s] receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

26 And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither [u] can they pass to us, that would come from thence.

27 Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28 For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

29 Abraham saith unto him, They [v] have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

30 And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

31 And he said unto him, If [w] they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will [x] they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Christ teacheth to avoid occasions of offence. 3 One to forgive another. 6 The power of faith. 7 How we are bound to God, and not he to us. 11 He healeth ten lepers. 22 Of the kingdom of God, and the coming of the Son of man.

THEN said he unto the disciples, It [a] is impossible but that offences will come: but wo unto him, through whom they come!

2 It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

Ver. 19–31. The parable of the rich man and Lazarus.—A very awful subject now presents itself, a glance into the eternal worlds of bliss and misery.

Two characters are here introduced the one a rich man, splendidly arrayed, and luxuriously fed. In the present world he seems to have enjoyed all that heart could wish. In his lifetime he was "comforted" with all the "good things" which earth affords; and he appears not to have extended a wish beyond them. Ask what he did? His mornings seem to have been taken up in dressing for his company, and his afternoons in feasting with them.

Nor was he by any means the worst of characters. We hear nothing of his oppressing the poor, or defrauding the widow. He was not a hero or a ruffian. We hear no tale of blood or murder. He even did some good works. He suffered a poor beggar to lie at his gate, and solicit alms from his visiters: nay, probably, he even sent him "the crumbs" from his own table, as desired. But let us turn to the beggar, whose very name (Lazarus) implies that he was helpless, and the circumstance of his being laid at the rich man's gate seems to imply that he was daily carried there to beg. He was not only poor and necessitous, but he was diseased—"full of sores," and consequently subject to much pain. It has been doubted whether the circumstance of dogs licking his sores is to be considered as an alleviation or aggravation of his misery; thus much, however, it shows, that his sores were not dressed, nor covered from the cold. But death was sent to his deliverance, and attending angels wafted him to "Abraham's bosom," the Paradise of the Hebrews, where Abraham is placed at the head of the table, and his children round him; but Lazarus was placed next him in his seat of honour and affection, leaning upon his bosom, even as the beloved John leaned on the bosom of our Lord.

But the rich man died also, and was buried, doubtless, according to his rank in life; but his soul entering the eternal world, and no kind angel being in waiting to conduct him to the skies, his sins and follies sunk him into "hell," the receptacle of sinners in another life. There he "lifted up his eyes" to heaven, who seldom or never had lifted them up before, either in praise or prayer. But he was now in torment. He saw Abraham, of whom he had doubtless often heard with apathy, or perhaps scepticism; but, alas! it was afar off, and Lazarus, the beggar, was in his bosom.

Behold, he prayeth—but, perhaps, never having addressed a prayer to God, he dare not presume to raise his thoughts so high: besides, he saw Abraham, and a sensible object before his eyes was calculated (as many argue) to assist the fervour of his devotions. He saw Lazarus also in his bosom, and the gratitude with which the beggar had formerly received the crumbs sent from the rich man's table, might induce him to think he would readily engage in any act of kindness on his behalf. His request also was small; it was not to return to earth, much less to be raised to heaven; but merely for a slight alleviation of his pain, "a drop of water to cool his tongue:" and such, perhaps, he had sometimes ordered to be given to Lazarus with his broken meat, when lying at his gate. But, alas! "the door was shut,"—"a great gulf is fixed," which cannot be repassed. The present life is the day of grace; and, at its termination, God's "mercies are clean gone for ever."

Apb. Tillotson has remarked, that this is the only instance recorded in Scripture of praying to a departed saint, and the application was totally in vain: whatever knowledge the blessed and the miserable might have of each others' situation, they could have no intercourse. No miserable prisoner can escape his dungeon, nor can any compassionate spirit among the blessed stoop to his relief.

The nature of future punishment is a subject so full of terror, that no good man can speculate thereon with pleasure: the only use to be made of this awful doctrine is in the way of warning to ourselves or others, as a fiery beacon to guard us from the entrance to the bottomless pit.

> "Tremble, my soul, and kiss the Son;
> Sinners obey the Saviour's call;
> Else your damnation hastens on,
> And hell gapes wide to meet your fall!"—Watts.

The rich man—once so called—finding he can obtain no mercy for himself, thinks of five younger brethren in his father's house, with whom he, as the elder brother, had been in the habit of carousing; and who having shown the same love of dissipation, and the same neglect of moral and religious duties, he had every reason to fear they might come to the same place of torment. Some, supposing that it must be impossible for a lost spirit to feel any sympathy or affection, conclude that he must have acted solely from the apprehension of their increasing his own misery by their presence. Of this we are not quite certain; but we are fully sensible that sinners who have united in crime, meeting together in a state of punishment, may mutually aggravate each other's sufferings.

But what shall we say of his request to send Lazarus to his father's house? It was made, undoubtedly, under the idea that the testimony of a departed spirit, or a re-animated body from the grave, would afford evidence incontrovertible of the realities of an eternal world, and at the same time make an irresistible impression on the mind. But this does not appear to be founded in a correct knowledge of human nature. No miracles except miracles of grace (so to speak) can reach the heart. We read of many angelical appearances under the Old Testament, but very few of them were to wicked men; indeed, the only one we recollect, that to Balaam, left him as vile a hypocrite as it found him. Nor have we any instance of persons being converted either by apparitions or by the resurrection of the dead, farther than their being convinced thereby of our Saviour's mission. Even some of the Jews who saw Lazarus after his resurrection, would fain have put him to death again. (John xii. 10.) So true is it, that if men "regard not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

It has indeed been maintained (by Bp. Warburton) that

Ver. 19. A certain rich man.—The word Dives being the Latin for rich, has occasioned this to be called the parable of "Dives and Lazarus."

Ver. 21. The crumbs.—See note on Mat. xv. 27.—Licked his sores.—This shows that they "had not been closed, neither bound up," &c. See Is. i. 6

Ver. 23. In hell.—Greek, Hades—answering to the Heb. Sheol, which we have repeatedly explained in reference to both its departments of bliss and misery. Mat. xvi. 18. But we must here confine its import to the world of misery for "he lifted up his eyes, being in torment." Compare Mark ix. 45; Luke vi. 24.

Ver. 29. Moses and the prophets.—See Job xix. 25, &c. Ps. xvi.; xvii. lxxiii., &c. Ec. xii. 7. Is. xxvi. 19–21; li. 6, &c. Our Lord also directs us to look into the Old Testament for the doctrine of "eternal life." See Jn. v. 39.

Ver. 31. If they hear not Moses.—From this answer of Abraham we learn, that the Sacred Writings contain such proofs of a divine origin, that though all the dead were to rise, the proofs could not be more evident, nor the conviction greater; and that to escape eternal perdition, and obtain eternal glory, a man is to receive the testimonies of God, and to walk according to their dictates.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 2. Better that a millstone, &c.—This was a proverbial

7 But which of you, having a servant ploughing or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat?

8 And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink?

9 Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

12 And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar [h] off:

13 And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

14 And when he saw them, he said unto them, Go show [i] yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as [j] they went, they were cleansed.

15 And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified [k] God,

16 And fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a [l] Samaritan.

17 And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?

18 There are not [m] found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19 And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy [n] faith hath made thee whole.

20 ¶ And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not [o] with observation:

21 Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the [p] kingdom of God is [q] within you.

22 ¶ And he said unto the disciples, The [r] days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it.

23 And [s] they shall say to you, See here; or, see there: go not after them, nor follow them.

24 For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of man be in his day.

25 But [t] first must he suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.

26 And as it was [u] in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man.

27 They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all.

28 Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded;

29 But the same day that Lot went out [v] of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

30 Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is [w] revealed.

31 In that day, he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him

Moses nowhere asserts "a future state of rewards and punishments;" yet our Lord has shown that his language necessarily implies it. (See our exposition of Mat. xxii. 15—46:) and in the Psalms and Prophets we have many decisive passages to that effect, some of which we have noticed as we have passed through them. (See note on v. 39.) But the Epistle to the Hebrews affords the most decisive refutation of this dangerous hypothesis, and shows that both Patriarchs and Prophets lived and died in the faith of a resurrection to eternal life. (Heb. xi. 13, &c.)

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 7—19. Against human merit: ten lepers healed, one only of whom turned back to give thanks.—Of all the errors of anti-Christianity, there is no one so opposite to the spirit and temper of Christ, nor so dangerous in its nature and tendency, as the doctrine of human merit. Instead of leading to humility, the great Christian grace, it fosters pride; it even leads men—sinful men—to assume airs of consequence in the sight of God; and yet how natural this is to the human mind, we see in the example of the apostle Peter, Matt. xix. 27; "We have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" True, they had left their fishing-smacks and their nets; but what could Cesar have said more if he had left his throne? To humble this consequence in the disciples, our Lord teaches them that they are nothing superior to the humblest class of domestic servants, even slaves, who on coming from their field-labour are required first to wait upon their master before they are allowed to eat or drink themselves; and after all, they could claim no thanks, as they had done no more than was their duty. This may seem degrading; but is not this the doctrine of the New Testament throughout? "Ye are not your own: for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.)

In our Lord's journey through Samaria, in his way to Jerusalem, (as mentioned chap. ix. 51, 52,) on entering into a village he was met by ten lepers, who, being obliged to live separately without the limits, stood afar off and implored his mercy,—"Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!" When he saw them, and the condition in which they were, he directed them, as on other occasions, to go and show themselves to the priests serving in the temple, and on the way they were all healed; but one only returned to glorify God, and thank the Saviour, and this one, to the disgrace of the Jewish character, was a Samaritan, "an alien from the commonwealth of Israel."

Ver. 6. This sycamine tree.—Doddridge, "Sycamore tree." [The sycamine is probably the same as the shekem, or sycamore, of the ancients, (for a description of which see 1 Ch. xxvii. 28.) and must not be confounded with our sycamore, which is the acer majus, or greater maple. Dr. Shaw says it is one of the most common timber trees of the Holy Land; and that, from having a large and more extensive root than other trees, it is alluded to as the most difficult to be rooted up. It must, however, be observed, that the Syriac, Arabic, and Latin, render it the morus, or mulberry tree, for which Hiller, Celsius, and other learned men, contend.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Will say unto him by and by.—Doddridge, "As soon as he comes in from the field." Campbell, "On his return from the field."—Go and sit down.—Doddridge, "Come in, and sit down." &c.

Ver. 9. I trow not.—Campbell, "I suppose not."

Ver. 18. Save this stranger.—Campbell, "This alien." So the Jews considered the Samaritans from the time of the captivity.

Ver. 20. When the kingdom of God should come?—When, or on what occasion, this question was proposed, is not mentioned; but many of the following remarks correspond with our Lord's discourse in Mat. xxiv., as will be seen by the following references. By "the kingdom of God" is undoubtedly meant the reign of the Messiah.—Cometh not with observation.—Campbell, "Parade." The meaning is agreed to be, "Not with circumstances of outward show and splendour."

Ver. 21—23. Lo here! or, Lo there!—See Mat. xxiv. 23.—Is within you.—Margin and Doddridge, "Among you." So Beza, Raphelius, &c.; and he adds, "Our Lord could not say the kingdom of God was in the Pharisees." Campbell, however, contends, that neither in the Classics, the LXX., or the New Testament, is the Greek (entos) used for among. If we might presume to suggest another rendering, it should be, "in the midst of you;" meaning himself and disciples, the constituents of that kingdom.

Ver. 25. But first must he suffer.—Compare chap. ix. 22.

Ver. 26, 27. As . . . . in the days of Noe (or Noah.)—Compare Mat. xxiv. 37, 38.

Ver. 31. In that day, &c.—[The flat-roofed eastern houses have stairs on the outside, by which a person may ascend and descend without coming into the house; and in walled cities they usually form continued terraces, from one end of the city to the other terminating at the gates; so that one may pass along the tops of the houses and escape out of the city, without coming down into the street. Shaw's Travels.]—Bagster. See Mat. xxiv. 17. and note.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Of the importunate widow. 9 Of the Pharisee and the publican. 15 Children brought to Christ. 18 A ruler that would foll w Christ, but is hindered by his riches. 28 The reward of them that leave all for his sake. 31 He foreshoweth his death, 35 and restoreth a blind man to his sight.

AND he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought [a] always to pray, and not to faint;

2 Saying, There was [b] in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man:

3 And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.

4 And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man;

5 Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6 And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.

7 And shall not God avenge his [c] own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?

8 I tell you that he will avenge them [d] speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall [e] he find faith on the earth?

9 ¶ And he spake this parable unto certain which [f] trusted in themselves [g] that they were righteous, and despised others:

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.

11 The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not [h] as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

12 I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

13 And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote [i] upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

14 I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for [j] every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

15 ¶ And [k] they brought unto him also infants, that he would touch them: but when his disciples saw it, they rebuked them.

16 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

17 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little [l] child shall in no wise enter therein.

18 ¶ And [m] a certain ruler asked him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? none is good, save one, that is, God.

20 Thou knowest the [n] commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother.

21 And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

22 Now when Jesus heard these things, he said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure [o] in heaven: and come, follow me.

23 And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich.

24 ¶ And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How [p] hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

rected, to the priests.] 'As they went they were healed.' Lo! had they stood still they had remained lepers; now they went, they are whole. What haste the blessing makes to overtake their obedience! This walk was required by the very law, if they should have found themselves healed. . . . . The horror of the disease adds to the grace of the cure; and that is so much more gracious as the task is easier: it shall cost them but a walk. It is the bounty of that God whom we serve, to reward our worthless endeavours with infinite requitals. He would not have any proportion between our acts and his remunerations." (Contem. bk. iv. Con. 10.)

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—14. The parables of the unjust judge, and of the Pharisee and publican.—The object of these parables, which appear to have been delivered in continuance of the preceding discourse, is stated to be, that "men ought always to pray, and not to faint;" which certainly does not mean that men should be always employed in exercises of devotion, but that when they feel the want of any blessing from God, they ought never to give up praying for it, (with proper submission to the divine will,) till they obtain it. And this duty is enforced by the example of a poor widow, who applied to a judge or magistrate for justice between her and one who had injured her; and who pressed her cause upon the judge with so much perseverance, that, in the issue, she obtained judgment, though he neither regarded her nor her cause. Now, says our Lord, if this woman prevailed with such a man, merely through importunity, how much more shall you prevail with the Almighty, who waiteth only to be gracious, and delighteth in avenging, that is, in doing justice to the oppressed. Nor is there any inconsistency in saying, that though God long bears with sinners, yet will he avenge his people speedily, or rather suddenly; for it is an old proverb, that "Justice has a leaden foot, but an iron hand:" that is, it advances slowly, but it strikes suddenly. So it was with the Jews; their punishment was long delayed, but struck them like a thunderbolt when it came, and no one saw it coming; for they had no faith in the many warnings which our Lord gave them. This seems to be the import of his question, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith upon the earth?"

The next parable represents the opposite characters of a haughty Pharisee and a penitent publican, in order to reprove the former, and to justify our Lord's attention to the latter. The Pharisee stood by himself, careful to receive no contamination from any publican or sinner that might approach him. He began his prayer with an affectation of piety, thanking God that he was not like other men, and especially the publican which he saw before him; and he concluded with boasting of his abstinence and charity. The former part of his assertion is in direct opposition to the character given of this sect by our Lord, Matt. xxiii. 14, and elsewhere; and, as for CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 3. Avenge me.—Doddridge, "Do me justice;" who adds, 'this is the undoubted import of the phrase."

Ver. 5. Lest . . . . . she weary me.—The original term (by its derivation) implies, as Doddridge remarks, a blow which stuns a person, and knocks them down; i. e. "lest she beats me down by her importunity." So Macknight.

Ver. 25. A camel.—[Some would render a cable; but it may justly be doubted whether Kamelos ever have this sense; the word for a cable, as the Scholiast on Aristophanes expressly affirms, being written Kamilos. This is the reading of a few MSS. but it evidently appears to be a gloss. It was a common mode of expression among the Jews. Hence Rabbi Shesheth said to Rabbi Amram, 26 And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

27 And he said, The [q] things which are impossible with men are possible with God.

28 ¶ Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.

29 And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath [r] left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake,

30 Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life [s] everlasting.

31 ¶ Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and [t] all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

32 For he shall be delivered [u] unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on:

33 And they shall scourge him, and put him to death: and the third day he shall rise again.

34 And [v] they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

35 ¶ And it [w] came to pass, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the way side begging:

36 And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant.

37 And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

38 And he cried, saying, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy [x] on me.

39 And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried [y] so much the more, Thou son of David, have mercy on me.

40 And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto him: and when he was come near, he asked him,

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Of Zaccheus a publican. 11 The ten pieces of money. 28 Christ rideth into Jerusalem with triumph: 41 weepeth over it: 45 driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple: 47 teaching daily in it. The rulers would have destroyed him, but for fear of the people.

AND Jesus entered and passed through [a] Jericho.

2 And behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.

3 And he sought to see Jesus who he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4 And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him: for he was to pass that way.

5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw [b] him, and said unto him, Zaccheus, make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide [c] at thy house.

6 And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7 And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That [d] he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

8 And Zaccheus stood, and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the [e] poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by [f] false accusation, I restore [g] him four-fold.

9 And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forasmuch as he also is a son [h] of Abraham.

10 For [i] the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was [j] lost.

11 ¶ And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was his good deeds, they amounted to an ostentatious abstinence on Mondays and Thursdays, (their fast days,) and a punctilious observance of paying tithes even in herbs: but, this excepted, they included not one moral or religious duty. Love to God, and even charity to the poor, (unless when it could be ostentatiously displayed,) made no part of Pharisaic righteousness. (See ch. xi. 41, 42.) As to the spiritual intent of the divine law, as reaching to the secret imaginations of the heart; of this they appear to have had no idea, and consequently no humbling sense of their own depravity.

But we must glance at the character here placed in contrast: the humble—the dejected publican, (or tax-collector,) who, conscious of his numerous violations of the divine commands, stands afar off, perhaps upon the steps only of the temple, and, smiting his guilty breast, with downcast eyes, and in a suppressed tone of voice, exclaims, "God be merciful to me, a sinner!" He who readeth the characters of men, not in their countenances, but in their hearts, accepts the publican and condemns the Pharisee.

> "The Lord their different language knows,
> And different answers he bestows:
> The humble soul with grace he crowns,
> And on the proud his anger frowns!"—Watts.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—10. The conversion of Zaccheus, the chief publican.—Many of the publicans appear to have been men of property; in gathering for the state they did not forget themselves. We need not wonder, therefore, to find the chief publican—the head tax-gatherer of the district—characterized as rich. But, though rich, his mind was not wholly occupied in getting money. He had heard that a great Prophet had arisen in Israel, and had an earnest desire to see him—not merely from an idle curiosity, as we would hope, but probably from a desire to hear some of his discourses, and see some of his miracles; but, being short of stature, his only chance seemed to be in climbing a tree, which accordingly he did. Jesus, passing by, saw him also, and knowing his heart prepared to receive him, called him down, and desired him to hasten home, and prepare to receive both himself and his disciples. He did so, and received him heartily and joyfully; and frankly owned that, in the course of his profession, he had been guilty of extortion. Where he was sensible of this, he restored four-fold, according to the law; and as there were, doubtless, many cases in the course of his office in which he had been guilty of oppression, he now devotes the half of his present income to the poor, as an evidence of his change of conduct and disposition. And he defers neither his justice nor liberality to his deathbed, as too many do, who desire to retain the whole as long as possible. "Those who defer their gifts to their deathbed, (Bishop Hall remarks,) do as good as say, Lord, I will give thee something when I can keep it no longer. Happy is the man that is his own executor!"

It was of the Pharisees and their adherents, doubtless, that the Evangelist says, that "they all murmured (as they were wont to do) that he was gone to be a guest with a man that was a sinner." Such is the inconsistency of human nature, as if the Son of man were sent to save only those who had not been lost. Jesus, however, acted with perfect consistency. He came "not to call the righteous to repentance;" but when he entered the door of a penitent, he proclaimed, "This day is salvation come to this house."

14 But [n] his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the [o] money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful [p] in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

20 And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin:

21 For I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22 And he saith unto him, Out [q] of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23 Wherefore [r] then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.)

26 For I say unto you, That [s] unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But those mine [t] enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

28 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, he went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.

29 And [u] it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples,

30 Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need [v] of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found even as he had said unto them.

33 And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34 And they said, The Lord hath need of him.

35 And they brought him to Jesus: and they cast their [w] garments upon the colt, and they set [x] Jesus thereon.

36 And as they went, they spread their clothes in the way.

37 And when he was come nigh, even now at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen;

38 Saying, Blessed [y] be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: [z] peace in heaven, and glory in the highest.

39 And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples.

40 And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the [a] stones would immediately cry out.

as it differs in several interesting particulars, we shall give it a distinct consideration. It appears to have been delivered in the house of Zaccheus, in answer to intimations, probably dropped by some of the company, who expected, from the multitude which followed our Saviour, that his kingdom was now about to be established. The parable is not so clear as many, having two aspects, if we may so express it, in one of which is exhibited the rebellious conduct of the Jews, who refused to have Jesus to reign over them, and the other, the negligent conduct of some of his own professed disciples, who took no care to improve the deposit which he had intrusted with them. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." (John i. 11.) They hated him, and would by no means submit to his authority; and, therefore, after he had reckoned with his own confidential servants, he commanded—"Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me"—an allusion, perhaps, to some of the summary executions of which we read in the Old Testament; as, for instance, Agag, whom Samuel slew. (1 Sam. xv. 2, 33.)

But to turn to the other part of the parable; it differs from that of the talents, which were bestowed in different proportions. Here they are supposed to be the same—a pound (or mina) intrusted with each servant for the purposes of trade: but which was variously improved, according to the care and industry of each possessor. And here we may remark, that though our temporal benefits, separately taken, as wisdom, riches, power, &c. are bestowed in great variety; yet, taken collectively, the blessings of Providence are distributed in more equal proportions than is commonly supposed. To one, God gives health and poverty: to another, riches and the gout: and even where sickness attends on poverty, and health on riches, another article may be thrown in, which more than balances the portion: thus, the consolations of religion will more than counterpoise the combined evils in the former case; or, in the latter case, an unhappy temper or a guilty conscience may render health and wealth altogether unavailing to confer happiness, or even comfort.

The parable, however, appears to us to have a particular reference to the gospel ministry, which is described as treasure deposited in earthen vessels; and of which treasure the apostles, and their successors in the ministry, are appointed stewards, and respecting which the utmost fidelity is required. (See 2 Cor. iv. 7. 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2.)

Among these servants there is one who proves totally negligent, or unfaithful to his trust; who, instead of employing his pound like the others, wrapped it in a cloth or napkin; just as a like idle servant in another parable buried his talent in the earth. (Matt. xxv. 25.) And it is observable, that the misconduct in both cases arose from erroneous notions of the divine character; supposing that, as God is the author of all our graces, and all our mercies come from him, that no duty remains with us, either to exercise the one or improve the other. Whatever notion reduces human nature to mere machinery, is

Ver. 12. A certain nobleman, &c.—The similarity of this narrative to the case of Archelaus, who went to Rome to have his kingdom confirmed over his rebellious subjects, has been remarked; but, besides that there is in other respects a great disparity, our Lord appears to us to have exercised a particular degree of caution in avoiding political allusions.

Ver. 13. His ten servants.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Ten of his servants." Ten pounds—Or minas. The mina, on the usual estimate, was equivalent to $14. According to some it is estimated as high as $39.

Ver. 15. The money.—Greek, "the silver." So ver. 23.

Ver. 17. Over ten cities.—This prince being now supposed to be established in his kingdom, distributes the subordinate governments among those of his servants who had proved themselves faithful to their trust, in proportion to their talents and assiduity.

Ver. 26. Unto every one that hath shall be given.—See Mat. xiii. 12, and note.

Ver. 28. He went before—i. e. at the head of his company, to show the readiness with which he met his sufferings. Compare chap. xii. 50.

Ver. 30. Ye shall find a colt tied.—Mat. xxi. 2, mentions an ass and a colt, but the other Evangelists a colt only; but from ver. 7, in Matthew, it seems both were employed.

Ver. 40. The stones would immediately cry out.—Some of the Jews, as appears by the preceding verse, being shocked at what they thought blasphemy

41 ¶ And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over [b] it,

42 Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy [c] day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

43 For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast [d] a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, 44 And [e] shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they [f] shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because [g] thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

45 ¶ And [h] he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

46 Saying unto them, It is [i] written, My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den [j] of thieves.

47 ¶ And he taught [k] daily in the temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him, 48 And could not find what they might do: for all the people [l] were very attentive to hear him.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Christ avoucheth his authority by a question of John's baptism. 9 The parable of the vineyard. 19 Of giving tribute to Cesar. 27 He convinceth the Sadducees that denied the resurrection. 41 How Christ is the son of David. 45 He warneth his disciples to beware of the scribes.

AND [a] it came to pass, that on one of those days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the gospel, the chief priests and the scribes came upon him with the elders,

2 And spake unto him, saying, Tell us, by [b] what authority doest thou these things? or who is he that gave thee this authority?

3 And he answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and answer me:

4 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we say, Of men; all the people will stone us: for [c] they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7 And they answered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

9 ¶ Then began he to speak to the people this parable; A [d] certain man planted a [e] vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time.

10 And at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen, that they should give him of the fruit [f] of the vineyard: but the husbandmen beat him, and sent him away empty.

11 And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12 And again he sent a third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out.

13 Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

14 But when the husbandmen saw him, they alike injurious to the divine character, and hostile to practical religion.

Ver. 41—48. Jesus weeps over Jerusalem.—"We have here (says the excellent Mr. Howe) a compassionate lamentation in the midst of a solemn triumph. Our Lord's approach to Jerusalem at this time, and his entrance into it, as the foregoing history shows, carried with them some face of regal and triumphal pomp; but with such alloys as discovered a mind most remote from ostentation; and led by judgment, not vain glory, to transmit through a dark umbrage [or shadow] some glimmerings of that excellent majesty which both his sonship and mediatorship entitled him unto: a very modest specimen of . . . his kingly state. Such as might rather intimate than plainly declare it, and rather afford an after instruction to teachable minds, than beget a present conviction and dread in the obstinate and unteachable. And this effect we find it had, as is observed by another evangelical historian, who, relating the same matter, how, in his passage to Jerusalem, the people met him with branches of palm trees and joyful hosannas; he riding upon an ass's colt, as princes or judges (to signify meekness as well as state) were wont to do, (Judges v. 10,) tells us, 'These things his disciples understood not at the first; but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him.' (John xii. 26.) . . . . How little he was taken with this piece of state is sufficiently to be seen in this paragraph of the chapter. His mind is much more taken up in the foresight of Jerusalem's sad case; and therefore being come within view of it, (which he might commodiously have in the descent of the opposite hill, Mount Olivet,) 'He beheld the city, it is said, and wept over it.'"

Two things concurred, according to Mr. Howe, to cause this sorrow and these tears, as respected Jerusalem and the Jews. 1. The greatness of the calamity as respected the city and nation, of which some particulars have been stated in our exposition of Matt. xxiv.: and, 2. The lost opportunity of preventing this; "If thou hadst known," &c.; implying that they had, through their perverseness, and the wickedness of their rulers, lost an opportunity of mercy which could never be recovered.

But it has been objected, if Jesus were that divine person whom we represent him, could he not have prevented the calamities which he lamented? and, if so, Why thus passionately lament them? To this we reply, 1. That our Lord Jesus must here be considered in his mediatorial capacity, and his inferior nature, in which he could have no control over the divine decrees. His office was not to alter, but to fulfil them. And, 2. That however, as a man, he might weep, yet, as a sinless man, he could have no will nor desire in opposition to the will of his heavenly Father: "Not my will (said he) but thine be done." And thus hath he taught us also to pray, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," where no consideration of creature happiness can for a moment be put in competition with the divine glory. Hence we find in "the fall of Babylon," so pathetically described by St. John, (Rev. xviii, xix.,) the elders, the mystic animals, and the whole company of the redeemed, say, "Amen, Hallelujah." It is certainly our duty to lament over the sins and miseries of our friends and of mankind; and yet when we see the divine judgments fall upon them, to be silent, as Aaron was, at the death of Nadab and Abihu, (Levit. x. 3;) or to say with the Church, (in Acts xxi. 14,) "the will of the Lord be done."

The circumstances here predicted were certainly, in a most remarkable manner, fulfilled. It is predicted, (verse 43,) "Thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee," &c.; and Josephus says, though it was thought impracticable, yet Titus so animated his soldiers, that in the course of three days he surrounded the city with a wall 39 furlongs in circumference, with 13 castles in its circuit; and by this means all hope was cut off that any Jews within the city should escape. When Titus also had taken the city, and when the temple was burnt, contrary to his wishes, he caused the foundations both of the city and temple to be dug up, and levelled with the ground; and afterwards, as Socrates relates, the whole was so entirely destroyed, that "not one stone was left upon another." (Dodd. Harm. and Jos. Jew. Wars.)

What follows of Jesus casting out buyers and sellers from the temple, is evidently parallel to the relation of Matthew, (xxi. 12, &c.,) and need not be reconsidered; but it is here added, "He taught daily in the temple," at which times also it appears, by the former evangelist, "that the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he healed them." This, however, only enraged his bitter enemies, the chief priests and scribes, who sought means for his destruction, but feared the people, who hung upon his lips with the utmost attention and admiration.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—18. "Men often profess to inquire into the evidences or doctrines of Revelation, when they are secretly determined not to submit to its authority; and are, in fact, only seeking plausible apologies for their infidelity and disobedience. But the fear of man, and regard to reputation, deter them from avowing their real sentiments and purposes. Objectors of this character should be answered with pertinence, brevity, and caution. It is doing them too much honour in general, to enter into a formal controversy with them; the in the multitude, applied to the Lord Jesus to reprove them; but he, instead of censuring, justifies them as fully warranted by the occasion. This is a strong hyberbole, but quite in the Oriental style. See Hab. ii. 11.

Ver. 43. Cast a trench about thee.—Campbell says, "Surround thee with a rampart." [This was literally fulfilled when Jerusalem was besieged by Titus; who surrounded it with a wall of circumvallation in three days, though not less than 39 furlongs in circumference; and when this was effected, the Jews were so enclosed on every side, that no person could escape from the city, and no provision could be brought in. Josephus.]—Baxter.

Ver. 48. Were very attentive.—Literally, they hung upon him hearing; which is beautifully expressive of their earnest attention and high gratification.

reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the [g] heir: come, let [h] us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.

15 So they cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him. What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to [i] others. And when they heard it, they said, God forbid.

17 And he beheld them, and said, What is this then that is written, The [j] stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?

18 Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but [k] on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

19 ¶ And the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that he had spoken this parable against them.

20 And they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that [l] they might take hold of his words, that so they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked him, saying, Master, we know that thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God [m] truly:

22 Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cesar, or no?

23 But he perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye me?

24 Show me a [n] penny. Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, Cesar's.

25 And he said unto them, [o] Render therefore unto Cesar the things which be Cesar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26 And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at his answer, and held [p] their peace.

27 ¶ Then [q] came to him certain of the [r] Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him,

28 Saying, Master, Moses wrote [s] unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

29 There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children, and died.

32 Last of all the woman died also.

33 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.

34 And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which shall be accounted worthy [t] to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36 Neither [u] can they die any more: for they are equal unto the [v] angels; and are the [w] children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

37 Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed [x] at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

38 For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for [y] all live unto him.

39 Then certain of the scribes answering said, Master, thou hast well said.

40 And after that they durst not ask him any question at all.

41 ¶ And [z] he said unto them, How say they that Christ is David's son?

42 And David himself saith [a] in the book of Psalms, The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 43 Till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

44 David therefore calleth him Lord, how is he then his son?

45 ¶ Then in the audience of [b] all the people he said unto his disciples,

46 Beware [c] of the scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and love greetings [d] in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts;

47 Which [e] devour widows' houses, and for a show [f] make long prayers: the same shall receive greater [g] damnation.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Christ commendeth the poor widow. 5 He foretelleth the destruction of the temple, and of the city Jerusalem: 25 the signs also which shall be before the last day. 34 He exhorteth them to be watchful.

AND he looked up, and [a] saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2 And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two [b] mites.

3 And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more [c] than they all:

best way is to address their consciences by apt illustrations, closely applied; and so to detect those corrupt affections or secret sins, which are the real grounds of their dislike to the Bible, but which they endeavour to conceal even from themselves. 'They flatter themselves in their own sight, until their iniquity be found to be hateful.' In this way it may often be shown, that they resemble in pride, perverseness, ingratitude, enmity to God, and aversion to his holy service, those men who murdered the prophets, and crucified the Son of God; in order to establish their own authority and reputation, and to live according to their own ungodly lusts without control. But it behooves every one of us who are favoured with the word and ordinances of God, to inquire whether we make a proper and adequate improvement of our advantages, and act consistently with our professed subjection to the gospel. For awful will be the doom, not only of builders that reject him who is 'the Head-Stone of the corner,' but of those who profess to 'reverence the Son,' and yet render not the fruits of the vineyard in due season."—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—19. "Our gracious Lord particularly notices the small oblations which spring from the love of his name in the hearts of his poor people; because men are apt to despise and discourage them: 'for man looketh at the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh at the heart.' The spiritual mind will not be satisfied except with a city and a temple, the foundations of which cannot be subverted, and the ornaments of which cannot be removed or defaced; foreseeing the time when 'the fashion of this world will pass

CHAP. XX. Ver. 18. Whosoever shall fall, &c.—Dr. Whitby thinks here is an allusion to two different ways of stoning among the Jews; the former by throwing a person down upon a great stone; the other, by letting a stone fall upon him.—[This is an allusion to the Jewish mode of stoning. The place of stoning was twice as high as a man. From the top of this one of the witnesses struck the culprit on the loins, and felled him to the ground: if he died of this, well; if not, the other witness threw a stone upon his heart, &c. Our Lord seems to refer not only to the dreadful crushing of the Jews by the Romans, but also to their general dispersion to the present day.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Show me a penny.—[The image was the head of the emperor; the superscription, his titles. Julius Cesar was the first who caused his image to be struck on the Roman coin; and Tiberius was emperor at this time. This therefore was a denarius of Cesar, and consequently this was expecting the tribute required by the Roman government.]—Bagster.

Ver. 36. Equal unto the angels.—Matthew and Mark say, "as (or like) the angels." Luke's expression is stronger; but we understand it to mean only, that in respect of marriage, they are on equal footing.

Ver. 37. Lord God of Abraham.—[There is a remarkable passage in Josephus, De Maccab. which proves that the best informed among the Jews believed in the immateriality and immortality of the soul, and that the souls of righteous men were in the presence of God in a state of happiness. "They who lose their lives for the sake of God, live unto God, as do Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the rest of the Patriarchs." Not less remarkable is a passage in Shemoth Rabba, "Why doth Moses say, (Ex. xxxii. 13,) Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? R. Abin saith, The Lord said unto Moses, I look for ten men from thee, as I looked for that number in Sodom. Find me out ten righteous persons among the people, and I will not destroy thy people. Thus saith Moses, Behold here am I and Aaron, Eleazar and Ithamar, Phinehas and Caleb, and Joshua; but, saith God, there are but seven, where are the other three? When Moses knew not what to do, he saith, O Eternal God, do thou in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

5 ¶ And [d] as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said,

6 As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which [e] there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

7 ¶ And they asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?

8 And he said, Take [f] heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and [g] the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them.

9 But when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be [h] not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end is not by and by.

10 Then said he unto them, [i] Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.

12 But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into [j] prisons, being brought before [k] kings and rulers for my name's sake.

13 And [l] it shall turn to you for a testimony.

14 Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to [m] meditate before what ye shall answer:

15 For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay [n] nor resist.

16 And [o] ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and [p] some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17 And ye shall be hated [q] of all men for my name's sake.

18 But [r] there shall not a hair of your head perish.

19 In your patience [s] possess ye your souls.

20 And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21 Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22 For these be the days of vengeance, that all [t] things which are written may be fulfilled.

23 But wo unto them [u] that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days! for [v] there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem [w] shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times [x] of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

25 ¶ And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress [y] of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring;

26 Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the [z] powers of heaven shall be shaken.

27 And then shall they see the Son of man coming [a] in a cloud with power and great glory.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption [b] draweth nigh.

29 And [c] he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig tree, and all the trees;

30 When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled.

33 [e] Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away.

34 ¶ And take heed to [d] yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, [e] and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

35 For [f] as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

36 Watch [g] ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted [h] worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to [i] stand before [j] the Son of man.

live who are dead? Yes, saith God. Then, saith Moses, If those that are dead do live, remember Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."}—Bagster.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 5. How it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts.—The gifts here referred to were consecrated and votive gifts, in which Tacitus speaks of the temple as immensely rich.—{The temple was enriched with the gifts of ages, the offerings of kings and emperors, as well as those of the Jews, which were probably displayed conspicuously in the temple, either by being hung up, or otherwise serving to adorn it. See Josephus, who among other offerings, particularly specifies the golden vase presented by Herod.}—B.

Ver. 8. For many shall come.—{Such were Simon Magus, (Ac. viii. 9, 10.) Dositheus the Samaritan, Theudas, when Fadus was procurator, and the numerous impostors who arose when Felix was procurator, who "were apprehended and killed every day."}—Bagster.—And the time draweth near—Namely, when some of these impostors shall appear.

Ver. 9. Not by and by.—Mat. xxiv. 6, "Not yet." Campbell, "Will not immediately follow."

Ver. 10. Nation shall rise.—{This portended the dissensions, insurrections, and mutual slaughter of the Jews, and those of other nations, who resided in the same cities, in which thousands perished, the open wars of different tetrarchies, and the civil wars in Italy between Otho and Vitellius.}—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Earthquakes.—{As that at Crete, Smyrna, Miletus, Chios, Samos, Rome, Laodicea, Hierapolis, Colosse, Campania, and Judea.}—Bagster.

—Fearful sights.—Josephus, in the preface to his history of the Jewish wars, relates, that a star hung over the city like a sword, and a comet continued a whole year; that the people being at the feast of unleavened bread, at the 9th hour of the night, a great light shone around the altar and temple, and continued an hour; that a cow led to sacrifice brought forth a lamb; that just before sunset chariots and armies were seen all over the country fighting in the clouds, and besieging cities, &c. &c.

Ver. 20. Jerusalem compassed with armies—Namely, of the Romans. See Dan. ix. 26, and Matthew's reference thereto, ch. xxiv. 15.

Ver 21 Flee to the mountains.—{Accordingly, when Cestius Gallus came against Jerusalem, and unexpectedly raised the siege, Josephus states, that many of the noble Jews departed out of the city, as out of a sinking ship; and, when Vespasian afterwards drew towards it, a great multitude fled to the mountains. And we learn from Eusebius and Epiphanius, that, at this juncture, all who believed in Christ left Jerusalem, and removed to Pella, and other places beyond Jordan; and so escaped the general shipwreck of their country, that we do not read of one who perished in Jerusalem.}—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Shall fall, &c.—{Those who perished in the siege were 1,100,000, besides vast numbers who were slain at other times and places; and nearly 100,000 were taken and sold for slaves; and their nation has been dispersed in all countries for upwards of 1700 years, while their city has been trodden under foot of the Romans, Saracens, Mamalukes, Franks, and Turks, who possess it to this day.}—Bagster.—Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Some refer this to the end of the time when the Gentiles shall be allowed to oppress the Jews; others to the time when all the nations of the then known world shall be converted to true Christianity, which St. Paul seems to call "the fulness of the Gentiles," Rom. xi. 25, 26. Probably these events may coincide, or nearly so, for nations truly Christian will not oppress the Jews.

Ver. 25. Signs in the sun, &c.—So Mat. xxiv. 8. Josephus mentions several things of this nature in his Jewish wars.

Ver. 32. Till all be fulfilled.—See Mat. xxiv. 34. But we suppose the term all, here, as in many other cases, must not be taken too rigidly. All these things certainly received a partial fulfilment in the destruction of Jerusalem; but we cannot but think many of them have a farther aspect, and will receive their full and final accomplishment only at the day of judgment.

Ver. 34 Overcharged.—Doddridge, "Overloaded by gluttony and drunkenness."

Ver. 37. In the daytime—{Or, "every day," which probably refers to the four last days of his life. He taught all day in the temple, and withdrew every evening, and lodged in Bethany, a town on the eastern declivity of the Mount of Olives.}—Bagster.

the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount [k] that is called the mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The Jews conspire against Christ. 3 Satan prepareth Judas to betray him. 7 The apostles prepare the passover. 19 Christ instituteth his holy supper. 21 covertly foreteileth of the traiter, 24 denieth the reason of the apostles' contention. 32 assureth Peter his faith should not fail. 34 He saith he should deny him thrice. 39 He prayeth in the mount, and sweateth blood, 47 is betrayed with a kiss: 50 he healeth Malchus's ear, 54 he is thrice denied of Peter, 63 shamefully abused, 66 and confesseth himself to be the Son of God.

NOW [a] the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover.

2 And [b] the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people.

3 ¶ Then [c] entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve.

4 And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

5 And they were glad, and covenanted [d] to give him money.

6 And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them [e] in the absence of the multitude.

7 ¶ Then came the day [f] of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.

8 And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare?

10 And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

11 And ye shall say unto the good man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

12 And he shall show you a large upper room furnished: there make ready.

13 And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

14 And [g] when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

15 And he said unto them, [h] With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer:

16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until [i] it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

18 For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19 ¶ And [j] he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

20 Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you.

21 ¶ But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me [k] on the table.

22 And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was [l] determined: but wo unto that man by whom he is betrayed!

23 And they began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

24 ¶ And [m] there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest.

25 And he said unto them, The [n] kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.

26 But [o] ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

27 For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but [p] I am among you as he that serveth.

28 Ye are they which have continued with me in my [q] temptations.

29 And I appoint unto you a [r] kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me;

30 That [s] ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging [t] the twelve tribes of Israel.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 14—30. Our Lord's last Passover, and the institution of his Supper.—The preceding verses inform us, that our Lord sent two of his disciples, Peter and John, to prepare for him the Passover—the last Passover which he was to eat on earth—according to certain directions which he had given. The appointed hour being come, he now sat down, and the twelve apostles with him. And he said unto them, "With desire have I desired;" that is, I have most ardently desired "to eat this passover with you before I suffer. For I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God;" that is, says Dr. Doddridge, "till the institutions of the Gospel shall have perfected those of the law; and the ordinances of both are superseded by the enjoyments of the heavenly world."

During the Paschal Supper, it was customary for the master of the family to take a cup of wine, and after having blessed it, or rather implored the blessing of God upon it, to distribute it among his family: so our Lord distributed this cup of wine among his disciples: but this was not the sacramental cup; for after the passover was closed, he took both bread and wine, and instituted the solemn ordinance of his Supper. On this new institution we refer to Matthew, (chap. xxvi. 26—29,) and shall offer some farther observations hereafter. At present we shall confine our remarks to some parts of this conversation, not before noticed.

Supposing Judas to have left the room, (as seems very probable, see note, verse 21,) Jesus was now addressing the faithful eleven only; and might with great propriety say, "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations" and trials throughout my ministry: and your fidelity shall not go unrewarded. But be not anxious for temporal honours or distinctions, nor dispute who shall be the greatest: but rather imitate me, your Master, who am ever ready to serve and to assist the poorest and the meanest of my followers. Thus, however you may be despised here, when I take possession of my kingdom, thrones also shall be set for you, and ye shall eat

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1, 2.—Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh—i. e. within two days. Mat. xxvi. 2—5.

Ver. 4. Captains.—[These were not military officers, but presidents of the temple. Among the priests who were in waiting in the temple, says Bishop Pearce, some were appointed for a guard to the temple; and over these were commanding officers: both sorts are mentioned by Josephus.]—B.

Ver. 6. In the absence of the multitude.—Doubtless rightly judging, that if he committed such an act of villany, while all the people were hanging with attention on his lips, he should be torn to pieces.

Ver. 7—14. Then came the day—i. e. the first day; as in Mat. xxvi. 17—20.

Ver. 10. Bearing a pitcher.—This little incident is not mentioned by Matthew, but in Mark xiv. 18.

Ver. 13. And found as he had said.—The divine knowledge of Jesus is strikingly apparent in the prediction of such minute circumstances, which could never have been conjectured.

Ver 19. This do in remembrance.—[That the ancient Jews, in celebrating the passover, had in view the sufferings of the Messiah, is evident from Pesachim, quoted by Schoetgen; where, among the five things said to be contained in the Great Hallel, or the hymn composed of several Psalms sung after the paschal supper, one is, the sufferings of the Messiah, for which they refer to Ps. cxvi. 9.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. The hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.—The verb (is) being wanting in the text, has led many to supply the past tense, (was,) supposing that Judas had now left the table. But Mr. Wesley says, "it is evident Christ spake these words before he instituted the Lord's Supper, for all the other Evangelists mention the sop, immediately after receiving which he went out. John xiii. 30. (Nor did he return any more till he came into the garden to betray his Master.) Now this could not be dipped, or given, but while the meat was on the table: but this was all removed before that cup and bread were brought."

Ver. 22. Goeth, as it was determined.—See Acts ii. 23.

Ver. 24—27. There was.—Campbell, "had been," namely, a few days before.—also a contention which of them should be accounted greatest. Compare Mat. xx. 24—28.

Ver. 25. Are called benefactors.—Some think this refers to the title Euergetai, or "benefactors," conferred on the Ptolemies and Seleucidæ: the object is to guard the disciples of Christ against flattering, or being flattered.

Ver. 29. I appoint unto you a kingdom.—The word properly signifies to covenant, or to bestow in virtue of a covenant; and therefore the last clause may properly refer to what divines call the covenant of redemption.

Ver. 30. That ye may eat and drink at my table, &c.—See chap. xiv. 15. 1 Sam. xx. 29, 34. 2 Sam. ix. 7. 1 Kings ii. 7, &c.

A. M. 4033.
A. D. 29.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired [u] to have you, that he may sift [v] you as wheat:

32 But I [w] have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen [x] thy brethren.

33 And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death.

34 And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

35 ¶ And he said unto them, When [y] I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing.

36 Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.

37 For I say unto you, that this that is written [z] must yet be accomplished in me, And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end.

38 And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough.

39 ¶ And [a] he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

40 And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

41 And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, 42 Saying, Father, if thou be [b] willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done.

43 And there appeared an angel [c] unto him from heaven, strengthening him.

44 And [d] being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

45 And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow,

46 And said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and [e] pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

47 ¶ And while he yet spake, [f] behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him.

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?

49 When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

50 ¶ And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him.

52 Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53 When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your [g] hour, and the power of darkness.

54 ¶ Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.

56 But [h] a certain maid beheld him as he sat and drink at my table—an honour assigned only to princes and tributary kings. As my Father has engaged to me a kingdom by promise and by oath, (Ps. ii. 7,) into which I am shortly to be installed; so do I hereby engage that you shall participate of my honours and felicity." This honour have all his saints; and the meanest of them shall one day unite in that anthem of eternal praises, "Unto him that hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood; and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen." (Rev. i. 5, 6.)

Ver. 31—46. Jesus admonishes and encourages Peter, and is himself agonized in prayer.—It is an extraordinary circumstance, that our Lord predicts the recovery of Peter in the same sentence as his fall; and while he tells him that he certainly will sin, assures him of repentance and a pardon. For any but himself to do this might have been dangerous, and would have been imprudent. But he who made man, knoweth what is in man: he knoweth all the secret springs within the human heart, and he has a key which commands and controls the whole.

This discourse, though addressed to Simon Peter, appears, in the first instance, to have reference to the whole of the apostles, Judas excepted, who had already given himself up to Satan. "Simon, Simon, (says our Lord,) Satan has desired to have you within his snares, as he formerly had Job, (ch. ii. 4, 5,) that he may sift you as wheat is sifted in a sieve, by being tossed up and down." But, as the Lord had promised Israel of old time, "Not the least grain (of wheat) shall fall upon the earth," (Amos ix. 9,) so says our Saviour, "I have prayed for thee, Simon, that thy faith fail not;" that is, that it fall not to the ground to be trampled upon and lost. Happy for those who have such an advocate, whom the Father heareth always, and who never prays in vain! His prayers, too, we see, are not only general, but personal and particular, and with especial earnestness for those who are in special danger—"Simon, I have prayed for THEE."

We may here also remark, that when public characters are tried and tempted, it is generally for some public benefit. Peter, in some respects the weakest of the disciples, is subjected to a temporary trial, that when he is recovered he may strengthen others. This is God's method—to make use of weak instruments, that his own power may be more conspicuous. And we shall see in the book of the Acts of the Apostles, with what zeal and energy, fortitude and perseverance, and success, Peter laboured for the conversion of his nation and the world.

Peter was, however, at this time so little sensible of his own weakness, that he defies imprisonment and death, with all their terrors; and yet, within a few hours after, he denies his Master in the most awful manner. Let us learn thereby, never to be confident in our own strength, but daily pray to be delivered from temptation.

The following conversation seems unconnected with either what precedes or follows; but we connect them thus:—Peter must have anticipated, both from our Lord's conversation and from the temper of the Jews, that a violent attempt would be made for the apprehension of his Master, and had therefore privately provided a sword, and persuaded one of his brethren to do the same; intending, doubtless, at this time, to risk his life in his cause; and hoping, probably, if the attack was made in the daytime, that the multitude would second his efforts for a rescue. The Jews themselves might anticipate something of the same kind, and therefore made their attack by night. Our Lord brought this circumstance to light, that Peter might afterwards be the more ashamed of his cowardice in denying his Master, after being the first to prepare for his defence.

Ver. 34. The cock shall not crow.—See note on Mark xiv. 72. How many times Peter, in the agitation of his mind, denied his Master, or how many times the cock crew, is not clearly expressed, or has been perplexed by the mistake of some transcriber. Doddridge renders it, "It shall not be (the time of) cock-crowing to-day, before," &c. But there are two times of cock-crowing, one at midnight, the other about daybreak. By this term the Romans distinguished their two morning watches with the sound of trumpets, (as some think in mimicry of the cocks crowing;) the times of which were, immediately after midnight, and at three o'clock in the morning. See note on Mat. xxvi. 34.

Ver. 35. And scrip.—A bag for provisions.

Ver. 38. It is enough.—That is, enough for the fulfilment of prophecy and the designs of Providence. This (as Campbell observes) is a strong intimation that he did not mean for them to fight. What were two swords to resist even the Jews only?

Ver. 44. Being in an agony.—See notes on Mat. xxvi. 38. and Mark xiv. 33, 34.——His sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood.—The note of comparison here introduced has led many to explain this, as though the drops of sweat were large, like those of blood: so Justin Martyr. But Dr. Whitby observes, that "both Aristotle and Diodorus Siculus mention bloody sweats as attending some extraordinary agonies of mind;" and several similar instances may be found in later writers. See Doddridge.—[Dr. Mead observes from Galen, "Cases sometimes happen, in which, through mental pressure, the pores may be so dilated that the blood may issue from them so that there may be a bloody sweat;" and Bishop Pearce gives an instance from Thuanus, of an Italian gentleman being so distressed through the fear of death, that his body was covered with a bloody sweat. Our Lord was in the bloom of life, and in perfect health, and it is evident the fear of death could have no place in his mind; and consequently, this must have been produced by a preternatural cause.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Jesus is accused before Pilate, and sent to Herod. 8 Herod mocketh him. 12 Herod and Pilate are made friends. 18 Barabbas is desired of the people, and is loosed by Pilate, and Jesus is given to be crucified. 27 He telleth the women, that lament him, the destruction of Jerusalem: 34 prayeth for his enemies. 39 Two evil-doers are crucified with him. 46 His death. 50 His burial.

AND [a] the whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to accuse [b] him, saying, We found this fellow [c] perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute [d] to Cesar, saying, that he [e] himself is Christ a King.

3 And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And [f] he answered him and said, Thou sayest it.

4 Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no [g] fault in this man.

5 And they were the more [h] fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean.

7 And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's [i] jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

But our Lord had evidently a view also to the accomplishment of the prophecies concerning him, that he should be "numbered with transgressors," or public criminals, and at the same time deserted by his disciples; "for the things concerning me," says he, (must) "have an end"—that is, be accomplished, as foretold. (See Zech. xiii. 7.)

We are now again introduced to the garden of Gethsemane, which lay at the foot of the Mount of Olives, whither Jesus was wont to retire for prayer. We have already noticed on Matt. xxvi. 38, the very strong language there used in speaking of our Lord's agonies on this occasion; but Luke's language is, if possible, still more energetic. "Being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground."

A writer, not remarkable for his orthodoxy, here observes, "Many of our divines urge this argument with great force in proof of the doctrine of vicarious satisfaction for sin. I confess (adds he) I never met with any tolerable account of the terror of Christ in view of death, commonly called his agony, his cup, except in that system which goes on the doctrine of the atonement. Innocence had no cause to fear on its own account; and yet Christ had more terror in dying [or in the prospect of death] than any of his followers."—(Robinson's Notes to Claude's Essay.)

Professor Witsius treats the subject more practically. "Go, sinner, to Mount Olivet: behold Christ rolling in the dust: see that brave and magnanimous Prince stretched on the ground—that generous Lion of the tribe of Judah prostrate on the earth; hear him, who is the only consolation of wounded spirits, ... complaining bitterly of sorrow surrounding him on every side; see the drops of blood with which, owing to the incredible anguish of his soul, his sacred body is stained; hear the supplications offered up with strong crying and tears..... Ask the Saviour, what was the real cause of anguish so immense, when hitherto no hostile bands, no chains, no scourge, no accusers, no judge, no cross, were present—when, on the contrary, he was in a pleasant garden, and at no great distance from his faithful disciples—and you will learn, that those very sins, which you have hitherto regarded so lightly, were the causes of his unparalleled sorrows: those very sins, now laid on Christ, [by imputation,] afflicted and weighed him down, and failed only to overwhelm him utterly. And can any one presume, that either no atonement for sin is necessary, or that a very slight atonement or satisfaction is sufficient?.... Behold, I beseech you—behold again and again, the inconceivable bitterness of those sufferings which Christ endured, when he bore the transgressions of the elect, in order to expiate their guilt."

One other circumstance remains to be observed, and is mentioned only by this Evangelist, (ver. 43.) "And there appeared unto him an angel from heaven strengthening him." We have no intimation that this angel appeared to his disciples, much less to his enemies; and, we believe, in two instances only (the one before us, and the other in the temptation in the wilderness) is such aid mentioned, and both related to his conflicts with the powers of darkness. We pretend not to penetrate the manner in which angels might console the Son of God; but one thing seems clear, that though they might strengthen him under suffering, they did not aid him in the warfare.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—12. Jesus carried to Pilate, who sends him to Herod.—His trial before Pilate has been already noticed in our exposition of St. Matthew; but several additional circumstances are here added, which we must now notice. When Jesus was accused before the High Priest and Sanhedrim, they charged him with blasphemy; but when he was brought before Pilate, the accusation was changed to sedition, and even treason. "We found this fellow"—but this word being in italics, shows it is not in the original; and Campbell reads more literally, "this man," which is sufficiently contemptuous, as applied to the Son of God and the King of Israel. "We found this man (say they) perverting the people, and forbidding to give tribute to Cesar, saying, that he himself is Christ, a King;" for that the Messiah should be a king, and a great king, is well known to have been the universal expectation.

This charge of rebellion against Cesar we know to have been false: for, 1. When they asked him the question, as to the lawfulness of tribute, he answered in the affirmative—"Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's." (Matt. xxii. 21.) 2. When applied to for the tribute-money, he actually wrought a miracle to enable him to pay it. (Matt. xvii. 27.) 3. When Jesus found that the multitude desired to take him by force, and make him a king, he withdrew in order to avoid them. (John vi. 15.) It may be said that this is disputed authority; but it should be recollected that there is no conflicting evidence, except the acclamation of the mob, which became the more fierce, as they had nothing but their fierceness to support their

Ver. 58. Another.—[A maid challenged Peter in the second instance according to Matthew and Mark; yet here it is said eteros, another (man) and he also answers to a man. But eteros, as Wetstein shows, may be, and is in innumerable instances, applied to a female; and Matthew says, "she said to them that were there," and Mark, "she began to say to them that stood by." So that the maid gave the information to those around her, and some man charged Peter with it. claim. In the close of this part of their charge they happen to mention Galilee—"beginning from Galilee to this place"—Jerusalem. Pilate eagerly caught at this word, in hopes probably to extricate himself from his dilemma; and because he thought it a likely means of reconciling himself to Herod Antipas, the Tetrarch of Galilee, and son of Herod the Great, with whom (ver. 12) he had been some time at enmity. Herod happened at this time to be at Jerusalem, to keep the Passover; Pilate therefore sent Jesus immediately to him, who was thereby much pleased, having long desired to see him, and hoped to have seen some miracle wrought by him. Our Lord, however, who never wrought a miracle to gratify an idle curiosity, not only refused to gratify him, but to answer any of his interrogatories, not considering him legally entitled thus to question him, after having been before tried, both by the Jewish High Priest and Roman Governor—in which he has set an example of resisting illegal authority, which, however, should be followed cautiously, since we may not always be qualified to judge of such authority.

The Chief Priests and Scribes, however, who followed Jesus to Herod's palace, seem to have taken advantage of his silence, to accuse him the more violently, probably construing his silence into either a confession of guilt, or a proof of obstinacy and contempt. And Herod might consider his conduct in the same light, though the stings of conscience he had suffered for putting to death John the Baptist, might probably deter him from repeating the like conduct toward our Saviour. Perhaps, also, he might equally gratify his resentment by holding him up to contempt and ridicule. He, therefore, with his men of war, that is, his military captains, set him at defiance, mocked him, and dressed him in a gorgeous or splendid robe—probably one of his own official cast-off garments, as Pilate had before (with the same motive) dressed him in a robe of purple. See note on Mark xv. 17.

For a judge or chief magistrate thus to insult the feelings of a prisoner, is so contrary to our ideas of justice and princely dignity, that it might seem incredible, if it were not certain. The following instance, quoted from Philo, by Dr. Lardner, in illustration of this passage, will show the character of the people, in perfect accordance with that of their rulers. Caligula, the successor of Tiberius, under whom Jesus suffered, in the beginning of his reign, conferred on Herod Agrippa (the nephew of this Herod who mocked our Saviour) the tetrarchy of his uncle Philip, with the right of wearing a crown. On returning from Rome through Alexandria, they were so displeased with the idea of a Jew assuming that consequence, that they took the following means to mortify him.

"There was one Carabas, a sort of distracted fellow, who went naked about the streets. . . . . This wretch they brought into the theatre, and placed him on a lofty seat, that he might be conspicuous to all. Then they put a thing made of paper on his head for a crown, the rest of his body they covered with a mat instead of a robe, and for a sceptre one put into his hand a little piece of a reed. . . . . Having thus given him a mimic royal dress, several young fellows, with poles on their shoulders, came and stood on each side of him as his guards. Then came people . . . . some to pay homage to him, others to ask justice of him, and some to know his will and pleasure concerning affairs of state; and in the crowd were loud and confused acclamations of Maris, Maris! that being (as they say) the Syriac word for Lord; thereby intimating whom they meant to ridicule by all this mock show."—Agrippa being a Syrian, and king of a large country in Syria.—Lardner's Cred.

Ver. 13—26. Pilate delivers Jesus to the Jews, with an order for his crucifixion.—Much of this section corresponds with the accounts of the other Evangelists. We shall confine our remarks to two points only; Pilate's surrender of Jesus to the hands of the Jews, and the address of Jesus to the spectators on his being led forth to execution.

1. That neither Pilate nor Herod considered Jesus as a criminal, is most certain from Pilate's own words, (ver. 14, 15,) "I find no fault in him; nor yet Herod:" but what apology can be offered for a judge that should deliver a prisoner to be executed under such circumstances? There is no doubt but he was influenced by the fear of the Jews, either as to their offering him some personal violence, or accusing him to his imperial master. But "the fear of man bringeth a snare;" and "He that justifieth the wicked, and condemneth the just, even they both are an abomination to the Lord." (Prov. xvii. 15.) Pilate virtually did both. He justified the wicked priests and scribes, by giving sentence against the innocent Jesus according to their wishes, but against the judgment of his own conscience. Ah, Pilate! circumstances must be one day reversed; and when the Son of man shall ascend his throne of judgment, and thou shalt be placed at his bar, can he then say of thee, "I find no fault in him?" Alas, no! Pilate had condemned the innocent, and released the guilty; and both to oblige an abandoned priesthood, who afterwards pursued him with their accusations and curses till they drove him to commit suicide.

2. But let us turn to the conduct of the patient and illustrious Sufferer, who is now led to crucifixion, followed by "a great number of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him." Some of these women are distinctly mentioned by St. Matthew, (chap. xxvii. 55,) and we have there remarked the honourable testimony borne to female tenderness and piety. We have here to notice the compassionate language of our Lord to the multitude of the spectators, and especially to the women. For though the term "daughters of Jerusalem," as well as "the daughters of Zion," certainly includes the inhabitants of both sexes, (see 1 Kings xix. 21, Lam. ii. 13. Zeph. iii. 14,) yet as the softer sex were undoubtedly distinguished by their weeping, so the following words. (ver. 29,) "Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare," were doubtless addressed to them in reference to the predicted destruction of Jerusalem, respecting which our Lord had said, "Wo to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!" (Matt. xxiv. 19;) language parallel in effect with that before us. The proverbial expression of calling upon "rocks and hills to cover" us "and hide" us, implies an extreme of approaching misery, which would not pass away with the sufferings of a few hours, but last through many generations; and, as respected many of the guilty individuals, we fear through everlasting ages.

The expression is (we believe) applied only to this event and to that of which this was a type—the day of judgment. "Weep not for me:" as if he had said, my sufferings, extreme 27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.

29 For, behold, the days [y] are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.

35 ¶ And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them [e] derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar, 37 And saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself.

38 And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 ¶ And [f] one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.

40 But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear [g] God, seeing thou art in the same [h] condemnation?

41 And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing [i] amiss.

42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember [j] me when thou comest into thy kingdom.

as they be, will soon come to a termination, and will end in infinite and everlasting felicity, both to me and multitudes for whom I suffer; but for the judgments coming upon Jerusalem, alas! weep "for yourselves, and for your children!" Our Lord Jesus, amidst all the pain and ignominy he suffered, was more affected by the approaching calamities of others, than by any thing which he himself either foresaw or felt.

Ver. 27—38. Jesus crucified between two malefactors.—Every circumstance attending the crucifixion of our Saviour was calculated to excite pity towards himself and to provoke execrations from him upon his enemies. But behold the reverse! instead of pity from his persecutors, they revile and blaspheme him. "He saved others, (say they,) himself he cannot save." True, indeed, had he saved himself, they and we must have been lost for ever. But what says the illustrious sufferer? Does he imprecate curses upon them? On the contrary: he prays for them—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

"Who is it that offers up this prayer? It is not the language of one .... on whom good or bad treatment makes little impression..... The Son of man had a heart peculiarly soft and tender..... It is not the prayer of an angel hovering by the cross—a being superior to human weakness and passions; but of one who was in all things made like unto his brethren, yet without sin; and who hath shown himself as glorious in the generosity of his prayers as in the lessons of his wisdom, and in the miracles of his power.

"This prayer he addresses to his Father. Jesus was at this moment enduring the wrath of God, as well as the cruelty of man; yet faith and hope operate strongly within him..... Not all the sorrows of death that were compassing him about, not all the pains of hell that were taking hold on him, could shake his confidence in God.....

"The blessing which Jesus asks is forgiveness. Father, forgive them. If the murder of a fellow-creature is considered as a most heinous offence—if to kill a monarch brings on a traitor the severest tortures which man can inflict—what vengeance must not they have deserved who slew the Prince of Life? The vengeance of eternal fire was their doom, and from this Jesus lifts up his voice to save them..... Our Lord was now offering up that sacrifice by which sin was expiated; and in praying for forgiveness to them, he asks a pledge of the honour that should be conferred on him, and the happiness which he would bestow, when God exalted him to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel....

"The time when our Lord put up this prayer demands our notice. In the first moments after we have been injured, resentment is strong..... But it was immediately after our Lord was fixed to the cross that he offered up this prayer. The hills around Jerusalem had scarcely ceased echoing back the cry, Away with him, when Jesus cried, Father, forgive them. Nor was this a transient impulse of generosity in the Saviour's bosom; it mingled with the last throbbings of his heart; and it was among the last of his injunctions before he went to heaven, "that repentance and remission of sin should be preached in his name to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." The conversion of many of his murderers shows the efficacy of this prayer. The three thousand Jews, who on the day of Pentecost gladly received the word, were charged by Peter with having crucified his Master. The victim of their fury they now honour as the author of their salvation.

"Our Lord urges as a reason for the forgiveness of his enemies, that they knew not what they did. Deceived by the artful misrepresentations of their leaders, and disappointed in their favourite hope of a temporal Messiah, which our Lord's miracles had raised to the highest pitch, they now considered him as an impostor, and were eager to destroy him, as one who had cruelly sported with the feelings of an oppressed people. Christ pitied their delusion, and .....offers for the cruelty of his murderers the only extenuation of which their conduct admitted .... Instead of the language of rebuke and execration, he utters that only of apology and forgiveness."—(Dr. Belfrage's Sacram. Addresses, No. xxvii.)

This prayer, however, had so little effect upon the miscreants around him, that the cruel executioners coolly sat down at the foot of the cross to part his garments; and the rulers who were present, and ought to have suppressed the excesses of the multitude, were the first to deride him: "He saved others! let him save himself if he be the Christ, the chosen of God!" Thus shared our divine Master in the reproach of ridicule too often poured upon his people as "the elect of God"—which is also one of the peculiar characters of Messiah, as well as of his people. (See Isa. xlii. 1.)

Upon some individuals, however, this painful scene had a most salutary effect; namely, upon one of the malefactors, and upon the centurion who commended the guard which attended the execution, as we shall see in the next section.

Ver. 39—43. The base conduct of one malefactor, and the conversion of the other.—"It is a great comfort to dying persons to have their friends near them;" but our Lord's sufferings were aggravated by the company of two thieves in his dying moments, who at first, as should seem by Matthew's Gospel, (chap. xxvii. 44,) united with his enemies to reproach and blaspheme him. The other, whether convinced by the meekness and piety of our Saviour's conduct, or overawed by the awful darkness which accompanied his last hours, is satisfied both of his personal innocence, and his divine mission. He therefore, in the first place, reproves his obdurate fellow-sinner, and in the next place confesses his own guilt, and implores the mercy of our Saviour: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

A question here arises, What ideas could this man have of Christ's kingdom? It is not impossible that, before he committed the crime for which he was apprehended, (or at least before his apprehension,) he might have heard some of our Lord's public discourses, in which he declared himself the Son of God, and the King of Israel. It is not improbable that he might be (as a prisoner) in Pilate's judgment-hall when Jesus avowed himself to be a King, and for that end expressly born; or, perhaps, in the palace of Caiaphas, when he said, "Here-

Ver. 29. Behold, the days are coming.—[Our Lord here refers to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the final desolation of the Jewish state; an evil associated with so many miseries, that sterility, which had otherwise been considered an opprobrium, was accounted a circumstance most felicitous. No history can furnish us with a parallel to the calamities and miseries of the Jews; rapine and murder, famine and pestilence, within; fire and sword, and all the terrors of war without. Our Saviour himself wept at the foresight of these calamities; and it is almost impossible for persons of any humanity to read the relation of them in Josephus without weeping also. He might justly affirm, "if the misfortunes of all, from the beginning of the world, were compared with those of the Jews, they would appear much inferior in the comparison."]—B.

Ver. 31. If they do these things in a green tree &c.—Campbell gives the sense, "For if it fare thus with the green tree, how shall it fare with the dry?" "Our Lord (here) makes use of a proverbial expression frequent among the Jews, who compare a good man to a green tree, and a bad man to a dead one; as if he had said, 'If an innocent person suffer thus [for sins not his own,] what will become of the wicked, who are ready [prepared] for destruction as dry wood for the fire.'"—Wesley.

Ver. 32. Two other, malefactors.—Campbell, "Two malefactors were also led with him to execution."

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Christ's resurrection is declared by two angels to the women that come to the sepulchre. 9 Those report it to others. 13 Christ himself appeareth to the two disciples that went to Emmaus: 36 afterwards he appeareth to the apostles, and reproveth their unbelief: 47 giveth them a charge: 49 promiseth the Holy Ghost: 51 and so ascendeth into heaven.

NOW [a] upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the after shall the Son of man sit on the right hand of God." It is not to be doubted that he heard the Jews, in mockery, style him king, or that he heard the inscription on the cross read by passengers and spectators; yet all this might give him but a very imperfect idea of the nature of Messiah's kingdom. He might, however, have been blessed with a religious education, and accustomed in youth to read the Scriptures. We know also the advantages which many persons, similarly circumstanced, have derived from early instruction, when these things have been brought to their recollection, and applied to their consciences, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, under whose instructions this privileged criminal was now placed. Yet we cannot pretend to determine how far his views were enlightened or correct.

Our Lord had been wont, in speaking of his second coming, to describe himself as "coming in the clouds of heaven," and attended by the heavenly hosts, (see Matt. xvi. 27; xxiv. 30, &c.;) we think it probable, therefore, that the penitent thief might allude to this, without any very distinct idea of the nature of our Redeemer's kingdom; for even his most intimate disciples at this time seem to have had very confused notions on this subject. (See next chap. ver. 21.)

Most certain it is, however, that he looked not for secular honours, nor rewards, for he was now entering the eternal world, as was also Jesus, whom he addressed as his Lord and Saviour. It was in another state, therefore, that he looked for an answer to his prayers: it was to sit down with him on his throne—to eat and drink with him in his kingdom. May we all be enabled to adopt the same prayer in dying circumstances; but, alas! there are many, very many, who would rather be forgotten than remembered by their judge!

This brief but very interesting narrative furnishes us with a caution against presumption, and a caveat against despair. An ancient writer has observed, that the Scriptures present us with one instance, and but one, of conversion in the article of death, to the end that no person may presume upon the like grace; nor any one despair in like circumstances. To presume is madness; for who knows that death will give the warning of an hour, or even a moment? To despair is folly; for who can allege circumstances more desperate or alarming than these—a criminal dying by the hand of justice, with no friendly hand to direct him to the hope of mercy; yet mercy finds him, with a pardon perfectly gratuitous and free.

But we must attend to our Lord's gracious answer, with the when and where implied in it. 1. When shall the penitent be remembered? Not merely at a future period—in the day of judgment—but this day, which not only implies an intermediate state between death and judgment, but entrance on it in the day that closes our mortal life—this day of salvation. Now, though we would not contend for a rigid construction of the term day in all cases, (for we know it is often used with much latitude of interpretation,) yet here it is necessarily confined to a literal interpretation. Our Lord, who probably died a few moments before his fellow-sufferers, (see John xix. 32, 33,) committed his soul into the hands of his heavenly Father, who doubtless instantly received it; and by the morning of the third day it returned to reanimate his mortal frame; it must, therefore, have been within this, or another day at most, that the supplicant could be with Christ in Paradise, or we shall not be able to give it any definite import.

But where is Paradise? The same place and state, we apprehend, as, in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, is called "Abraham's bosom." (Chap. xvi. 19—31.) Whither Paul was taken up, and heard and saw things unspeakable; and whither, at death, he desired to depart and be with Christ, as "far better" than the present state. (2 Cor. xii. 4. Phil. i. 23.) None of which things can surely be asserted respecting a state of utter insensibility, and non-exertion—a state, assuredly, which no good man would desire in preference to activity in the service of God and man upon the earth.

Ver. 44—56. The death and burial of Christ.—The darkness and other prodigies which attended the death of our Saviour have been already noticed, with his subsequent interment, and the conversion of the centurion. (See Matt. xxvii. 45—60.) The darkness here mentioned appears to have lasted from noon till about three in the afternoon, when our Saviour died, immediately after which it began to disperse. The darkness itself must have made an awful impression on the spectators. Many of the enemies of Jesus were perhaps driven thereby from the awful scene, which made even the Roman soldiers tremble; and upon some of them, particularly on their commanding officer, a salutary effect appears to have been produced. The spectators also smote their breasts with anguish, and silently withdrew; but the faithful women, the beloved John, and others of his acquaintance, stood and viewed the scene unto the last. The following circumstances also remain to be here observed:—

I. The dying words of Jesus—"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit, and, having said thus, he gave up the ghost," i. e. his immortal spirit into the hands of God. On this we remark, 1. That Jesus died with the utmost calmness and resignation, an example to all his followers; but, 2. He died a voluntary death; so himself tells us, (John x. 17, 18:) "I lay down my life that I might take it again." This was peculiar to himself: "This commandment," (or commission,) says he, "have I received of my Father;" implying that, as "Christ died for our sins," so also "he rose again for our justification." (Rom. iv. 25.) 3. On comparing this address to the Father of mercies, with the complaint uttered just before, (Matt. xxvii. 46,) it is evident that that complaint was not uttered under any apprehensions of our Saviour's being abandoned by his heavenly Father to his enemies; but only that while bearing our sins, and making atonement for them, those smiles of approbation—that comfortable sense of the divine presence with which Jesus had been supported throughout his arduous ministry, had been withdrawn. The sun of divine approbation had set in obscurity, to arise in fairer skies, where darkness is never felt, and where clouds are never seen. "If (says Bishop Horne) the Master thus underwent the trial of a spiritual desertion (while he suffered for our sins,) why doth the disciple think it strange, unless the light of heaven shine continually upon his tabernacle? Let us comfort ourselves in such circumstances with the thought that we are thereby conformed to the image of our dying Lord." (Horne on Ps. xxii. 1.)

What follows in the close of this chapter relative to our Lord's burial, differs little from the account of Matthew; only Joseph of Arimathea, who is there styled a disciple of Jesus, is here said to be one who "himself waited for the kingdom of God." This also was the character of holy Simeon; and it appears that all who were waiting for the coming of God's kingdom, readily embraced his Son.

and reported by them to others.—God is pleased generally to make use of men to communicate his will to men, that they may not be alarmed and terrified. So Elihu said to Job: "My terror shall not make thee afraid: I also am formed out of the clay." (Job xxxiii. 6, 7.) But there are cases in which human agents are improper and inefficient. "No man hath ascended into heaven," and therefore no man can bring down messages from thence. But angels, who wait constantly on the divine presence, are always ready, and seem to delight when they are commissioned on errands of mercy or benevolence to mankind. In the case before us, with what tenderness and gentleness doth the angel address the women who came to perform the last office of tenderness to their departed Lord: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? I know that ye seek Jesus that was crucified; but he is not here: he is risen:" and to confirm his words, he brings to their recollection the conversation of their divine Master, "Remember how he spake unto you, when he was yet in Galilee." On these words we may remark—1. That much of religion consists in recollection—in recollecting what Christ has said and done for us; and one of his last affectionate admonitions was, as he surrounded his supper table, "Do this in remembrance of me!" Israel of old were commanded to remember "all the way which the Lord their God had led them;" and much of the bliss of the celestial paradise will probably consist in the like employment. So Dr. Watts:—

> "There on a green and flowery mount,
> Our weary souls shall sit;
> And with transporting joys recount
> The labours of our feet."

2. That our duty, next to the recollection of God's goodness, is to report it to others. The women remembered these words of their now risen Lord, "and returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest;" and they shortly after went forth into all the then known world to preach a risen Saviour. 3. Women had the honour to be the first believers in the resurrection of their Lord: for some time, even the eleven apostles were incredulous, and the reports of the women were to them as "idle tales." Blameable as this might be, it, however, clears them from the charge of a weak credulity, and gives strength to their subsequent testimony. Even Peter, who went to examine the sepulchre, and found it empty, does not yet appear satisfied: the most that is said of him is, that he "departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass."

Ver. 13—35. Jesus appears to two disciples in their way to Emmaus.—This Emmaus was a village little more than seven miles from Jerusalem. (See note, ver. 13.) One of these disciples is named Cleopas, who is asserted by some of the ancient fathers to have married the sister of the Virgin Mary, and to have been father to James the less, to Jude, and Joses, the cousins of our Lord. The other disciple is not named, which has led many to suppose it might be Luke himself, which seems the more probable from the particularity of the account. While these disciples were conversing by the way of the death of Jesus, and the circumstances which accompanied it, Jesus himself, in the garb of a traveller, joined in the conversation here related, and which now calls for our observation.

Dr. D. Hunter, an elegant and pious writer before quoted, remarks the peculiar delicacy and tenderness of Jesus in the gradual discovery of himself to his disciples, after his resurrection. Adverting to the narrative now before us, he remarks,—"It is beautiful to observe the steps by which the disciples were led on to the discovery. . . . . The sadness of their countenance, the conversation in which they were engaged on the subject of their distress, and the opportunity presented of mixing familiarly with them, were circumstances inviting the attention of Jesus, and which we behold him improving, to the great purpose of the interview. Persons in distress are easily set a talking on the subject of their distress: there is a fulness and overflowing of the heart in such situations. The disciples, encouraged by the inquiries of Jesus, easily enter on the subject of his sufferings, and discover themselves to be under the power of prejudices, which, previously to a discovery, it was highly proper for him to correct. In the mean time, he was concealed by these very prejudices of the disciples, and by the casualty of the interview. Besides, "their eyes were holden (perhaps miraculously) that they should not know him." With this advantage on his side, he enters on the subject of his sufferings—with freedom censures them for their slowness and unbelief—and, with his that they had no hope of his resurrection on the third day. Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea had done this before the body was laid in the tomb; but on account of the approach of the sabbath, it was probably hastily and imperfectly performed; and hence a second embalming would be deemed necessary, for which purpose the spices now brought by the women were intended.]—B.

Ver. 4. Two men stood by them.—Matthew and Mark speak only of one—"a young man," and him "sitting." It is not uncommon for one Evangelist to name one only of two named by others, as in the case of Bartimeus, &c.; and the angel singled out by the two first Evangelists was probably the one who spoke. As to the word rendered stood, Archbishop Newcome says, it "does not necessarily import a posture, but may be rendered, 'appeared to them.'" So it is used Luke ii. 9.

Ver. 5. The living, &c.—[Mary Magdalene and the other Mary saw only one angel in white, sitting on the stone which he had rolled from the door of the sepulchre; but the women here mentioned saw no angel till they had entered the sepulchre, when two appeared to them in "garments shining like lightning," as the word imports. This, and several other variations, show there were two distinct companies of women, who went successively to the tomb on the morning of the resurrection; which renders the whole account clear and consistent.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. And departed, wondering, &c.—Dr. Campbell observes, that by a slight change in the pointing, (a thing very allowable when it clears the sense,) some render the phrase, "And he went home, wondering at what had happened." So Hammond &c.; but he (Campbell) prefers the common punctuation, as best supported by the ancient versions. He reads, therefore, "He (Peter) went away, musing with astonishment," &c.

Ver. 13. Emmaus.—[Emmaus was situated, according to the testimony both of Luke and Josephus, 60 furlongs from Jerusalem, that is, about seven miles and a half. It has generally been confounded with Emmaus, a city of Judah, afterwards called Nicopolis; but Reland has satisfactorily shown, that they were distinct places: the latter, according to the old Itinerary of Palestine, being situated ten miles from Lydda, and 22 miles from Jerusalem. D'Arvieux states, that going from Jerusalem to Rama, he took the right from the high road to Rama, at some little distance from Jerusalem, and "travelled a good league over rocks and flint stones, to the end of the valley of terebinthine trees," till he reached Emmaus; which "seems, by the ruins which surround it, to have been formerly larger than it was in our Saviour's time. The Christians, while masters of the Holy Land, re-established it a little, and built several churches. Emmaus was not worth the trouble of having come out of the way to see it. Ruins, indeed, we saw on all sides; and fables we heard from every quarter, though under the guise of traditions."]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. And are sad.—Doddridge, "appear with a sorrowful countenance," which is evidently the sense, though the conciseness of the original might be preserved, by rendering, "And look sad," or gloomy.

Ver. 18. Art thou only a stranger? &c.—Campbell, "Art thou the only stranger in Jerusalem who is unacquainted," &c; implying that these events occupied the whole conversation of the day, and of the people.

Ver. 19. In deed and word—i. e. in preaching and working miracles.

delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been [o] he which should have redeemed Israel: and besides all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done.

22 Yea, and certain women [p] also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre;

23 And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

24 And certain [q] of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.

26 Ought not [s] Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter [t] into his glory?

27 And beginning at [u] Moses and all the [v] prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.

28 And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went: and he [w] made as though he would have gone farther.

29 But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

30 And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he [x] took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31 And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he [y] vanished out of their sight.

32 And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn [z] within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?

35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

36 ¶ And [b] as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed [c] that they had seen a spirit.

38 And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?

39 Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

40 And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet.

41 And while they yet believed [d] not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have [e] ye here any meat?

42 And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of a honeycomb.

43 And he took it, and did eat [f] before them.

44 And he said unto them, [g] These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all [h] things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the [i] prophets, and in the [j] psalms, concerning me.

wonted kindness, begins to instruct them. It was not yet time to open their eyes, or to risk a discovery, by reminding them of his own predictions: "But, beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded to them, in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself." This he did with such ardour and energy, that, after he had left them, they said one to another, "Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and opened to us the Scriptures?" The fulness and freedom of his discourse, the impressions which it made upon the disciples, their importunate invitation, his indulgent acceptance of it, and, after his wonted manner, sitting down to eat with them, are circumstances which had the most happy tendency to enlarge their views, and to prepare them for seeing with open eyes, Jesus, their master, risen from the grave. The historian doth not leave us to conjecture the use which they made of the discovery: "They rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven; and they told them what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in the breaking of bread."

But we cannot pass over the interesting conversation here referred to, without offering a remark or two on the subject of it. We observe, 1. That in Moses, and the prophets, and in all the Scriptures, and especially the types and prophecies, there is much which concerns the character and work of Christ; and if this be true, as respects the Old Testament, much more must it be admitted in reference to the New, where he is "the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end." 2. That in the history of Christ, in both Testaments, the great points kept in view are his atonement and resurrection, his sufferings and glory: "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and (afterwards) to enter into glory?" Alas! that Christians should ever tire in conversing on such a subject! When Moses and Elijah met with Jesus upon Mount Tabor, "they spake of the decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem;" and in all the interviews which Jesus had with his disciples after his resurrection, this appears to have been the reigning topic of conversation, which he closed by showing them his wounds: "Behold my hands and my feet!"

Ver. 36—53. Jesus, after farther proofs of his resurrection, returns to heaven.—In the preceding section we find that the two disciples to whom Jesus discovered himself at Emmaus, hastened back immediately to Jerusalem, where they found the apostles collected together, and other disciples with them. These had already received the happy intelligence of the resurrection from other quarters, and exultingly exclaimed when they saw Cleopas and his fellow disciple—"The Lord is risen, indeed! and hath appeared to Simon!" While they were thus rejoicing and conversing, our Lord himself suddenly appeared in the midst of them, and blessed them in his accustomed manner, saying, "Peace be unto you!" Instead of being calmed, however, they were terrified; and, instead of hailing him as their risen Saviour, they thought it was his spirit—for that spirits did occasionally appear on earth, was in those days

Ver. 21. Redeemed Israel—That is, from the Roman yoke, and set up a temporal kingdom.

Ver. 25. O fools!—Doddridge, "thoughtless creatures."—[Justly termed such, because they had not attended to the description of the Messiah by the prophets, nor to his teaching and miracles, as proofs that HE alone was the person described.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. In all the scriptures—Namely, of the Old Testament, for none of the New Testament was yet written. "We may hence learn that the Mosaical sacrifices, and especially the solemn anniversary expiation, typified the sufferings of Christ: as also did the oblation of Isaac, and the lifting up of the brazen serpent."—Whitby.

Ver. 28. He made as though—[That is, he was directing his steps as if to go onwards; and so he doubtless would, had he not been withheld by their friendly importunities. There is not the smallest ground for founding a charge of dissimulation against our Saviour, or affording any encouragement to dissimulation in others.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. They constrained him.—See note on Luke xiv. 23, where the same word is used.

Ver. 30. Sat at meat.—The ancients always reclined on couches when at a meal.—He took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.—This was the appropriate office of the master of the feast. Though he was in their house he acted as master. This probably first attracted their attention. He now acted as he had been accustomed to do; and as he handed them the bread, they observed the prints in his hands, and thus certainly knew that it was Christ.

Ver. 31. Eyes were opened—That is, they now recognized him not only to be Jesus, but also the true Messiah.—He vanished out of their sight.—Doddridge, "Withdrew himself (suddenly) from before them." Campbell, "He disappeared."

Ver. 32. Heart burn within us.—They felt a very deep interest in his discourse. It moved their hearts, as he convincingly elucidated the Scriptures.

Ver. 33. Same hour.—Here was disinterested joy. Though it was late, and Jerusalem was more than seven miles distant, still they hasten to communicate to their fellow disciples, the joyful tidings that Christ had risen.—The eleven.—So the apostles were usually called after the loss of Judas, though ten only could have been present; for we know that Thomas was not there. See John xx. 24. 1 Co. xv. 5.

Ver. 34. And hath appeared to Simon.—This appearance is not related by either of the Evangelists, but is referred to by St. Paul, 1 Co. xv. 5.—[From Mark xvi. 13, we learn that the Apostles did not believe the testimony even of the two disciples from Emmaus, while it is here asserted they were saying, when they entered the room, "The Lord is risen," &c. This difficulty is removed by rendering interrogatively, "Has the Lord risen," &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Known of them in breaking of bread.—As neither of these disciples were present at our Lord's last supper, this seems to imply that there was a peculiar and characteristic solemnity in his manner of asking a blessing on their food.

Ver. 36. Peace be unto you.—The usual form of salutation in the East

Ver. 37. Terrified and affrighted.—Doddridge, "Amazed and terrified."

45 Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures,

46 And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ [k] to suffer, and to rise [l] from the dead the third day:

47 And that repentance and [m] remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

48 And ye are witnesses [n] of these things.

49 ¶ And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power [o] from on high.

50 ¶ And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.

51 And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried [p] up into heaven.

52 And [q] they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy:

53 And were continually in the temple, praising [r] and blessing God. Amen.

never questioned. It is, however, strange to hear them talk thus inconsistently; but it is possible that all were not of one mind; that some could not make up their opinion, and that his appearance might be attended with a splendour by which others were dazzled and confounded. Certain it is, that the Apostles were, in general, men hard to be persuaded, even by ocular demonstration; a circumstance, which however it may tell against their faith, certainly pleads strongly in behalf of the evidence they afterwards bore in favour of Christianity. As to the proofs of identity which Jesus gave them by exhibiting his wounds and eating before them, it is certain nothing could be better calculated to satisfy men of their class—plain, honest fishermen. But our Lord's arguments were not addressed only to their senses, but also to their understandings. He reminded them of what he had told them before his death, relative to the fulfilment of the Old Testament prophecies in relation both to his sufferings and subsequent glory: that these important truths were to be disseminated through the world by their instrumentality, as the means of converting others; but they were, in the mean time, to wait at Jerusalem until they received such extraordinary powers as might be necessary to qualify them for the undertaking; for it must be supposed that, whatever powers they had previously been intrusted with, had ceased with their former missions.

This account closes with a very brief narrative of our Lord's ascension into heaven from Mount Olivet, the foot of which seems to have formed one of the boundaries of Bethany. But we shall defer our remarks on this extraordinary event till we enter on the Book of Acts, in the first chapter of which, this same inspired writer (Luke) gives an account of it more distinct and circumstantial. In the mean time we close our exposition of this interesting Gospel by two or three brief remarks on the temper and conduct of the apostles and disciples, while waiting at Jerusalem for the promise of the Father, as above mentioned.

1. They worshipped their divine Master immediately as he was departed from them. Prostration, the outward action here intended, was so common a token of respect toward the higher classes, that anti-trinitarian writers contend, that such worship can afford no conclusive argument in favour of his divinity. But now Jesus was "parted from them, and carried up into heaven." While he was going, they were gazing. (Acts i. 10.) When he was gone, they fell down and worshipped; and such has been the practice of Christians generally, to the present day.

2. While they thus honoured their departed Saviour, they were continually (that is, at every opportunity of public worship) praising and blessing God. Thus demonstrating that their love to Jesus, as their Saviour, was not inconsistent with the worship of the temple. For "the hour was now come, when the true worshippers should worship the Father in spirit and in truth."

Ver. 48. Thus it behoved.—Doddridge, "was necessary." Compare ver. 26.

Ver. 48. Witnesses.—"Christ's resurrection being a matter of fact must be proved by the testimony of eye-witnesses, who, if they be honest men, and such as suffer the greatest prejudices in fortunes, reputation, and life, for this testimony, we have the greater reason to believe it: for their honesty must render them unwilling to testify a falsehood; their interest and prudence would not suffer them, without any necessity laid upon them, to testify a lie; much more to testify the grossest falsehood, to their utmost damage, and without any prospect of advantage. But, farther, if they confirm this testimony by all kinds of signs, miracles, and wondrous powers, exercised by themselves, and others who embraced their testimony; if this was done in all places, on all kinds of persons, for a whole age, or ages, this renders it impossible that they should attest a lie: and therefore Christ bids them stay at Jerusalem, till they were empowered by virtue from on high, to confirm this testimony."—Whitby.

Ver. 49. Promise of my Father.—Mat. x. 19. John xiv. 16. Reference was doubtless also made by Christ to the promise of God made in the days of Joel respecting the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and which was so strikingly fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. See Joel ii. 28, 29. also Acts ii. 16—21.—Endued with power, &c.—Power of working miracles and speaking with tongues.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. LUKE.

LUKE the Evangelist was born at Antioch, the metropolis of Syria; a city celebrated by the great orators of antiquity, for the pleasantness of its situation, the fertility of its soil, the richness of its trade, the wisdom of its senate, and the learning of its professors, and from its wealth and splendour called the Queen of the East, and yet renowned for this one peculiar honour above all these, that here it was the disciples were first called Christians.

Jews abounded in Antioch, who had here their synagogues and schools of education, and to their religion Luke became a proselyte, and was afterwards converted to Christianity. Luke possessed, in this city, ample opportunity of obtaining the advantage of a sound and learned education, and he excelled particularly in the art of physic. After his conversion, our Evangelist became the inseparable companion and fellow labourer of St. Paul in the ministry of the Gospel, and Epiphanius states, that his labours were blessed to the conversion of very many persons: thus he who had been a successful physician of the body, became also a successful physician of the soul.

The manner of his death is not certain, but Nicephorus gives the following account: In the prosecution of his labours in preaching the gospel, Luke came into Greece, where a party of infidels, enraged at his success, drew him to execution; and that for want of a cross whereon to crucify him, they hanged him on an olive tree, in the 80th, or according to Jerome, the 84th, year of his age.

As an historian, Luke was minutely faithful in his narrations, and elegant in his style; as a minister of Jesus Christ, laborious, and zealous for the good of souls. And at last he crowned all, and sealed the testimony of his lip and pen, in laying down his life for the Gospel.—Polymicrian Testament.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN.

JOHN, who, according to the unanimous testimony of the ancient fathers, and ecclesiastical writers, was the author of this Gospel, was the son of Zebedee, a fisherman of Bethsaida, by Salome his wife, (compare Mat. x. 4, with Mat. xxvii. 55, 56, and Ma. xv. 40,) and brother of James the elder, whom "Herod killed with the sword." (Ac. xii. 2.) Theophylact says, that Salome was the daughter of Joseph the husband of Mary, by a former wife; and that consequently she was our Lord's sister, and John was his nephew. He followed the occupation of his father till his call to the apostleship, (Mat. iv. 21, 22. Ma. i. 19, 20. Lu. v. 1—10.) which is supposed to have been when he was about 25 years of age; after which he was a constant eye-witness of our Lord's labours, journeyings, discourses, miracles, passion, crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension. After the ascension of our Lord, he returned with the other apostles to Jerusalem, and with the rest partook of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, by which he was eminently qualified for the office of an Evangelist and Apostle. After the death of Mary the mother of Christ, which is supposed to have taken place about fifteen years after the crucifixion, and probably after the council held in Jerusalem about A. D. 49 or 50, (Ac. xv.) at which he was present, he is said by ecclesiastical writers, to have proceeded to Asia Minor, where he formed and presided over seven churches in as many cities, but chiefly resided at Ephesus. Thence he was banished by the Emperor Domitian, in the 15th year of his reign, A. D. 95, to the isle of Patmos in the Ægean sea, where he wrote the Apocalypse. (Re. i. 9.) On the accession of Nerva the following year, he was recalled from exile, and returned to Ephesus, where he wrote his Gospel and Epistles, and died in the 100th year of his age, about A. D. 100, and in the third year of the Emperor Trajan. It is generally believed that St. John was the youngest of the twelve apostles, and that he survived all the rest. Jerome, in his comment on Gal. vi. says, that he continued preaching when so enfeebled with age, as to be obliged to be carried into the assembly; and that, not being able to deliver any long discourse, his custom was, to say in every meeting, My dear children, love one another! An opinion has prevailed, that he was, previous to his banishment to Patmos, thrown into a caldron of boiling oil, by order of Domitian, before the gate called Porta Latina at Rome, and that he came out unhurt; but on examining into the foundation of this account, we find that it rests almost entirely on the authority of Tertullian; and since it is not mentioned by Irenæus, Origen, and others, who have related the sufferings of the apostles, it seem to deserve but little credit. The general current of ancient writers declares, that the apostle wrote his Gospel at an advanced period of life, with which the internal evidence perfectly agrees; and we may safely refer it, with Chrysostom, Epiphanius, Mill, Le Clerc, and others, to the year 97. "The Gospel of John (says Dr. Pye Smith) is distinguished by very observable characters, from the composition of the other Evangelists. It has much less of narrative, and is more largely occupied with the doctrines and discourses of the Lord Jesus. The topics also of the discourses possess a marked character, indicating that they have been selected with an especial view to the presenting of what, during his earthly ministry, Jesus himself had taught concerning his own person, and the spiritual and never-dying blessings which he confers upon those who believe on his name. The design of St. John in writing his Gospel is said by some to have been to supply those important events which the other Evangelists had omitted, and to refute the notions of the Cerinthians and Nicolaitans, or, according to others, to confute the heresy of the Gnostics and Sabians. But, though many parts of his Gospel may be successfully quoted against the strange doctrines held by those sects, yet the Apostle had evidently a more general end in view than the confutation of their heresies. His own words sufficiently inform us of his motive and design in writing this Gospel—"These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his name." Learned men are not wholly agreed concerning the language in which this Gospel was originally written. Salmasius, Grotius, and other writers, have imagined, that St. John wrote it in his own native tongue, the Aramean or Syriac, and that it was afterwards translated into Greek. This opinion is not supported by any strong arguments; and is contradicted by the unanimous voice of antiquity, which affirms that he wrote it in Greek, which is the general and most probable opinion. Michaelis prefers his style, in respect of purity, to the other Evangelists, which he attributes to his long residence at Ephesus. Whether the Evangelist had herein any allusion to Cerinthus, or other ancient heretics, is much disputed among the learned. That he might have some reference to them, is, we think, hardly to be doubted; but the Scripture method of confuting error, was by stating the opposite truths, which John does very fully.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—18. Christ, the word of God.—There can be no reasonable doubt that the Word here (in Greek, Logos) is used personally, and intends the Son of God. (See notes.)

Such we consider to be the meaning of the term Logos, which our translators have rightly rendered "the Word." This Word, it is said, "was in the beginning," and when that phrase is not limited by the context, we conceive it always carries us back to "the beginning of the creation of God," at least of the Mosaic creation; for this only is the subject of divine revelation. The Son of God then, from the beginning, was "with God." Not as then first brought into being, but as Solomon speaks of Wisdom in his book of Proverbs, (chap. vii. 30,) "Then was I by him as one brought up with him." It is added, "Rejoicing in the habitable parts of the earth, and my delights were with the sons of men;" and if, with Bishop Patrick, Holden, and many others, we refer this passage to the Son of God, we may trace this analogy farther than is commonly done. "The word (or wisdom, for Logos means both,) was made flesh, and dwelt among us—full of grace and truth." Thus "the word" was with God, and came down to dwell with us.

But the Word was not only "with God;" he also "was God." Some translators have rendered it "was a god;" but this is a Pagan translation, and implies a plurality of gods. Neither would it do to introduce the definite article, and render it "was the God," as that would exclude from the rights of Deity the sacred person of the Father.

The beginning here is, by some, referred to "the beginning of the Gospel," which is the expression of the evangelist Mark, (ch. i. 1:) but he goes no farther back than the preaching of John the Baptist; John, the apostle, to the creation of all things. For, speaking of the same Word, he says, "All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made:" but this comes short of the original, and is very tamely expressed. Doddridge renders it, "without him was not made so much as one single being:" Campbell, (perhaps better,) "not a single creature." Both versions exclude the Word from being himself a creature. On the contrary, he is represented as the source of life and light, and every other blessing to mankind. John the Baptist is then introduced as bearing witness to "this light," which, by becoming incarnate, enlightened the world with the knowledge of the truth. John, however, declares, that he was not that light, but only came (so the morning star precedes the sun) as his harbinger and prophet.

But this same Word, by whom were made all things both in heaven and earth, was himself "made flesh." He had often, indeed, under the old dispensation, assumed a human or CHAP. I. Ver. 1. In the beginning.—"I cannot embrace the opinion of those critics," says Moses Stuart in his letters to Dr. Channing, "who think that the phrase 'in the beginning' of itself simply, signifies from eternity. Although I believe that the Word, Greek Logos, did exist from eternity, I do not think it is proved directly by this expression. (Compare Gen. i. 1.) That existence from eternity is implied, however, may be properly admitted. 'In the beginning,' is equivalent to in the beginning of the world, i. e. before the world was made; and so agreeing in this particular with the phrase, John xvii. 5, 'the glory that I had with thee before the world was;' and Eph. i. 4, 'before the foundation of the world.'

"Before the world was created, then, the Logos existed. Who or what was this Logos? A real existence; or only an attribute of God? A real substance; or only the wisdom, or reason, or power of God?

"The Logos appears to be a real existence, and not merely an attribute. For, first; the attributes of God are no where else personified by the New Testament writers; i. e. the usage of the New Testament authors is against this mode of writing. Secondly; Logos, if considered as an abstract term, or as merely designating an attribute, must mean either wisdom or word; and in what intelligible sense can the wisdom or the word of God, in the abstract sense, be said to have 'become flesh and dwelt among us,' v. 14; or why should John select either the wisdom or word of God, as any more concerned with the incarnation, than the benevolence of God, or the mercy of God, which one might suppose would be the attributes more especially displayed in the incarnation? Thirdly; if Logos mean here the power of God, as many assert, the exposition is attended with the same difficulties. Fourthly; if it mean, as others aver, the power of God putting itself forth, i. e. in creation, it is liable to the same objections. In short, make it any attribute of God thus personified, and you introduce a mode of writing that the New Testament no where else displays. Is it probable, that a revelation from heaven is made to inform us that the attributes of a being are with that being; or what can be thought of the assertion, that the wisdom or power of God, is God himself?

"Let us proceed, now, to the second clause, 'and the Logos was with God;' i. e. as all agree, with God the Father. Compare verses 14 and 18; also chap. xvii. 5, and 1 John i. 1, 2; which make the point clear. Is this expression capable of any tolerable interpretation, without supposing that the Logos, who was with God, was in some respect or other different, or diverse from that God, with whom he was? This Logos was the same that became incarnate, ver. 14; that made the most perfect revelation of the will and character of God to men, ver. 18; and was called Christ. He was therefore, in some respect, diverse from the Father, and therefore by no means to be confounded with him. The phrase, 'and the Logos was with God,' amounts to asserting that the Logos was most intimately connected with God. See John i. 18, where the only begotten is said to be in the bosom of the Father, which is a phrase of similar import to the one under consideration.

"'And the Logos was God.' It is said, that 'Theos is destitute of the article, and therefore cannot designate the Divine Being, who is Supreme.' This observation, however, is far from being justifiable, either by the usage of the sacred writers, or the principles of Greek syntax. Among instances where the Supreme God is certainly designated, and yet the article is omitted, the inquirer may consult the very chapter in question, ver. 6, 13, 18; also, Mat. xix. 26. Luke xvi. 13. John ix. 33; xvi. 30. Rom. viii. 8. 1 Co. i. 3. Gal. i. 1. Ephes. ii. 8. Heb. ix. 14. Besides, every reader of Greek knows, that where the subject of a proposition has the article, the predicate omits it.

"I understand John as affirming, that the Logos was God, and yet was with God; viz. that he was truly divine, but still divine in such a manner, that there did exist a distinction between him and the Father. I take the word God, in one case, to mean, as in a great number of cases it does mean, God as Father; in the other case, I regard it as a description of Divine Being, of the Divinity, without reference to the distinction of Father; a use which is very common."—The Word.—"The Greek word Logos, is susceptible of several interpretations, the chief of which are reason and speech. . . . . The latter acceptation has been adopted by most interpreters. If the practice of preceding translators is ever entitled to implicit regard from their successors, it is when the subject is of so abstruse a nature, as hardly to admit an exposition which is not liable to great objections. . . . . Were I to desert it, (which I do not think there is here sufficient evidence to warrant,) I should prefer the word reason.

"I entirely agree with those who think it most likely that the allusion here is to a portion of holy writ, and not to the reveries of either Philo or Plato. The passage referred to is Proverbs viii. throughout. There is such a coincidence in the things attributed to each, as evidently shows, that both were intended to indicate the same divine personage. The passage in Proverbs, I own, admits of a more familiar explanation, as regarding the happy consequences of that mental quality, which we call true or heavenly wisdom: but it is suitable to the genius of scripture prophecy to convey, under such allegorical language, the most important and sublime discoveries."—Campbell. Compare our exposition, which was written before we observed this note.

In our exposition of this verse, we have mentioned the Chaldee word Memra, which the Targums use, as corresponding both to the Heb. Debar, and the Gr. Logos. They use it not only for the Word of God, the Angel of God, and the Messiah, but for God himself; and sometimes in a way that can only be accounted for by considering it as a favourite term, which they seem often to introduce without occasion, and even without any distinct meaning. But it had been imported from the Alexandrian School, and become naturalized among the Jews before the time of John; and in Greek, Logos was always used as corresponding with it, and was the only term, therefore, adapted to the use of the Evangelist. See the Bishop of St. David's "The Bible, and nothing but the Bible." Also, Dr. Smith's Messiah.—The word was God.—Luther, and the English translators of Henry VIII., adhering to the order of the original, read, "God was the word." The sense is the same, but it is worse English. Because the Greek article is prefixed to the word, but not to God, some would render it, (as the Unitarian version,) "The word was A God." But Campbell remarks, that "though the article prefixed shows a noun to be definite, the bare want of the article is not sufficient evidence that the noun is used indefinitely. See verses 6, 12, 13, and 18, of this chapter, in all which, though the word "God" (Theos) has no article, there can be no doubt that it means God, in the strictest sense."

Ver. 3. All things were made by him.—"The all things which the Logos created, means, (as common usage and the exigency of the passage require,) the universe; the worlds material and immaterial. (Ver. 10.) Here, consequently, in the first chapter of John, is a passage in which, beyond all reasonable doubt, Christ is called God; and where the context, instead of furnishing us with reasons for understanding the word God in an inferior sense, (as is usual, when this designation is applied to inferior beings,) has plainly and unequivocally taught us, that this God, who was the Logos, created the universe. The Bible every where appeals to creative power, as the peculiar and distinguishing prerogative of the Supreme God; and attributes it solely to Jehovah. Read Gen. ii. 2, 3. Ex. xx. 11. Is. xliv. 24. Je. x. 12. Ps. viii. 3, 4. cii. 25, and other passages of the same tenor. Read Isaiah xl., and onward, where God by his prophet makes a most solemn challenge to all polytheists, to bring the objects of their worship into competition with him; and declares himself to be distinguished from them all, by his being "the Creator of the ends of the earth," (v. 28;) and by his having formed and arranged the heavens, (v. 26.)"—Stuart's Letters to Channing.

Ver. 5. The darkness comprehended it not.—Doddridge, "apprehended it not."—Campbell, "admitted it not." The allusion seems to be to air, so gross and foul as to extinguish any light (link or torch) that may be introduced into it.

Ver. 7. That all men through him—i. e. all who heard his testimony—might believe—In Jesus.

Ver. 9. Which lighteth every man that cometh, &c.—Doddridge, "which coming into the world enlighteneth every man."—"He that cometh," was a periphrasis for the Messiah. See ch. vi. 14, &c.

Ver. 10. Knew him not.—They neither knew nor acknowledged him, as the word often means.

Ver. 11. He came unto his own, and his own, &c.—The word "own," in the first instance, is neuter; in the second, masculine; it is, therefore, properly rendered by Campbell, "He came unto his own (land,) and his own (people) received him not." See Luke xx. 9—16

14 ¶ And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and [t] we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full [u] of grace and truth.

15 ¶ John [v] bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me: for he was before me.

16 And of his fulness [w] have all we received, and grace for grace.

17 For the law was given by Moses, but grace [x] and truth came by Jesus Christ.

18 No man hath seen God [y] at any time; the [z] only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

19 ¶ And this [a] is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou?

20 And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ.

21 And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou [b] that prophet? And he answered, No.

22 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

23 He [c] said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the [d] prophet Esaias.

24 And they which were sent were of the Pharisees.

25 And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?

26 John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth [e] one among you, whom ye know not;

27 He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.

28 These things were done in [f] Beth-abara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

angelic form, and sometimes appeared in the "form of God;" but now he became or was "made flesh;" not transiently appearing, as of old, in the human form, but he tabernacled, or, as Doddridge expresses it, "pitched his tabernacle." to abide for some time with men: the glory of the Divine Nature being veiled in the humanity, just as that of the Shechinah was shrouded in the accompanying cloud; and as the glory shone at times more or less conspicuously through the cloud, so the glory of the Word, "as of the only begotten of the Father," shone through the veil of human nature with beams of grace and truth. These beams, however, were seen but by a few only. He came to the world which he had made, to the nation whom he had chosen, but they received him not; a few only excepted, on whom he bestowed the privilege of becoming sons of God by adoption and by grace. This St. John expresses in his usual manner, both negatively and positively. They were "born, not of blood;" that is, they were not sons of God merely by natural generation, as sons of Abraham—not by circumcision, as in the case of proselytes from other nations—not by "the will of the flesh," that is, by any natural effort of their own, nor "of the will of" any other "man," as in the case of adoption, at this time a common practice with the Romans,—"but of God;" by which we understand that the true regeneration of which our Lord here and elsewhere discourses, is wholly of divine grace. This passage might lead us to inquire into the Scripture doctrine of Regeneration, but as that subject will necessarily come more fully under discussion in the third chapter of this Gospel, we shall not here enlarge; but only add one remark, that it is by faith in Christ only that we obtain the privilege of becoming sons of God: it is a favour granted to them only who believe in his name.

The 14th verse of this chapter speaks of Christ in reference to his two natures, divine and human: considered in respect to the former, he is "the only begotten of the Father;" that is, he is his Son in a sense to which neither men nor angels can pretend; he is "the express image of the Father." (Heb. i. 3.) And in respect of the latter, as man and mediator, he is full of grace and truth: he is the great depository, and the only channel of revealed truth and grace to men. Taking the 15th verse as a parenthesis, as we are strongly inclined to do, (see note,) we defer the consideration of it till after the 18th, (which some consider its proper place,) and connect it with the 14th, the 16th, and two following, which leaves the narrative unbroken. John had said that the Word, or Son of God, was full of grace and truth, and therefore very naturally adds, "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." 1. He was "full of grace," and therefore his ministers and people receive from him an accumulation of grace—grace in rich abundance. And, 2. He possessed a rich variety of graces, and therefore does he communicate to us "grace answerable unto" all the graces which himself possesses, though at humble distance in respect of measure and perfection.

It is added, "the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." The law given by Moses was either the moral law, and that had no grace: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," (Ezek. xviii. 4;) or it was the ceremonial law, and that had no truth; that is, no reality; for it was only "the shadow of good things to come," of which Christ was the substance. (Heb. x. 1, &c.) For "grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Chrysostom, the eloquent Greek father, remarks, these words are evidently not the language of the Baptist, who uses not the name of Jesus. "No man hath seen God [the Father] at any time:" the divine nature is invisible; "but the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father,"—that is, who occupies the seat next to him in dignity and power, (see expos. of Luke xvi. 22,) "He hath made him known." He is come upon the express errand of making known his Father's character, and to reveal his will to men for their salvation. Let us therefore resign ourselves into the hands of God our Saviour, and implore his aid, to study and to practice whatever he is pleased to teach us.

> "O that the Lord would guide my ways
> To keep his statutes still!
> O that my God would grant me grace
> To know and do his will."—Watts.

Ver. 19—34. John's testimony to Jesus.—No one of our Lord's disciples discovered more of the cardinal virtue of humility than did John the Baptist. In the midst of his great popularity, respected by all classes, and even feared by Herod, still he sinks in his own estimation, and shrinks from public notice. Speaking of Messiah, he says, "He must increase, but I must decrease." I am his herald only, and, having introduced him to public notice, I must withdraw into obscurity. This conduct of John reminds us of the Pagan philosopher, Antisthenes, who kept a school of rhetoric; but, when he heard Socrates, he shut up his school, and told his pupils, "Go seek for yourselves a master, I have found one:" but John did better; when he had found a master for himself, he recommended him to all his followers.

But there seems some difficulty to reconcile what John here says, "I knew him not," with the account of Matthew, that when Jesus came to be baptized, John forbade him, as having more need to be baptized by him, which shows that he knew who he was. We have, indeed, no doubt that he was persuaded in his own mind: but he had not yet received that miraculous attestation to the fact which he had been taught to expect, and without which he was not authorized, in his prophetic character, to announce him as Messiah, which therefore he did not until he saw "the sign from heaven,"—the decisive proof of his divine mission. (See Mat. iii. 16.) Then, says he, "I saw and bare record, that this is the Son of God."

Ver. 14. The Word was made flesh.—Campbell, "became incarnate," which is doubtless the true sense, though not so simple. The word made, is the same that is used ver. 3; it is of very extensive use, and in most of its senses is applied to Christ. Ver. 3 and 10, Schleusner understands it of creation: so also Heb. xi. 3. James iii. 9. It is also applied to his incarnation, "made of a woman," Gal. iv. 4; to his being "made," or constituted, "a prophet," Luke xxiv. 19; and in various other ways.——And dwelt—Literally, "tabernacled." (So Wesley.) Campbell, "sojourned." See Heb. xi. 9. But Doddridge thinks it an allusion to the Shechinah or (divine) glory which resided in the tabernacle.

The incarnation of the Son of God was doubtless anticipated under the Patriarchal dispensation. Abraham, and other Old Testament believers, by faith saw "his day," and rejoiced in it. (Chap. viii. 56.) From them the doctrine spread among the heathen, all whose deities became occasionally incarnate; but the most extraordinary notions of this kind are to be found among the Hindoos. According to them, Veeshnu (or Chreeshna) was nine times incarnate, for various great and important purposes, of which the last was, to put an end to human sacrifices. See "Dictionary of Religions," 3d edition, under Hindoos.——Full of grace and truth.—Grace and truth, the sum of that emanation of divine fulness, called in Scripture, the glory of God.—Edwards.

Ver. 15. John bare witness, &c.—Campbell includes this verse in a parenthesis, and connects the 16th with the 14th, thus,—The Word was "full of grace and truth;" and "of his fulness have all we received," &c.——He was before me.—Though the Greek protos, is sometimes used for pre-eminence, (as Lardner shows,) yet as the preceding clause ("he that cometh after me") refers to time, it seems far the most natural to understand this in the same manner as Doddridge does, "He existed before me." This verse seems in anticipation of verse 19. See verse 30.

Ver. 16. Grace for grace.—The Greek preposition (anti) rendered for, is capable of various acceptations; we shall mention only two, which we think most probable. "Grace for grace" is then either, 1. Grace upon grace; so Doddridge, Wesley, and others; or, 2. Grace answering to grace. See Parkhurst.

Ver. 18. He hath declared him.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Hath made him known." Compare chap. vi. 46.

Ver. 19. Levites.—The posterity of Levi—appointed by the Mosaic law, to be the ministers or servants of the priests.

Ver. 21. Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not.—He was not Elijah come from the invisible world, as the Jews doubtless meant; (for such was their expectation;) yet he was the Elias intended by the prophet Malachi. Mat. xi. 1—19.—That prophet.—The Greek is more accurately rendered by Campbell, "The Christ," and "The Prophet." See Deut. xviii. 15.

Ver. 28. In Bethabara.—Campbell reads, "in Bethany:" and adds, that "the MSS. which read Bethany, are, both in number and in value, more than a counterpoise to those in which we find the vulgar reading (Bethabara.) Add to these, the Vulgate, the Saxon, and both the Syriac versions." &c. So Grie-

29 ¶ The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb [g] of God, which [h] taketh [i] away the sin of the world.

30 This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

31 And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32 And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33 And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining [j] on him, the same is he which baptizeth [k] with the Holy Ghost.

34 And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

35 ¶ Again the next day after, John stood, and two of his disciples;

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God!

37 And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where [l] dwellest thou?

39 He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about [m] the tenth hour.

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.

42 And he brought him to Jesus And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou [o] shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, [r] A stone.

43 ¶ The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow me.

44 Now Philip was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

45 Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses [q] in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46 And Nathanael said unto him, [r] Can there

From this time, it seems, he recommended his disciples to follow Jesus. Some of them, at least, did so, as for instance, Andrew, Simon's brother, (ver. 40;) and afterwards, when any appear to have doubted the fact of Jesus being the Messiah, John sent them to hear his preaching, and see his miracles, as affording the most decisive evidence. (Matt. xi. 3—5.)

But the evidence which John gave concerning Jesus, is chiefly confined to two points,—1. The divinity of his character, as "the Son of God;" and, 2. The efficacy of his atonement, as being "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world." These great truths should never be lost sight of by a preacher of the cross, as being the foundation of the Christian system. If John insisted on these points, even before the death of Christ, how much more should ministers of the Gospel do so, in subsequent ages, after the atonement has been offered, and after the doctrine of the cross has been made the power of God to the salvation of so many thousands of mankind.

We may also here remark how much clearer views the Baptist had of the office and work of Christ than any of his own apostles! No sooner, however, was the Holy Ghost poured down on the day of Pentecost, than even Peter, who would not hear of the death of Christ before, made it his continual theme.

> "Let the vain world pronounce it shame,
> And fling their scandals on the cause;
> We boast our Saviour's (worthy) name,
> And make our triumphs in his cross."—Watts.

Ver. 35—51. The calling of Andrew and Peter, Philip and Nathanael.—Andrew appears to have been the first called of all the twelve apostles. He was previously a disciple of the Baptist, and, as we here see, followed Jesus in consequence of the recommendation of John, his master. The other disciple with him, is supposed to have been John the Apostle; but this conjecture is founded only on the concealment of his name, which is believed to have been the case with John in other instances, where himself was meant.

When they followed Jesus it was about the tenth hour of the day, which, reckoning from six in the morning, makes it four in the afternoon, from which hour they remained with Jesus, at his apartment, till the evening. Before, however, Andrew went in to sit down, he went in search of his brother Simon, who appears to have been near upon the spot, and went with him; and they sat down together, listening, and doubtless "wondering," as others had done before, at the gracious words which proceeded from the Saviour's mouth. On this occasion, it should seem, Jesus first gave to Simon the name of Peter, which is here explained to signify "a stone." In Matt. xvi. 18, our Lord alludes to the same interpretation but, by this passage, the name had been imposed long before. It does not appear, however, that these disciples immediately forsook their callings and followed Jesus: the probability is, that their constant attendance was not required till Jesus formed an establishment, and provided them a home.

Next day—the frequent use of this term seems to imply that John, when not occupied in his official duties, used to walk with some of his disciples on the banks of the Jordan, and Jesus probably did the same. Whenever John, therefore, saw Jesus, he pointed his disciples to him as "the Lamb of God," or the Saviour of the world: and thus bare record of him in the face of his disciples and the public. The consequence was, that many of John's disciples followed Jesus, as he had himself predicted—"He must increase, but I must decrease."

But what most interests us in this section, is the calling of Nathanael, whom we have supposed to be the same with Bartholomew the apostle, (see expos. of Luke vi. 12—19,) and on whose amiable character we shall here offer a few observations. 1. We mark his simplicity—he was "an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile;" no hypocrisy, no dissimulation: yet, 2. Though simple, he was not credulous; so far from it, he scrupled to believe in Jesus because he came from Nazareth, a town inhabited by ignorant, rude, and vicious characters; so that it appears to have been a proverbial saying, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Thus the good physician placed himself in the centre of the diseased. 3. Though not credulous, he did not obstinately resist evidence: when Jesus convinced him that he knew what passed in his secret retirement, he at once acknowledged the divinity of his character: "Rabbi, [master or doctor,] thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel." 4. We have here an instance not only of Nathanael's simplicity and honesty, but of his piety; since "under the fig-tree" appears to have been his usual place for retirement and prayer, where he knew that he was excluded from every eye but his who readeth the heart.

Our Lord here adds, addressing Nathanael, and the other disciples with him, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending [to wait] upon the Son of man." Several instances of this nature occurred to the apostles (of whom we have reckoned Nathanael to be one) during their master's life; but the grand instance of it was at his ascension, (Acts i. 11,) to be exceeded only at the day of judgment. (See Matt. xxiv. 31, 32; xxvi. 30.) It appears to us that angels were constantly in attendance upon our Lord, though not always visible to others; and who can say that they attend not on his disciples also? "Are they bach. Bethany signifies a ferry house; but this Bethany was not where Lazarus and his sisters lived, but beyond, or "upon the Jordan," where probably a ferry boat was stationed.

Ver. 31. I knew him not.—This is differently explained. Doddridge says, "knew him not" personally, which seems difficult to believe, since all the male branches of families used to meet at the three great feasts at Jerusalem, which we know Jesus was accustomed to attend; and Zacharias, the father of John, being a priest, would naturally bring up his family in that duty. Campbell thinks that John might have known Jesus to be a prophet, yet not the Messiah; but being himself a prophet, even supposing he had not heard of his miraculous conception, or early devotedness to God, (which is scarcely probable,) he must have naturally suspected that he was the person to whom he was appointed forerunner.

Ver. 33. I knew him not.—There seems to have been a special providence in the circumstance of John and Jesus being brought up at such a distance—one in the desert of Judea, and the other in Lower Galilee, (not less than 60 or 70 miles apart,) and never seeing each other, but at the three great festivals, which cut off all reasonable suspicion of confederacy or collusion.

Ver. 36. Behold the Lamb.—[An allusion to the morning and evening sacrifice, which typified the Lamb of God, who should bear away the sins of the world.]—Baxter.

Ver. 39. About the tenth hour.—Supposing these hours to be reckoned according to the Roman method, from six in the morning, they bring us to four in the afternoon, which our translators, in their marginal note, remark, was two hours before night, reckoning their day from six to six.

Ver. 42. Son of Jona—Or Jonas; probably an abridgment of Joanna, or John.—Cephas—In Syriac, agrees with Peter, in Greek, (so our English margin,) both signifying a stone. See note on Mat. xvi. 17—20.

CHAPTER II.

[a] Christ turneth water into wine, 12 departeth into Capernaum, and to Jerusalem, 14 where he purgeth the temple of buyers and sellers. 19 He foretelleth his death and resurrection. 23 Many believed because of his miracles, but he would not trust himself with them.

AND the third day there was a marriage in Cana [a] of Galilee: and the mother of Jesus was there:

2 And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the [b] marriage.

3 And [c] when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine.

4 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come.

5 His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever [d] he saith unto you, do it.

6 And there were set there six water-pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece.

7 Jesus saith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he saith unto them, Draw [e] out now, and bear unto the governor [f] of the feast. And they bare it.

9 When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was; (but the [g] servants which drew the water knew;) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good [h] wine until now.

11 This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested [i] forth his glory; and his disciples believed [j] on him.

12 ¶ After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—11. Our Lord attends a marriage feast, and changes water into wine.—In explaining this narrative, it is necessary to glance at the nature of the Jewish marriages, which lasted seven days, persons coming and going, perhaps, all the time. (Judg. xiv. 17.) From a deficiency of wine it has been inferred that the married couple were poor; but it is equally possible that the report of Jesus being present at the feast, had drawn together an accession of guests, quite unexpected. On these occasions a president, or governor of the feast, was appointed to regulate the festival and preserve decorum.

Many reasons may be assigned for the attendance of Jesus on this occasion. The marriage was probably an alliance formed in his own family; and though circumstances would not permit his sanctioning the sacred ordinance by his example, his presence on this occasion might be designed to express his approbation of a union instituted by God himself, and sanctioned by holy men of every age. He might wish it to be understood also, that he was no cynical philosopher, but designed to mix in all the innocent enjoyments, as well as duties, of civil life, which were not incompatible with his divine character. He was no ascetic, nor affected the retirement of a desert; but he came eating and drinking, even with reputed sinners, that he might have the better opportunity of introducing his holy doctrines and precepts among all classes of society.

The language of Jesus on this occasion, to his virgin mother, appears mysterious, and cannot perhaps be fully explained. The epithet "Woman," however abrupt it may sound to English ears, in Greek means nothing disrespectful; but was addressed, by men the most accomplished, to females of the highest rank. And the expression, "What have I to do with thee?" (or, rather, "What hast thou to do with me?") though it may imply a gentle reproof, may only be designed to intimate that whatever filial duty Jesus might owe to Mary, as his mother, that relation gave her no right to interfere with his public duties. He was "about his Father's business," as he had said many years before, (Luke ii. 49,) and knew when and how to act, without any human direction. His "hour" (as he said on other occasions) was not yet come, and he might have wise reasons for delay, unknown to her as well as to us; and it is evident she did not understand this as a refusal, because she directed the servants to obey his orders.

"At the command of Jesus (says Bishop Taylor) the water-pots were filled with water, and the water was, by his divine power, turned into wine, where the different economy of God and the world is highly observable. Every man sets for h good wine at first, and then the worse; but God not only turns the water into wine, but into such wine that the last draught is most pleasant. The world presents us with fair language, promising hopes, convenient fortunes, pompous honours, and these are the outside of the bowl; but, when it is swallowed, these dissolve in the instant, and there remains bitterness, and the malignity of colliquintida, (i. e. the wild cucumber, bitter and acrid in the extreme.) Every sin smiles in the first advance, and carries light in the face and honey on the lip; but, when we have well drunk, then comes that which is worse,—fears and terrors of conscience, and shame and displeasure, and diffidence [we might add, despair] in the day of death—[But] Jesus keeps the best wine till the last: not only because of the direct reservation of the highest joys till the near approaches of glory, but also because our relishes are higher after a long fruition than at the first essays; such being the nature of grace, that it increases in relish as it does in fruition." (Life of Christ.)

This is called "the beginning," or "first," of Christ's miracles, as Dr. Campbell renders it; for we pay no regard to the reports of the juvenile miracles which compose the pseudo-gospels of "the apocryphal New Testament:" and by this miracle he showed forth not only the glory of his power, but of his beneficence; and all his miracles were of the same benevolent cast. As he turned water into wine, so he turned pain into ease, darkness into light, and death into life: in this case also he kept the best wine till last.

Ver. 12—25. Jesus purges the temple, and foretels his own death.—It seems evident, and is so generally understood.

Ver. 46. Nazareth.—This was a town of Lower Galilee, about two leagues East from Mount Tabor. It bore a bad character, even among the Galileans, which is fully justified by the treatment which our Lord himself received from them, Luke iv. 28, 29. This is one instance in which our Saviour "made himself of no reputation."

Ver. 51. Verily, verily.—Greek, Amen, Amen, which is, in fact, a Hebrew word, signifying "certainly," or "in truth;" but it is remarkable that John, in adopting this word, always doubles it, while the other Evangelists use it singly; a circumstance we can account for only from the earnestness of his manner.—Angels . . . ascending and descending, to wait, &c.—So Doddridge. But Campbell renders it, "ascending from . . . and descending upon."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Cana of Galilee.—A small town, four or five miles from Nazareth.

Ver. 4. Woman.—It is evident that there is nothing disrespectful in this address, as it was used by our Lord on the most affecting of all occasions, and when he evinced his exquisite sympathy and tender regard for this very parent, ch. xix. 26. Xenophon puts it into the mouth of a Persian chief, when consoling a captive lady of the highest rank. Augustus is made to use it to Cleopatra, and Antenor to Helen. It may, therefore, be considered as equivalent to Madam. See Orient. Lit. No. 1337.—What have I to do with thee?—Parkhurst and Campbell, "What hast thou to do with me?" The expression, though certainly not disrespectful, implies reproof: "Why dost thou interfere?"—Mine hour is not yet come—i. e. The time for me to act is not yet come.

Ver. 6. Two or three firkins.—This is an English measure, unknown to the Greeks or Jews. Doddridge, Campbell, and others, suppose the Hebrew Baths to be intended, which are reckoned to contain from four to seven gallons each; but it were better to leave it indefinite—measures.

Ver. 8. The governor of the feast—i. e. the president or chairman, whose duty on such occasions is described by the author of Ecclesiasticus, chap. xxxii. 1. The Greek term is architriclinos, who sat at the head of the table, which was shaped like the Greek letter Π, as represented by ancient painters. Compare note on Mat. xxvi. 20.

Ver. 9. When the ruler—Or governor; it is the same word.

Ver. 10. When men have well drunk.—Doddridge, "drank plentifully;" Campbell, "largely," or "freely," which last term seems best. The LXX use the same word in Gen. xliii. 34. Sol. Song v. 1. Hag. i. 6; in none of which does it imply intoxication.

Ver. 11. Cana.—[Cana, a town of Galilee, now called Cane Gabl, or Kepher Kenna, is situated, according to the authority of modern travellers, between fifteen and sixteen miles west of Tiberias, about six miles S. E of Sephoris or Saffoury, and between four and five miles N. E by E of Nazareth. I

13 ¶ And the Jews' passover [k] was at hand, and Jesus [l] went up to Jerusalem,

14 And found [m] in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting:

15 And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables;

16 And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise.

17 And his disciples remembered that it was [n] written, The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up.

18 ¶ Then answered the Jews and said unto him, What sign [o] showest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things?

19 Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy [p] this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.

20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?

21 But he spake of the temple [q] of his body.

CHAPTER III.

1 Christ teacheth Nicodemus the necessity of regeneration. 14 Of faith in his death. 16 The great love of God towards the world. 18 Condemnation for unbelief. 23 The baptism, witness, and doctrine of John concerning Christ.

THERE was a man of the Pharisees, named [a] Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews:

2 The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for [b] no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except [c] God be with him.

3 Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, [d] Except a man be born [e] again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

that our Lord twice, at least, cleansed the temple of these cattle-traders and money-changers. This, which was the first instance, must have happened soon after the miracle just related; the latter instance occurred near the close of his ministry, and is related by the three other Evangelists. (Matt. xxi. 12. Mark xi. 15. Luke xix. 45.)

To avoid repetition, we beg to refer our readers to the observations offered by us on Matthew, so far as the circumstances agree; we add only a remark on the proneness there is in mere professors of religion to make a gain of godliness; and to pursue their own interests, under the pretence of serving God. For it was doubtless the pretence of these men, in bringing their cattle into the courts of the temple, to serve the convenience of those who wanted them for sacrifice; and of the money-changers, to accommodate either buyers or sellers with exchange for money or drafts: but, careless as they were in religion, we cannot believe that the priests would have tolerated these excesses, had they not reaped advantages therefrom, either in the form of rentage for the ground, or fees for the privilege of their standing! Strong and severe as was the language of our Lord, relative to these guardians of the temple, we doubt not but that it was perfectly just; and we fear that there are few temples, few churches, few chapels, few religious institutions of any kind, in which his eyes, which are "as a flame of fire," do not discern some thieves who rob God and oppress his poor! Alas! if the sons of Aaron—if the sons of Eli, practised villany, we need not wonder to find the like in the degenerate days of Herod and Caiaphas. And when the Son of Man again "cometh, shall he find faith in the earth,"—fidelity in the church—or integrity in its ministers? (See Luke xviii. 8.)

It is not wonderful that the Jews, both priests and laymen, should be alarmed on this occasion. A Reformer comes among them, under the character of a Prophet, and by the zeal he manifests, they know not how far the reform may spread; and every priest and every ruler, conscious of abuses, trembles lest it should extend to him;—the more so, as reformers are naturally sanctioned by the injured and oppressed. Certain Jews, therefore, probably deputed by the Sanhedrim, demand of him a sign, or miracle, in proof of his divine authority as a Reformer: "What sign showest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things?"

Jesus replied, no doubt, with such an expressive action (pointing to himself) as might have led them to a just interpretation of his meaning: "Destroy this temple," meaning the temple of his body; "and in three days I will raise it up." The Jews, however, whether through inattention or perverseness, understood Jesus as speaking of the temple in which they then were; and, therefore, shocked with the impossibility of such a thing, they exclaim, "Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it in three days?" "But (says the historian) he spake of the temple of his body."

A difficulty has been felt in making out the "forty and six years" here mentioned, since, by the account of Josephus, it was built within eight or nine. Lardner remarks, however, that this refers to what Herod did at his own expense; but the Jews were continually adding improvements and embellishments, as late as A. D. 65, within a few years of its final destruction by Titus. Yet they, as well as the Christians, called this the second temple.

Not only did the Jews misunderstand our Lord, as to the temple of which he spake, but his disciples appear not to have comprehended his meaning till after his resurrection: "then remembered they that he had said this." So our Lord had promised, that after his resurrection the Holy Spirit should bring "all things to their remembrance" which he had said to them. (Ch. xiv. 26.)

In this, and in every instance in which the Jews demanded a miracle, our Lord constantly refused to gratify them, because his miracles were mostly designed to relieve the poor and the distressed: during the time of the Passover, however, Jesus remaining at Jerusalem, wrought many miracles, and those who saw them believed in him; but these people, though they actually witnessed many miracles of this nature, were always inquiring after others—probably wishing to see some splendid exhibition of his power—such as that to which Satan tempted him, (Matt. iv. 6,) to cast himself down from a pinnacle of the temple, before all the congregation. But Jesus, though he never sent away a poor and miserable object in distress, never wrought a miracle merely to exhibit himself, or gratify curious hearers.

As to those who did, or at least professed to believe in him, he knew too much of human nature to trust in them. "He knew man"—his weakness, frailness, and inconstancy; and he knew "what was in man," namely, the deceitfulness and depravity which was in his heart. (Matt. xv. 18, 19.) He, therefore, never trusted himself in the hands of his enemies till his hour was come, to offer himself in sacrifice for our salvation.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—8. Our Lord's discourse with Nicodemus.—The doctrine of regeneration, or the new birth, is here proposed in terms so clearly indicative of its high importance, as to call for our particular attention. Nicodemus was not only a ruler, or magistrate of the Jews, but, from chap. vii. 50, of this gospel, has been generally considered as a member of the Sanhedrim, or great council of Jewish rulers. He came to Jesus by night, partly, perhaps, for the sake of privacy; and partly, because then less liable to be interrupted, either by his own friends or Jesus's disciples. And though he had probably heard of his mean origin, he had heard also of his miracles and discourses, which marked him as the great prophet to be sent from heaven, (Deut. xviii. 15,) and consequently entitled to very high respect. He therefore addresses him by the title of Rabbi, which was always appropriated to their learned is a neat little village, pleasantly situated on the descent of a hill, facing the south-west, with a copious spring, surrounded with plantations of olive and other fruit trees; and contains about 300 inhabitants, chiefly Catholic Christians. Pococke saw a large ruined building, the walls of which were entire, and which they said occupied the site of the house of the marriage. Near it was a large new Greek church; and on the south side of the village, near the fountain, there were the ruins of another church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and said to have been his house.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. Of small cords—i. e. the cords that had been employed to tie up the cattle.—Oxen.—Campbell, "cattle." Oxen (properly speaking) being castrated animals, could not be sacrificed. The common idea that Jesus scourged the money changers is unfounded. The scourge, as is evident from the original, was used only in driving the sheep and oxen from the temple.

Ver. 16. A house of merchandise.—Doddridge and Campbell, "traffic"—a public market: and the extent of that market may be judged of from what Josephus tells us, that at one passover the Jews sacrificed 256,500 victims of different kinds, which amount to more than 32,000 daily. It is possible, however, that Josephus exaggerated, as well as the Jews: he mentions, that Herod, in his 15th year, in repairing the temple, doubled the space of ground which had enclosed it, which will account for this large market. See Lardner's Cred. ii. 290.

CHAP. III. Ver. 3. Except a man be born again.—The Greek (anothen) is ambiguous, and means either "again," or "from above;" and some expositors prefer the latter interpretation, which it is clear the word bears, both in verse 31, of this chapter, and in ch. xix. 11. "But that the common version is here preferable, (says Dr. Campbell,) is evident from the answer given by Nicodemus, which shows that he understood it no otherwise than as a second birth. And let it be remembered, that in the Chaldee language spoken by our 4 Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

men, and considered as equivalent to Doctor, among ourselves. "We know," said he—that is, we rulers know, though few of us have the courage to confess it—"that thou art a teacher, come" express "from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." Under this impression, the Jewish ruler comes to make farther inquiries into the doctrines of Jesus, and into the religious system he was about to introduce among the people. Our Lord, meaning at once to direct him to the most important part of true religion, cuts off all farther inquiries by abruptly stating, but in the most solemn manner, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." By "the kingdom of God," it is admitted that our Lord must mean the gospel dispensation, which could neither be understood nor enjoyed without this indispensable qualification; but what can this being born again mean? Not, surely, moral reformation; for, whatever might be the case with others, this man's morals appear to be irreproachable. Nor, 2, any merely outward rite; for after this solemn introduction, to make the great essential of Christianity consist merely in an outward rite, would be an instance of the bathos in Theology, which be far from our Redeemer! But to us it appears to be that same great point which is elsewhere represented, both by our Lord and his apostles, under images very similar. Thus, when his disciples discovered a spirit of pride and ambition, (Matt. xviii. 3,) he set a little child before them, and said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." And what is this becoming as little children, but the being born again? It is to have the heart humbled by repentance, and renewed by grace. So St. Peter, after the day of Pentecost, addresses the murderers of his Lord, (Acts iii. 19,) "Repent, therefore, and be converted, [or become as little children,] that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord"—that is, when he shall come in the glory of his gospel kingdom. And the same apostle, speaking of persons thus converted, states, that they were "born again; not of corruptible seed," that is, of erroneous doctrines, "but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." (1 Pet. i. 23.) So the apostle John, who relates this conversation with Nicodemus, tells us, that "whosoever [in his heart] believes that Jesus is the Christ," is "born of God"—the very phrase used by our Lord, ver. 13; and that whosoever loveth his brother is "born of God and knoweth God, and doth not commit sin"—that is, doth not live in its allowed practice. (See 1 John iii. 9; iv. 7; v. 1, 4, 18.) On a comparison of these passages, then, it appears to us, that the regeneration of which the Scriptures speak, implies faith, repentance, and good works, or "works meet for repentance." (Acts xxvi. 20.)

But what has chiefly led to a different interpretation seems to be, that these persons are said to be born both "of water and the spirit." With respect to the latter, there can be no difficulty in believing that spiritual regeneration is the work of God's Holy Spirit; but what is it to "be born of water?" This is generally understood of baptism, considered as a sign or emblem of true regeneration, rather than the thing itself: and so it seems to be considered by St. Paul. Writing to the believing Romans, (ch. vi. 3, 4,) he says—"Know ye not, that as many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?" that is, into the belief of his death and atonement on our behalf. "Therefore," adds he, in allusion to what then seems to have been the usual mode of baptism, "we are buried with him by baptism into death"—dying to sin as he did to the world; "that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." And again, (1 Cor. v. 17,) "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature;" which corresponds with the spiritual regeneration inculcated by our Lord.

That baptism, or the being "born of water," stands connected with regeneration, or being "born of the spirit," as its sign or emblem, is freely admitted, and for that reason also, as we humbly conceive, it cannot be the thing signified. It was this similarity, however, as we suppose, which led the Greek and Latin fathers to call baptism by the names of regeneration, illumination, &c.; in consequence of which, this became the doctrine of the Greek and Latin churches, from the latter of which it has been adopted by many Protestant divines, under different modifications of opinion, or expression, which we are not called upon to examine. The fatal mistake against which we wish to guard our readers, is, that true Christianity consists merely in outward rites and forms, rather than in "an honest and good heart," derived not by natural generation from our depraved first parents, but renewed by God's Spirit, and filled with holy dispositions and desires, which necessarily produce good works, and a virtuous conversation.

That this is not, and cannot be, effected by any outward form or ceremony, is, we think, abundantly evident from our Lord's own words—"That which is born of the flesh is flesh," that is, merely carnal and corrupt; but that which is "born of the Spirit" of God is purely "spiritual," both in its nature and effects. Nor is it certain that material water is at all meant, any more than material fire was intended by the fiery baptism which our Lord promised to his disciples, Luke iii. 16. Water, and fire, and air, the great purifying agents in Nature, are all used as emblems of the Spirit's influences on man; so "the washing of water by the word," and "the washing of regeneration," are explained by some of our best commentators and divines, of the purifying influences of the Spirit, by means of the written or preached word. (See Ephes. v. 26; and Titus iii. 5.)

Our Lord proceeds to illustrate this by the operation of the air or wind: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof; but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the spirit." This verse is thus illustrated by Dr. Campbell:—"Nor is there (as if he had said) any thing in this either absurd or unintelligible. The wind, which in Hebrew is expressed by the same word as spirit, shall serve for an example. It is invisible; we hear the noise it makes, but cannot discover what occasions its rise or its fall. It is known to us solely by its effects. Just so it is with this second birth. The Spirit himself, the great agent, is invisible; his manner of operating is beyond our discovery; but the reality of his operation is perceived by the effects produced on the disposition and life of the regenerate."

We shall conclude this section with another admirable extract from Bishop Taylor:—"This was strange philosophy to Nicodemus; but Jesus bade him not to wonder; for this is not a work of humanity, but a fruit of God's Spirit, and an issue of predestination. For the Spirit bloweth where it listeth, and is, as the wind, certain and notorious in its effects; but secret in the principle, and in the manner of production; and, therefore, this doctrine was not to be estimated by any proportions to natural principles, and experiments of sense, but to the secrets of a new metaphysics, and abstracted separate speculations. Then Christ proceeds in his sermon, telling him that there are yet higher things for him to apprehend and believe; for this, in respect of some other mysteriousness of his gospel, was but as earth in comparison of heaven. Then he tells of his own descent from heaven, foretels his death and ascension, and the blessing of redemption, which he came to work for mankind; he preaches of the love of the Father, the mission of the Son, the rewards of faith, and the glories of eternity."

Ver. 9—21. Our Lord's discourse with Nicodemus continued.—Dr. Campbell here remarks—"The reproof conveyed in this verse, is thought to have an allusion to certain figures Lord, there is not the same ambiguity which we find in the Greek." The oldest versions concur in the former interpretation, which is also clearly the sense of the word in Gal. iv. 9.

Ver. 5. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit—i. e. except a man be born not only of water, but also of the Spirit. Christian baptism, strictly speaking, was not yet instituted; the only baptism known to Nicodemus was that of proselytism, which had been long practised by the Jews, and was now practised both by John and Jesus; but are the advocates of baptismal regeneration prepared to say, that John's baptism was attended with a regenerating power? or that it was necessary to salvation? For our parts, without undervaluing any divine ordinance we are far from thinking either of the Christian Sacraments by any means absolutely essential to salvation, though certainly highly important in their proper place. So are there many things highly important to our health and comfort in the present life, which are by no means necessary to our existence.

Ver. 8. The wind bloweth.—Not only does the same word stand for both wind and spirit, in the Hebrew, but also in the Greek and Latin.—Where it listeth—i. e. chooseth.

Ver. 10. Art thou a master.—Campbell. "THE Teacher (didaskalos) of Israel," intimating, by the emphatic article in Greek, that he was eminent for learning and talent, as a teacher of religion.

Ver. 13. Which is in heaven.—Campbell. "Whose abode is heaven."

14 ¶ And [m] as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up:

15 That whosoever [n] believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

16 ¶ For [o] God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

17 For [p] God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

18 ¶ He [q] that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

19 And this is the condemnation, that light [r] is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

of speech, pretty similar to those used on this occasion by our Lord, and not unfrequent among the Rabbies, who considered the baptism of proselytes as a new birth. To this sort of language, therefore, it might be thought extraordinary that Nicodemus should be so much a stranger. I think, however, that our Lord's censure rather relates to his being so entirely unacquainted with that effusion of the Spirit which would take place under the Messiah, and which had been so clearly foretold by the prophets." Dr. Doddridge also doubts whether the metaphorical language of the new birth of proselytes was known at such an early age: but however that might be, Nicodemus was puzzled, as many Masters in Israel have since been, not at the term "born of water," which our Lord had not yet used, but at the notion of a second birth. He might have heard of the Pythagorean philosophy, and of the transmigration of souls, and might think that our Lord had some reference to such a notion; his mind was, however, evidently confused, and not less so when, in the next verse, Jesus spake of being "born of the spirit," of which he was capable of forming no idea, and therefore puts that first question in an ignorant man's catechism, (as an old writer calls it,) "How can these things be?" This language, however, clearly shows the miserable state of religious knowledge among the Jewish Rabbies, where all their study was spent on questions of no importance, and ritual services of no utility. We wish the case were not similar in any modern schools of learning. We venerate both literature and science; but we could name some schools of high fame, where, not many years since, the state of religious knowledge was inferior to what it now is in many Sunday schools. O why will men learn every thing, or any thing, in preference to the "one thing needful?"

But we must proceed with our Lord's discourse. "We teach what we do know," which seems to include a strong, though tacit reflection on Nicodemus and his brethren, who taught without knowing what they ought to teach: "and we testify that we have seen;" intimating that none were qualified to teach divine truths, but those who had in themselves the witness of their reality. "The deep mysteries of godliness, (says Bishop Hall,) which, to the great clerks of the world, are as a book clasped and sealed up, lie open before him, [the pious and devout man,] fair and legible; and while those book-men know whom they have heard of, he knows in whom he hath believed."

Our Lord proceeds farther to instruct this learned man in the principles of the gospel of his kingdom. "If (says he) I have told you earthly things"—the simplest truths of religion—"and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" that is, of things far more sublime. "No man hath ascended up into heaven," to search into the deep and mysterious things of God, "but he who came down from heaven, even the Son of man, who," in reference to his divine nature, "is" still "in heaven," and whose proper residence is there. That Jesus Christ 'came down from heaven," is, indeed, repeatedly asserted, both by himself and his apostles. "He that cometh from above, is above (or over) all." Chap. vi. 38, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will," &c. St. Paul also describes the second Adam as "the Lord from heaven;" (1 Cor. xv. 47;) and many similar expressions occur in the New Testament, which prove the divine pre-existence of our Saviour.

But to return to the case of Nicodemus: our Lord having explained to him his divine origin, goes on to state the errand of mercy on which he came down from heaven, namely, to offer his life upon the cross, as an atonement for the sins of men. This he does, first in figurative language, in allusion to the brazen serpent—"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." The typical allusion has been already considered in our exposition of Numbers xxi. 8, 9, where the history occurs. The grand doctrine of redemption is then thus stated: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The type explains by what means this should be effected. As the serpent was raised up on high to the view of Israel, so must the Son of man be lifted up on the cross, that is, crucified; and thus become the standard of salvation: by these means, eventually, all nations shall be drawn unto him, that is, to believe on him; as he says, chap. xii. 32: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Though these verses contain no difficulty to explain, they contain a volume of important truth for enlargement, did our room permit; but we must confine ourselves to two or three brief remarks. 1. Our salvation originates in the pure love of God. To imagine that we have any merits to claim that love, is alike absurd and impious. 2. The only meritorious cause of our salvation, is the voluntary atonement of God's only begotten Son: "Christ once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God:" (1 Pet. iii. 18;) or, as it is here expressed, (ver. 17,) that the world through him might be saved." 3. Faith in the gospel is the only and all-sufficient instrument of our salvation. God sent his Son, that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." 4. "Everlasting life," or endless happiness in a future world, is the great end which God had in view in the gift of his Son; and which Christ had in view in dying for us on the cross. 5. Nothing can prevent this most desirable issue, but our own obstinate unbelief. It is true, that man is miserably fallen through sin, and can by no means save himself: but God hath provided "a Saviour, and a great one;" and nothing is required of us, but to receive freely the salvation which he has freely provided.

But it may be asked, How is it, then, that all men are not saved? "This is the condemnation"—that is, the true cause of it—"that light is come into the world, (for Christ is the true light, chap. i. 9,) but men [have] loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds [were] evil." Infidelity, it has often been remarked, is rather a disease of the heart than of the head. Men easily disbelieve what they wish not to be true. When the light offends our eyes, we naturally close them, at least partially; we will see no more than is agreeable. And so is it also with our mental eyes: the holy, mortifying truths of the gospel pain us, and we will not see them.

Ver. 16. For God so loved, &c.—Mr. Nott, missionary in the South sea Islands, was on one occasion reading a portion of the Gospel of John to a number of the natives. When he had finished the sixteenth verse of the third chapter, a native, who had listened with avidity and joy to the words, interrupted him, and said, "What words were those you read? What sounds were those I heard? Let me hear those words again?" Mr. Nott read again the verse, "God so loved," &c., when the native rose from his seat, and said, "Is that true? Can that be true? God love the world, when the world not love him. God so love the world, as to give his Son to die, that man might not die. Can that be true?" Mr. Nott again read the verse, "God so loved the world," &c. told him it was true, and that it was the message God had sent to them, and that whosoever believed in him, would not perish, but be happy after death. The overwhelming feelings of the wondering native were too powerful for expression or restraint. He burst into tears, and as these chased each other down his countenance, he retired to meditate in private on the amazing love of God, which had that day touched his soul; and there is every reason to believe he was afterwards raised to share the peace and happiness resulting from the love of God shed abroad in his heart.

Ver. 20. For every one that doeth evil.—The meaning of which is—wicked men hate and reject God's truth, but good men love and receive it into their hearts, and rejoice in its purifying influence. If then we find that any system of doctrine is generally embraced by the wicked and rejected by the righteous, we have strong presumptive evidence that the system is false.

Ver. 21. He that doeth truth.—Doddridge, "practiseth." See chap. vii. 17. ——Wrought in God—i. e. in the strength of God, or by divine assistance But Campbell and others render it, "Wrought according to God," or accord ing to the divine will.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Christ talketh with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth himself unto her. 27 His disciples marvel. 31 He declareth to them his zeal to God's glory. 39 Many Samaritans believe on him. 43 He departeth into Galilee, and healeth the ruler's son that was sick at Capernaum.

WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and [a] baptized more disciples than John,

2 (Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples,)

3 He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee.

4 And he must needs [b] go through Samaria.

5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave [c] to his son Joseph.

6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour.

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink.

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings [d] with the Samaritans.

10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift [e] of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest

John's mission, and his testimony to that of Christ. (See on chap. i. 19, &c.; also on Matt. iii. and Luke iii.) In what we add, it will be our study to avoid all unnecessary repetition. What the particular question agitated between John's disciples and the Jews was, we are not informed, but judging from the context, it might probably regard the different claims of their respective masters; the disciples of John being not so willing as their master to yield the pre-eminence to Jesus. John appeals to them, that he never assumed any thing like equality, but on all occasions sunk into the back ground, while he proclaimed the honours of his Master; and, therefore, when he found his popularity increase, and his own decline, instead of complaining, as they seem disposed to do, he not only acquiesces, but rejoices in it. Like a faithful bride-man, or friend of the bridegroom, instead of envying, he participates in the bridegroom's joy.—"He must increase, (said he,) but I must decrease." So the moon modestly withdraws before the rising sun. But he withdraws not till he has again and again borne witness to Christ's superior glory. "He that is of the earth," as he (John) was, "is earthly, and speaketh of the earth," and earthly things: "He that cometh from heaven is above (or over) all;" and, as it is elsewhere expressed, "God blessed for ever." (Rom. ix. 5.)

Our great business with this Saviour is cordially to receive him; for, in rejecting him, we forfeit our own salvation. Salvation is not proposed to us as a matter of option, that we may take or leave it; for we reject it at our peril. The fatal unbelief here and elsewhere spoken of, is not merely that want of faith which may arise from ignorance, or a deficiency of evidence, but a positive rejection of the divine testimony, arising from an aversion to receive it; and therefore the wrath of God, originally denounced against sin, remaineth, or 'abideth," on all such persons.

On the other hand, those who submit to, and receive Christ as their Saviour, thereby set their seal, as it were, to the truth of divine revelation, and to the covenant of divine mercy. "Truth, Lord,"—thy servant is a dog—"but the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table." (Matt. xv. 27.)

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—15. Christ's conversation with the woman of Samaria.—On this very interesting narrative we offer the following observations, acknowledging such as have been borrowed.—1. "When the holy Jesus, (says Bishop Taylor,) perceiving it unsafe to be at Jerusalem, returned to Galilee, where the largest scene of his prophetical office was to be represented, he journeyed on foot through Samaria; and, being weary and faint, hungry and thirsty, he sat down by a well, and begged water of a Samaritan woman that was a sinner, who at first refused him, with some incivility of language. But he, instead of returning anger and passion to her rudeness, which was commenced upon the interest of a mistaken religion, preached the coming of Messias to her, unlocked the secrets of her heart, and let in his grace; and made a fountain of living water to spring up in her soul, to extinguish the impure flames of lust."

2. We observe the wisdom and kindness of God, in producing good out of evil. The enmity of the Jews, in driving Jesus out of Judea, was the means of sending Christ and his Gospel to the Samaritans. So, oftentimes, when Ministers of the Gospel have been persecuted in one city, and they have fled to another, the Gospel has been heard with eagerness, and has produced the happiest effects.

3. We observe the liberality of Jesus in freely conversing with this woman, though he knew that she was a Samaritan and a sinner, with whom neither priest nor Pharisee would have deigned to speak. Even the woman herself seems to have been astonished at this circumstance, for the Jews, in the true spirit of sectarianism, would have no dealings with the Samaritans, nor, in fact, the Samaritans with the Jews, for they were equally bigoted and hostile. Alas! that men, whom God hath made of the same flesh and blood—men on whom he daily causes his sun to rise and his rain to fall—men, involved in the same just condemnation, and dependent on the same revelation of mercy—alas! that such men, that any man, should dare to say to his fellow-man, "Stand by, for I am holier than thou!"

4. We observe the important subject of conversation. Jesus had, indeed, asked for water, and was probably much oppressed with thirst; but he waves his request, and directs her to the consideration of her own wants. "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water." The Lord Jesus wastes not his time in general and trifling conversation; but applies directly to one of the great topics of the gospel, the necessity of divine influences: "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." How so? That water "shall be in him a well of water, springing up unto eternal life." Little indeed did this woman think (as is observed by the Prelate just quoted) of the dignity of him who talked with her—That "he that sat gular—'John's disciples had a dispute with a Jew,' or 'one of the Jews.' ——About purifying.—i. e. about baptism, and other ablutions. So also Doddridge.

Ver. 29. He that hath the bride, &c.—Doddridge, "It is the bridegroom that hath the bride."

Ver. 31. He that cometh from above is above.—Dr. Smith, "over" all.——He that cometh from heaven is above, or "over" all.

Ver. 36. He that believeth not.—Doddridge, "He that is disobedient." Campbell, "He that rejecteth." The word here used (apeithon) is not a mere negative, implying a simple want of faith, but a positive disbelief." "It signifies (says the judicious Leigh) the want of obedience of faith."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. More disciples than John.—Namely, at this period, when John's popularity was on the decline, and that of Jesus on the advance. See chap. iii. 30.

Ver. 2. Jesus himself baptized not.—So Paul baptized very few, being sent on the higher errand, that of preaching the gospel. 1 Cor. i. 13—17.

Ver. 4. He must needs go through Samaria.—We need not as some have done, refer for the reason of this to the divine decrees, for a single glance at any map of Judea will show that this was the direct way, and only to be avoided, (as Doddridge remarks,) by a long and inconvenient circuit.

Ver. 5. Called Sychar.—The Jews gave this name in reproach, meaning the country of drunkards, as belonging to the tribe of Ephraim. See Isa. xxviii. 1.

Ver. 6. Now Jacob's well was there.—[Over Jacob's well, the Empress Helena is said to have built a church in the form of a cross, of which "nothing but a few foundations" remained in the time of Maundrell. He states that it is situated about one-third of an hour, or about a mile east of Naplosa, the ancient Sychar; and Buckingham says it is called Beer Samareea, or the Well of Samaria, and "stands at the commencement of the round vale which is thought to be the parcel of ground bought by Jacob, and which, like the narrow valley east of Nablous, is rich and fertile. The mouth of the well itself had an arched or vaulted building over it; and the only passage down to it at this moment is by a small hole in the roof." "It is," says Maundrell, "dug in the firm rock, and contains about three yards in diameter, and 35 in depth; five of which we found full of water."]—Bagster. Neither Buckingham nor D. E.

have asked of him, and he would have given thee living [f] water.

11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jesus answered and said unto him, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again:

14 But [g] whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give [h] him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him [i] a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

15 The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

17 The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband:

18 For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly.

19 The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive [j] that thou art a prophet.

20 Our fathers worshipped in this [k] mountain; and ye say, that in Jerusalem [l] is the place where men ought to worship.

21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me the hour cometh, when [m] ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

22 Ye worship [n] ye know not what: we know what we worship: for [o] salvation is of the Jews.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit [p] and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

24 God [q] is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.

25 The woman saith unto him, I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things.

26 Jesus saith unto her, [r] I that speak unto thee am he.

27 ¶ And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman, yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her?

28 The woman then left her water-pot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men,

29 Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?

upon the well had a throne above the cherubim. In his arms, who there rested himself, was the sanctuary of rest and peace, where wearied souls were to lay their heads, and dispose their cares, and there to turn them into joys, and gild their thorns with glory. That holy tongue, which was parched with heat, streamed forth rivulets of holy doctrine, which were to water all the world, to turn our deserts into paradise. And though he begged water at Jacob's well, yet Jacob drank at his. . . . . But because this well was deep, and the woman had nothing o draw with, and of herself could not fathom so great a depth, herefore she refused him; just as we do, when we refuse to give drink to a thirsty disciple. Christ comes in that humble manner of address, under the veil of poverty or contempt; and we cannot see Christ from under that robe, and we send him away without an alms; little considering, that when he begs of us an alms, in the instance of any of his poor relatives, he asks of us, but to give him occasion to give [us] a blessing."

5. But what is this living water of which our Saviour speaks? He has himself explained it in a subsequent discourse to the Jews, where, speaking of "rivers of living water," he says, "This spake he of the Spirit which they that believe on him should receive." (Chap. vii. 39.) Under this image two things are intended, instruction and consolation, both which are of the most satisfying nature. Those who are brought under the teachings of God's Holy Spirit will, in spiritual things, desire no other teacher: those who partake of his consolations, will say to all the riches and pleasures that the world gives, (as Job to his friends,) "Miserable comforters are ye all, and physicians of no value!" Thus they thirst no more on earth, and in heaven they cannot thirst.

> "Saviour! subdue our worldly thirst,
> Our love to vanity and dust:
> On us thy consolations pour,
> And we shall drink, and thirst no more."

Ver. 16—30. Jesus continues his conversation with the Samaritan woman.—Our Lord having thus gained the attention of this poor Samaritan, is now about to address her conscience. "Go (said he) and call thy husband." On this question M. Claude judiciously remarks: "Jesus Christ did not speak thus because he was ignorant what sort of a life this woman lived. He knew that, to speak properly, she had no husband. It was a word of trial; for the Lord said this to give her an opportunity of making a free confession, I have no husband. It was a word of kind reproof, for he intended to convince her of the sin in which she lived. It was a word of grace, for the censure tended to the woman's consolation. It was farther a word of wisdom, for our Lord intended to take occasion at this meeting to discover himself to her, and more clearly to convince her, that he had a perfect knowledge of the secrets of her life, as he presently proved, by saying, 'Thou hast well said, I have no husband; for thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband.'"

Thus she stands charged with adultery, which she endeavours artfully to evade by turning the conversation: "Sir," said she, "I perceive that thou art a prophet;" and then she proposes the question as to the right place for worship, whether in Samaria, or at Jerusalem. Our Lord avoids this now unimportant controversy, and tells her that the hour is fast approaching, when the service of God should not be confined either to this place or that; but when they who worship God, must "worship him in spirit and in truth." Here two very important points arrest our attention—the object and the nature of religious worship.

1. The object of worship, God, who is a spirit. Metaphysicians know, that matter itself, with which our senses are continually conversant, is not easy to be defined; much less is spirit, of which almost all we know is negative—it is immaterial. The excellent Charnock advises to endeavour to "Conceive of God as excellent, without any imperfection; a spirit without parts; great without quantity, perfect without quality, everywhere without place, powerful without members, understanding without ignorance, wise without reasoning, light without darkness; and when you have risen to the highest, conceive him yet infinitely above all you can conceive," &c. Nor is this a truth merely speculative; it is of the highest practical importance. If he be a spirit, a pure and perfect spirit, he cannot hold communion with carnal and polluted men, but through a Mediator. This leads us to consider,
